The manner in which the King had, in his ſpeech, mentioned Spain, and his ſaying, that he was perſuaded a Britiſh Parliament would inable him to reſent ſuch treatment, were plain intimations of his intention to declare war againſt that Crown. On the 17th of December, the King ſent a meſſage to the Commons to acquaint them, that all his endeavours, as well as thoſe of the King of France, to procure redreſs for the injuries done to his ſubjects by the King of Spain, to the unſpeakable detriment of their trade, or even to obtain a diſcontinuance of his unjuſt hoſtilities, having proved ineffectual, he had found it neceſſary to declare war againſt Spain.

After the reading of this meſſage, it was moved for an addreſs to aſſure the King, that they would with the greateſt chearfulneſs, and the utmoſt vigour, aſſiſt and ſupport him in the war, till Spain was reduced to accept of reaſonable terms of peace, and agree to ſuch conditions of trade and commerce as the Nation was juſtly entitled to by their ſeveral treaties. Mr. Shippen and ſome others excepted againſt the motion, or againſt ſome expreſſions in it, which occaſioned a warm debate. They alledged, they did not ſee the neceſſity of declaring war againſt Spain, but were rather inclined to believe, the grievances complained of by the Merchants might be amicably redreſſed. Mr. Stanhope aſſured the Houſe, that he had preſented, at leaſt, five and twenty memorials to the Court of Spain upon that ſubject without any ſucceſs. Mr. Methuen endeavoured to account for the dilatorineſs of the Court of Madrid in the diſpatch of commercial affairs, occaſioned by the different regulations in the ſeveral provinces and ports of Spain; which might be the reaſon why the grievances had not been redreſſed ſo ſoon as might have been expected. It was alſo ſuggeſted, that the Miniſters had ſhewn no great concern for the trade and intereſt of the Nation, ſince it appeared, by the anſwer from a Secretary of State to the Marquiſs de Monteleone's letter, that they would have paſſed by the violations of the treaties of Commerce, provided Spain had accepted the terms of the Quadruple Alliance; and that his Majeſty did not ſeek to aggrandize himſelf by any new acquiſition, but was rather inclined to ſacrifice ſomething of his own, to procure the general quiet and tranquillity: That nobody could yet tell how far that ſacrifice was to extend; but certainly it was a very uncommon piece of condeſcenſion (2). Mr. Horatio Walpole made alſo a long ſpeech, wherein he found fault with the treaty of Quadruple Alliance, particularly as to the diſpoſition of Sicily, in favour of the Emperor, which was a breach of the treaty of Utrecht. Mr. Walpole, his brother, likewiſe exclaimed againſt the injuſtice of attacking the Spaniſh fleet before a declaration of war. They were anſwered by Mr. Craggs, and Sir Joſeph Jekyll cloſed the debate with ſaying: 'That ſome weeks before, when this affair was firſt mentioned in the Houſe, he was ſhy of giving his opinion, becauſe he had not then examined the ſeveral ſteps that had been taken in it; but that now he was fully convinced, that, if there was any injuſtice, it was on the ſide of the King of Spain; and that the conduct of his Majeſty and his Miniſters was entirely agreeable to the law of Nations, and the rules of Juſtice and Equity. Was it juſt, added he, in the King of Spain to attack the Emperor's Dominions (Sardinia) while he was engaged in a war with the Turks, without any declaration of war? Was it juſt in the ſame Prince to invade the Dominions of one of our Allies, the King of Sicily, without the leaſt provocation? And was it not juſt in his Majeſty to vindicate the faith of his treaties, and to defend and protect the trade of his ſubjects, which had been violently oppreſſed?' After theſe ſpeeches, the addreſs was carried by a majority of a hundred and ſeventy-eight againſt a hundred and ſeven, and preſented the next day. 1718.

Earl Stanhope brought the ſame meſſage to the Houſe of Peers, and, the like addreſs being moved for, it was carried without a diviſion.

The Declaration of war was publiſhed with the uſual ſolemnities, but not with the ſame acclamations as when war was proclaimed againſt France in the two former Reigns. The Declaration was well drawn, and began with an artful turn, which ſeemed to intimate as if the action of Syracuſa had been a conſequence of the ill ſucceſs of the Earl of Stanhope's Negotiations at Madrid. For after the King had mentioned his being guarantee of the neutrality of Italy, his engagement to defend the Emperor's Dominions, and the King of Spain's invaſion of Sardinia: 'We did ſend (ſays he) our fleet into the Mediterranean this laſt ſummer, with a full and earneſt intention to make uſe of its appearance there for ſetting on foot Negotiations of peace towards recon-

(1) Sir William Thompſon having urged againſt the Schiſm-Bill, that it deprived parents of their natural right of educating their children as they pleaſed, Mr. Shippen anſwered, 'It was ſomewhat ſtrange to ſee ſo able a Lawyer inconſiſtent with himſelf: For, when the twelve Judges were conſulted in a caſe relating to a great family, he was of the opinion of ten of them, that children may be taken from their parents, and educated as the good of the Nation required.' To this Sir William readily replied, 'That, as he never was conſulted, ſo had he never declared his thoughts, in that nice caſe hinted by that Gentleman, and therefore he could not with any colour of juſtice be ſaid to have changed his opinion: But that the Member who taxed him with it, and who thereby declared againſt the opinion of the ten Judges, if he would be conſiſtent with himſelf, muſt now be for the bill that repeals the Schiſm Act, which reſtored parents to their natural right.'

The Lord Guernſey propoſed the inſerting a clauſe, that any perſon, when he came to take the Abjuration Oath, in order to his qualification, ſhould acknowledge, that the Old and New Teſtament were given by Divine Inſpiration, and profeſs his belief of the ever-bleſſed Trinity. But this motion was rejected. Pr. H. C.

It was obſerved that the Archbiſhop Wake had proteſted againſt paſſing the very bill, the repeal of which he now oppoſed, as did alſo the Earl of Nottingham, the Duke of Devonſhire, and ſome others.

(2) By the Sacrifice was meant the Ceſſion of Gibraltar and Port-Mahon, which, it was reported, the Regent of France had offered to the King of Spain, in caſe he would accede to the Quadruple Alliance.

1718. reconciling the parties engaged in war, and thereby preventing the many calamities that muſt enſue therefrom. And whereas we did likewiſe, to teſtify our moſt ſincere inclinations to peace, ſend our right truſty and right well beloved Couſin and Councillor James, Earl Stanhope, one of our principal Secretaries of State, to Madrid, with full power and commiſſion to offer our moſt hearty endeavours for re-eſtabliſhing the quiet of Europe, and for cultivating and improving the friendſhip of the King of Spain. And whereas, notwithſtanding all the inſtances we could poſſibly make, all the tenders of amity and affection we could uſe, our Plenipotentiary returned without the leaſt hopes of peaceable diſpoſitions in the Court of Spain, and our Admiral in the Mediterranean, finding alſo no tendency to amicable meaſures, was obliged to aſſiſt and protect the Emperor's Dominions by force, which were in imminent danger by the further invaſion of the Kingdom of Sicily, and by the great fleets and armies which the King of Spain had in thoſe parts.'

To ſhew that the war was not purely on the Emperor's account, the Declaration ſet forth the ſeizing of the effects and perſons of the Engliſh, in violation of treaties and antient privileges; and then touched upon the true motives of the war, the diſabling the King of Spain to unite the Crowns of France and Spain, or to aſſiſt the Pretender. Thoſe were juſt motives, which though perſonal to King George, and the Duke of Orleans, yet were of the utmoſt concern to the Nations they governed.

Intrigues of Spain.

Cardinal Alberoni was not idle whilſt meaſures were taken to cruſh him. He raiſed troops, fitted out ſhips, put the coaſts in a poſture of defence, ſent ſuccours to Sicily, and provided for the ſafety of Sardinia. But, what efforts ſoever Spain might make, he was ſenſible of the impoſſibility to reſiſt the three moſt powerful States of Europe combined againſt him. To efforts therefore he joined plots and intrigues to ſupport his undertakings. He began with the Duke of Orleans, believing, if he could remove him, the forces of France would be at his diſpoſal, at leaſt they would not be employed againſt him, and King George, deprived of ſo powerful an Ally, would be obliged to moderate his zeal for the Emperor's intereſts.

Alberoni's practices diſcovered in France.

The plot was eaſy to be laid, and was ſo well conducted, that the ſucceſs ſeemed infallible. France abounded with male-contents, and the Regent had many enemies who either wiſhed his removal, or the execution of the late King's will. Theſe male-contents, in order to be ſupported, had recourſe to the Spaniſh Court, where the reſentment againſt the Duke of Orleans procured them a favourable hearing. The Prince de Cellamare, the Spaniſh Ambaſſador at Paris, was ordered to treat with them. The plot was ſoon formed; Biſhops, Magiſtrates, Nobles, Prieſts, Monks, Officers, and Governors, were ready for the undertaking, and were numbered among the Conſpirators. The project was to ſeize the Regent in ſome party of pleaſure, which he frequently made about Paris with his Miſtreſſes; the King's perſon was at the ſame time to be ſecured, and proper orders were to be iſſued to the Governors of the Provinces and Towns to aſſemble the Parliaments, for ſettling the Government, whilſt the States of the Kingdom ſhould meet, and make a final determination of matters. Many papers were kept in a readineſs to juſtify theſe undertakings, and incourage the people to ſupport them. 1718.

The mines were charged and ready to ſpring, when the affair was diſcovered. The firſt advice came from King George, who warned the Regent of ſome attempt contriving againſt his Perſon and Government. This notice, though general only, was of great uſe. The Duke of Orleans and the Abbot du Bois were very vigilant. Several perſons were ſuſpected, particularly the Duke and Ducheſs of Maine, and the Spaniſh Ambaſſador, all whom were narrowly watched, till the whole affair was diſcovered by the following accident. The Prince de Cellamare, for the greater ſafety, entruſted his diſpatches to the Abbot de Portocarrero, nephew of the Cardinal of that name, and to one of the ſons of the Marquiſs de Monteleone. Theſe Gentlemen (with only Sir Joſeph Hodges who paſſed for an Engliſh Lord) ſet out from Paris in a Poſt-chaiſe. They had not gone above two leagues before the chaiſe broke down in a ſlough. The poſtillion obſerved, the Abbot ſhewed much more concern for his portmanteau than for himſelf, and heard him ſay, he would not have loſt it for a hundred thouſand piſtoles. The poſtillion, having conducted them to the firſt ſtage, returned to Paris, and gave immediate notice to the Government, of what he had ſeen and heard. Upon which they were purſued and overtaken at Poictiers. Their perſons were ſeized, and the portmanteau ſent to Paris, wherein were found two letters which plainly diſcovered the plot. The Prince de Cellamare was put under a guard, and his papers were ſealed up with his and the Regent's ſeals, to be delivered to the perſons the King of Spain ſhould ſend to receive them. A few days after the Prince was conducted to the frontiers of the Kingdom. The Marquiſs de Pampadour and ſeveral other perſons of note were impriſoned. The Duke of Maine was ſent priſoner to the Citadel of Dourlens in Picardy, and the Ducheſs to the Caſtle of Dijon in Burgundy. The Cardinal de Polignac was ordered to his Abby of Auchin, that place being allowed him for his priſon.

On the 29th of December, war was declared at Paris againſt Spain. The Declaration was accompanied with a long manifeſto, ſhewing the cauſes of rupture between France and Spain, and concluding with the following paragraph, in relation to Cardinal Alberoni's plot: 'We now ſee with horror what it was that made the Miniſter of Spain inacceſſible to all projects of peace. He would thereby have ſeen all the odious plots which he formed againſt us prove abortive: He would have loſt all hopes of laying this Kingdom deſolate, of raiſing up France againſt France, of having the management of Rebels among all the orders of State, of kindling a civil war in the boſom of our Provinces; and, in fine, of becoming to us the ſcourge of Heaven, by putting in execution thoſe ſeditious projects, and ſpringing that mine which was, according to the words of the Ambaſſador's letter, to ſerve as a prelude to the Conflagration. What a recompence is this to France, for the treaſures and blood of which ſhe has been ſo profuſe for the ſake of Spain!'

To ſupport the reaſons alledged in the manifeſto, armaments were prepared in France and England. The beginning of January, an army of of thirty-ſix thouſand men were on the march towards Spain. Ships of war were fitted out for ſeveral expeditions. The barrenneſs of the Country where the war was to be carried occaſioned great expences, eſpecially for proviſions. The Duke of Orleans was at ſome loſs for a General: Marſhal Villars, to whom he offered the command, refuſed it, affirming he would never draw his ſword againſt the Houſe of Bourbon, but the Duke of Berwick, not being ſo ſcrupulous, accepted of the command.

Cardinal Alberoni's intrigues were not confined to France, he had formed the ſame deſigns againſt King George. The Pretender was treated with, who readily came into the Cardinal's views to annoy his enemy. The Duke of Ormond repaired to Spain the latter end of the year, and meaſures were taken to ſtir up their friends in Great-Britain, and engage them to ſupport the deſigns of Spain.

The Pope was doubtleſs in the ſecret, and his affection for the Chevalier de St. George hindered him from conſenting, that he ſhould be expoſed, till it was ſeen what ſucceſs the firſt attempt might have. He ſuffered him, however, to go into Spain. The Pretender was watched, and there was need of addreſs to eſcape the vigilance of the Germans, who were ſpread over the Eccleſiaſtical State. He had lately left Urbino, where he reſided, and was come to live at Rome. He went from thence on a ſudden, and cauſed it to be reported, that he was gone to Bologna. He ſent thither the Earls of Mar and Perth, with one Paterſon, who was to paſs for their Maſter. This artifice was attended with the expected ſucceſs: All three were arreſted at Vogbera by the Imperialiſts, but preſently after releaſed. As for the Pretender, he came to Nettuno without any accident, and embarked for Cagliari, from whence he came to Roſes in Catalonia, the beginning of March.

He was magnificently received at Madrid, where he entered in one of the King's coaches, attended by the Guards, and was conducted to the palace of Buen-retiro. On the morrow he was viſited by the King, the Queen, the Prince of Aſturias, and the Great Officers of the Crown, and complimented by them as King of Great-Britain. Upon his arrival the ſquadron, which had been fitting out ſome time for this expedition, ſailed from Cadiz towards England, conſiſting of ten men war and tranſport-ſhips, with ſix thouſand regular troops on board, moſtly Iriſh, with arms for ten or twelve thouſand men. The Duke of Ormond was the conductor of this undertaking, with the title of Captain-General of the King of Spain: He was to publiſh, in the proper places, a declaration in that King's name, wherein he ſaid, that for many very good reaſons he had reſolved to ſend part of his land and ſea-forces into England and Scotland, to ſerve as auxiliaries to King James: What had confirmed him in his reſolution, was the certain advices he had received, that many of the two Nations, notwithſtanding their ſtrong inclination to acknowledge that Prince for their Sovereign, durſt not openly declare for him, becauſe they did not ſee him ſupported by any of the States of Europe, who had either power or will to aſſiſt them: That, to remove this difficulty, and others that might ariſe, he declared he was determined to uſe all his power for the reſtoration of a Prince, in a Country belonging to him by undeniable right: That he hoped Providence would favour ſo juſt a cauſe; but, that the fear of ill ſucceſs might not hinder any perſon from declaring readily for him, he promiſed a ſecure retreat in his Dominions, to all that ſhould join him, and, in caſe they were forced to leave their Country, he declared, that every ſea or land Officer ſhould have the ſame rank as he enjoyed in Great-Britain, and the ſoldiers ſhould be received and treated like his own. 1718-19.

Theſe preparations had not been ſo ſecret, but the King had received timely notice to take the neceſſary precautions: The Duke of Orleans, in return for the ſame favour, had acquainted him with all he could diſcover. A proclamation was publiſhed againſt the Duke of Ormond, and the other Lords that were with him, with a reward of 5000 l. for ſeizing the Duke, and of 1000 l. for each of the reſt, and of 500 l. for every Gentleman.

Preparations againſt it.

As the rumour of the Invaſion increaſed, ſome forces were ordered into the North and into the Weſt of England: The States-General had notice to have two thouſand men ready to tranſport into England when occaſion required; and were, at the ſame time, deſired not to ſuffer the ſuſpicious embarkations of ammunition and men that were making at Amſterdam, which they agreed to, notwithſtanding the endeavours of the Spaniſh Miniſters to the contrary. Above all, the naval armament againſt the Spaniſh ſquadron was haſtened; and, upon the repeated advices of the Regent, the King came to the Houſe of Peers, and ſaid, That he had given orders to the Lord-Chancellor to declare to both Houſes a matter of the greateſt importance. Upon this the Lord-Chancellor read the following ſpeech:

The King acquaints the Parliament with the intended Invaſion.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

" HAVING received from our good Brother and Ally, the moſt Chriſtian King, " repeated advices, that an Invaſion will ſuddenly be attempted from Spain againſt my " Dominions, in favour of the Pretender to " my Crown, I have judged it convenient to " make you acquainted with it, and ſhall, on " my part, take all the neceſſary meaſures to defeat the deſigns of our enemies.

Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons,

" This attempt, if it proceed, muſt engage " me in ſome farther expences by ſea and land " than proviſion has been made for. I muſt " therefore recommend it to you, that I be in- " abled in ſuch manner, as you ſhall judge con- " venient, to make the neceſſary diſpoſitions for " our ſecurity; and you may depend upon it, " that I ſhall upon this, and all other occaſions, " have as much regard to the eaſe of my peo- " ple, as ſhall be conſiſtent with their ſafety.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

" The many proofs, I have had of the affecti- " on and loyalty of this Parliament, leave me " no room to doubt of your ſteady and vigorous " perſeverance in ſupport of my Perſon and Go- " vernment upon this occaſion."

This ſpeech had all the effect the King could expect or deſire. Both Houſes aſſured him of their 1718-19. their ſupport; and the Commons deſired him to augment his forces by ſea and land, in ſuch manner as he ſhould think fit, promiſing to make good any increaſe of expence on that account. With theſe aſſurances of the Parliament, the King had the ſatisfaction to ſee his Allies exert their zeal in his defence. The States ſent over the two thouſand men; and the Marquiſs de Prié, Governor of the Auſtrian Netherlands, ſix battalions of Imperialiſts. The Duke of Orleans offered no leſs than twenty battalions, but it was not thought proper to accept his offer.

The deſign of the Spaniards defeated.

Theſe precautions taken by the King were very juſt, but, as it happened, they proved needleſs. The Spaniſh fleet came with a fair wind as far as Cape Finiſtere, when a violent ſtorm aroſe, which laſted two days and two nights. The fleet was entirely diſperſed, and diſabled from purſuing their courſe. The Admiral's ſhip of ſixty-four guns, having loſt all her maſts, made for the coaſt of Spain, as did all the reſt in the beſt manner they could. By this ſtorm, the men and horſes were for the moſt part rendered unſerviceable.

Some Spaniards land in Scotland,

Though the Spaniſh ſquadron miſcarried, two frigates arrived at Kintail in Scotland. Theſe frigates ſailed from Port-Paſſage the latter end of February, and came to Kintail the 16th of April, without having ſeen any of the Spaniſh fleet in their way. They brought with them the Earls of Seaforth and Mariſchal, and the Marquiſs of Tullibardine, with three hundred and ſeven Spaniards, being a detachment of twelve men in a company of Don Pedro de Caſtro's regiment of foot, commanded by a Lieutenant-Colonel, with ſix Captains, ſix Lieutenants, and as many Enſigns. They brought alſo arms for two thouſand men. The Lieutenant-Colonel was aſſured there were ten thouſand men in arms ready to join him, but, very few appearing, he kept the frigates two days, reſolving to go off again, but he was at laſt prevailed with to let them ſail. The two Earls and the Marquiſs, who had ventured themſelves with ſo ſmall a force, went with the Spaniards and joined the Rebels. After this junction, they poſſeſſed themſelves of Donan-Caſtle, and put in it a garriſon of fifty men; but Captain Boyle, in the Worceſter, and ſome other ſhips came before the place, and took the garriſon priſoners. In the mean time, General Wightman was ordered by the Lord Carpenter, to march with the forces under his command in queſt of the Rebels. He marched from Inverneſs the beginning of June, and, having halted one day at the head of Lochneſs, came up with them at a place called the paſs of Glenſhill, which they gave out they were reſolved to defend; but, upon the approach of the King's troops, they immediately deſerted it, and retired to another paſs called Strachell, where they were more advantageouſly poſted. The General, having viewed their ſituation, made the following diſpoſition for the attack: On the right were poſted all the Grenadiers under the command of Major Milburn, being about a hundred and fifty in number, who were ſuſtained by Mountague's regiment, commanded by Lieutenant-Colonel Laurence, and a detachment of fifty men commanded by Colonel Harriſon; the reſt of the regiment being in garriſon at Inverlochy. Theſe were ſupported by Haſſel's Dutch regiment, and four companies out of Amerongen's. This wing had fifty-ſix of Lord Strathnaver's men in the flank, under the command of Enſign Mackay; and the whole wing was commanded by Colonel Clayton, who acted as Brigadier upon this occaſion. The left wing conſiſted of Clayton's regiment, commanded by Lieutenant-Colonel Reading, and had on the flank about fourſcore men of the Monroes, under the command of Mr. Monroe of Calcairn. The Dragoons, which were a hundred and twenty in number, commanded by Major Robertſon, and had made their march from Inverneſs without the loſs of a ſingle horſe, or the leaſt inconvenience, were ordered to keep the road, having four cohorns placed in their front. The Major-General himſelf was poſted in the centre, where every one had free acceſs to him for orders.

and defeated by General Wightman. June 10.

The Rebels forces conſiſted of one thouſand ſix hundred and forty Highlanders, beſides three hundred Spaniards, and a body of five hundred Highlanders, who were poſted on a hill, in order to make themſelves maſters of the baggage of the King's troops, it being always one of their chief aims. From this diſpoſition it is evident, that the King's forces actually engaged did not exceed eight hundred and fifty men, beſides the one hundred and twenty Dragoons, and one hundred and thirty-ſix Highlanders. The left wing was ordered to begin the attack; and the Rebels always, as they had fired their muſkets, ſkipping off, and never venturing to come to a cloſe engagement, were driven from rock to rock, the King's forces chaſing them above three hours, till they gained the top of the hill, where the Rebels were immediately diſperſed. The Earl of Seaforth and Lord George Murray were wounded. There were twenty-one men killed, and one hundred and twenty-one wounded, Officers included, of the King's troops, who lay on their arms all night, in order to bring off the wounded; and marched the next morning to Glenſhill, where about two in the afternoon the Spaniards ſurrendered themſelves priſoners at diſcretion, and delivered up all their arms and ammunition. Their Commander ſaid, the Earl of Seaforth and all the reſt were ſhifting for themſelves, and believed, they would endeavour to get off as ſoon as poſſible at the ſea-port towns, where they could hope to have friends to let them eſcape. General Wightman acquainted the Lord Carpenter, that he had taken two hundred and ſeventy-four Spaniards priſoners, and was making a tour through the difficult parts of Seaforth's Country, to terrify the guilty, and preſerve the well affected, and that he had utterly diſperſed the Rebels, the Chiefs of whom, Seaforth, Tullibardine, Mariſchal, and others, were gone off to the Lewis or Orkney Iſlands. Thus ended Cardinal Alberoni's enterprize upon Great-Britain (1).

When

(1) A marriage was this year agreed upon for the Pretender, with a Daughter of Prince Sobieski, eldeſt Son of John Sobieski King of Poland, who had gained ſo much honour by raiſing the ſiege of Vienna. But the Court of Vienna thought fit to intereſt itſelf ſo much in preventing this intended marriage, that the Princeſs was ſtopped in paſſing through Tirol into Italy, and carried into confinement at Inſpruck. Great application

1718-19. Peer-bill. H. C. H. L.

When the King ſent the meſſage to both Houſes about the Spaniſh Invaſion, the Lords were debating upon the famous Peerage bill. This bill, by which the number of Peers was to be limited, is ſaid to have been chiefly intended to put a reſtraint on the Prince of Wales, when his Succeſſion ſhould take place, from whom the preſent Miniſtry could expect but little favour. Be this as it will, the Whigs had exclaimed againſt the numerous promotion of Peers by Queen Anne, particularly the creation of twelve Peers at once, in order to gain a ſuperiority in the Houſe of Lords, and, to prevent the like for the future, it was reſolved to bring in a bill to fix the number of Peers (1). The perſon by whom this bill was moved for, was the Duke of Somerſet, who, on the laſt day of February, repreſented in the Houſe of Lords, that, the number of Peers being of late years very much increaſed, eſpecially ſince the Union of the two Kingdoms, it ſeemed abſolutely neceſſary to fix the ſame, both to preſerve the dignity of the Peerage, and to prevent the inconveniencies, that may attend the creation of a great number of Peers to ſerve a preſent purpoſe; of which they had a remarkable inſtance in the late Reign. He therefore made a motion for the bringing in a bill to ſettle and limit the Peerage in ſuch a manner, that the number of Engliſh Peers ſhould not be inlarged beyond ſix above the preſent number, which upon failure of male iſſue might be ſupplied by new creations; and that, inſtead of the ſixteen elective Peers, twenty-five ſhould be made hereditary on the part of Scotland, whoſe number upon failure of heirs male ſhould be ſupplied by ſome other Scots Peer. The Duke of Argyle (who was now Lord Steward of the Houſhold) ſeconded this motion, which was alſo ſupported by the Earls of Sunderland and Carliſle, before they came to any reſolution; and thereupon his Lordſhip, the Earl of Oxford, excepted againſt it, and ſaid, 'as it tended to take away the brighteſt gem from the Crown, it was matter of wonder to ſee it ſupported by thoſe, who, by the great employments they enjoyed, ſeemed under the ſtricteſt obligation to take care of the Royal Prerogative. That therefore there muſt be a ſecret meaning in this motion; but for his own part, though he expected nothing from the Crown, yet he would never give his vote for lopping off ſo valuable a branch of the prerogative, becauſe this would put it out of the power of the Crown to reward merit and virtuous actions.' To this the Earl of Sunderland anſwered, 'that, though the number of Peers were limited, yet the Crown ſhould ſtill be the fountain of honour, and preſerve its prerogative of creating new Peers upon the extinction of old titles for want of male iſſue, which happened frequently; and that thoſe extinctions would give the Prince on the Throne ſufficient opportunities to beſtow honours upon Commoners of diſtinguiſhing merit and abilities.' The debate being adjourned to the 2d of March, upon that day, Earl Stanhope delivered to a full Houſe the following meſſage from the King:

1718-19.

George R.

'His Majeſty being informed, that the Houſe of Peers have under conſideration the ſtate of the Peerage of Great-Britain, is graciouſly pleaſed to acquaint this Houſe, that he has ſo much at plication was made to the Emperor for her releaſe; but he continued inflexible, and ſeemed the more to extend his authority in this affair, as the whole Family of Sobieski lay under great and uncommon obligations to him, on account of penſions and conſiderable allowances, which they received from him, in acknowledgment of the great ſervices of the late King of Poland to the Empire. Prince James Sobieski, Father of this young Princeſs, held his ſubſiſtance chiefly at the Emperor's pleaſure. On this occaſion he went therefore to Vienna, to make his ſubmiſſion to the Emperor, whom he underſtood to be highly diſpleaſed with him; but his Imperial Majeſty would be no ways reconciled to him, or agree to a continuance of his cuſtomary allowance upon any other terms, but his intirely breaking off the match.

Whilſt interceſſion was making for her liberty, the Princeſs Sobieski eſcaped from her confinement in the beginning of May, in man's cloaths, and, repairing to Bologna, was there married by proxy to the Pretender, then in Spain. A few days after ſhe went to Rome, where ſhe was very kindly entertained by the Pope and ſome of the Cardinals. She ſeemed impatient to be conducted to her Spouſe; but the hazard of the preſent conjuncture, and the uncertainty of his reſidence, till his projects were brought to ſome criſis, made the Pope continue her under his care at Rome. No other opportunity of correſpondence could therefore be obtained but by letters; and, about the latter end of June, an account was brought to England of one Maſſy, who was ſent from Rome with diſpatches from Her to the Pretender and Cardinal Alberoni; and, quickly after, Earl Cadogan had notice of a perſon of the ſame name in Holland, with letters and papers of conſequence; whereupon, at his inſtances, Maſſy's lodgings were ſearched, and his perſon and papers ſecured.

(1) The ſame day this bill was brought in, there was printed and delivered to the Lords, a liſt of the Peers exiſting at the time of King James I's Acceſſion to the Crown, and of thoſe who have ſince been advanced to the Peerage; as alſo of the ſeveral Peers extinct in his and the ſucceeding Reigns. By this liſt it appears that,

		extinct	added
At the death of Queen Elizabeth, the number of Engliſh Peers was	59
King James I. created	62	17	45
King Charles I.	59	21	38
King Charles II.	64	53	11
King James II.	8	8	0
K. William and Q. Mary	30	21	9
Queen Anne	30	24	6
King George	20	10	10
	332	154	119
Extinct	154
Remains	178

At the time of debating the bill, the ſtate of the Peers was as follows:

The Prince of Wales and Duke of York		2
Dukes	22
Earls	73
Viſcounts	13
Barons	68
	178
Archbiſhops and Biſhops	26
Peers of Scotland	16
	220

1718-19. at heart the ſettling the Peerage of the whole Kingdom upon ſuch a foundation, as may ſecure the freedom and conſtitution of Parliaments in all future ages, that he is willing, that his prerogative ſtand not in the way of ſo great and neceſſary a work.'

A motion being made for an addreſs of thanks for this meſſage, the Earl of Nottingham excepted againſt it, ſaying, It was unuſual for the King to take notice of any thing depending in Parliament, before the ſame was laid before him in a Parliamentary way. But the Duke of Bucks over-ruled this objection, and ſaid, It could not be ſuppoſed, that the King alone ſhould be ignorant of what every body elſe knew; and that ſince his Majeſty was pleaſed, for the good of his ſubjects, to ſuffer his prerogative to be reſtrained, they ought readily to accept, and thankfully acknowledge, ſo great and ſo gracious a condeſcenſion. Upon this the addreſs was agreed to, and the debate was put off to the next day; when the Earl of Sunderland, in a long ſpeech, ran over the ſeveral changes, that had happened in the Peerage ſince the Reign of Queen Elizabeth to this time; urged the neceſſity of limiting the number of Peers; and propoſed the Duke of Somerſet's ſcheme with relation both to the Engliſh and Scots Peers. Earl Cowper in anſwer to this ſpeech endeavoured to ſhew, 'That what was intended to be done with relation to the Scots Peerage was a manifeſt violation of the treaty of Union, and the higheſt piece of injuſtice; for it was no leſs than to deprive perſons of their right without being heard, and without any pretence of forfeiture on their part; urging, that the Scots Peers, who ſhould be excluded from the number of the twenty-five hereditary, would be in a worſe condition than any other ſubjects, ſince they would be neither electing nor elected, nor repreſenting, nor repreſented, which could not fail of raiſing dangerous diſcontents amongſt them. That beſides it would be a breach of truſt in thoſe, who repreſented the Scots Peerage, wholly to diveſt their principals of a power, with which they had intruſted them only for a few years: And therefore he was of opinion, that the Scots Peers ought to have been conſulted, before any ſteps were made in ſo nice and ſo important an affair.' Theſe objections were anſwered by the Earls of Sunderland, Stanhope, and Cadogan, the Dukes of Bucks and Newcaſtle, 1718. the Biſhop of Glocester, and ſome other Engliſh Lords, who were ſupported by ſeveral Scots Peers, particularly the Dukes of Roxburgh and Montroſe, the Marquiſs of Annandale, and the Earl of Ilay. In the firſt place, it was alledged, 'That the ſettling the Peerage, in the manner propoſed, was rather a benefit than a diſadvantage to the Scots Peerage, whoſe Repreſentatives were thereby increaſed by nine, and all made hereditary: And as for thoſe Peers, who, for the preſent, would be excluded, they would afterwards have a chance to come in, upon failure of any of the twenty-five: That this regulation could not be looked upon as a violation of the Union, two things only being made unalterable fundamentals of that contract, Religion, and the Proportion of public Taxes: That the conſulting of the Scots Peers in this affair, would be altogether improper and unparliamentary, and attended with great inconveniencies. The Earl of Ilay in particular repreſented, That the bringing in a number of Peers into that Houſe, by election, was certainly derogatory to the dignity of that Auguſt Aſſembly, and of the higheſt Tribunal in the united Kingdoms: And therefore he had long before wiſhed to ſee this defect in the Union rectified, and the Scots Peers freed from that ignominious mark of diſtinction, which made them be looked upon as dependant on the Court and Miniſtry, and not at liberty to vote like the other Members, for the good and intereſt of their Country.' The Earl of Nottingham, the Lord Townſhend, and ſome other Peers, declared, 'That they were not againſt the ſettling and limiting the Peerage, but only againſt the doing it in ſuch a manner, as, in their opinion, was unjuſt, and might be attended with dangerous conſequences.' But, after a long debate, reſolutions agreeable to the Duke of Somerſet's motion were agreed to, and the Judges were ordered to prepare and bring in the bill (1).

Diſputes about Peers bill.

As this affair had made a great noiſe, and alarmed, not only the generality of the Scots Peers, but alſo many of the Engliſh Commoners, a Pamphlet, ſaid to be written By Mr. Benſon, called the Plebeian, was publiſhed againſt the bill, which was anſwered by Mr. Addiſon, in his paper called the Old Whig. In theſe papers, the chief arguments, on both ſides of that important

(1) The reſolutions about the Scots Peers were theſe ſix:

I. That, in lieu of the ſixteen elective Peers to ſit in this Houſe on the part of Scotland, twenty-five Peers, to be declared by his Majeſty, ſhall have hereditary Seats in Parliament, and be the Peers on the part of the Peerage of Scotland.

II. That ſuch twenty-five Peers ſhall be declared by his Majeſty, before the next Seſſion of Parliament.

III. That nine of the ſaid twenty-five ſhall be appointed by his Majeſty to have immediate right to ſuch hereditary ſeats in Parliament, ſubject to the qualifications requiſite by the laws now in being.

IV. That none of the remaining ſixteen, ſo to be declared by his Majeſty, or their heirs, ſhall become ſitting Peers of the Parliament of Great-Britain, 'till after the determination of this preſent Parliament, except ſuch as are of the number of the ſixteen Peers now ſitting in Parliament on the part of Scotland and their heirs.

V. That if any of the twenty-five Peers, ſo to be declared by his Majeſty, and their heirs, ſhall fail, ſome one or other of the Peers of Scotland ſhall be appointed by his Majeſty, his Heirs and Succeſſors, to ſucceed every ſuch Peers ſo failing, and every Peer ſo appointed ſhall be one of the Peers on the part of the Peerage of Scotland, in the Parliament of Great-Britain, and ſo, toties quoties, as often as any ſuch failure ſhall happen.

VI. That the hereditary right of ſitting in Parliament, which ſhall accrue to the twenty-five Peers of Scotland, to be declared by his Majeſty, ſhall be ſo limited, as not to deſcend to females.

The Reſolutions concerning the Engliſh Peers (which were agreed to the next day) were theſe five:

I. That the number of Peers of Great-Britain, on the part of England, ſhall not be inlarged, without precedent right, beyond ſix above what they are at preſent: But, as any of the ſaid preſent Peers, or ſuch ſix new Peers, in caſe they be created, ſhall fail, their number portant queſtion, are largely and fully diſplayed (1).

Whilſt the public was in expectation of the iſſue of this affair, a ſudden ſtop was put to all farther proceedings. Earl Stanhope, when the bill came to be read the third time, made a ſpeech, wherein he obſerved, 'That this bill had made a great noiſe, and raiſed ſtrange apprehenſions: And ſince the deſign of it had been ſo miſrepreſented, and ſo miſunderſtood, that it was like to meet with great oppoſition in the other Houſe, he thought it adviſeable to let the matter lie ſtill till a more proper opportunity.' Upon this, the third reading was put off a fortnight, by which means the bill was dropped for this Seſſion: For the King, four days after, came to the Houſe of Peers, and put an end to the Seſſion with the following ſpeech, which the Lord-Chancellor read to both Houſes:

My Lords and Gentlemen,

"I AM now come to put an end to this "Seſſion, in which you have ſhewn many "great and ſeaſonable proofs of your duty and "affection to my Perſon and Government, and "of your care for the ſafety and welfare of your "Fellow-ſubjects.

"By the bleſſing of God on our endeavours, "we have hitherto diſappointed the ill deſigns "of our enemies, who flattered themſelves with "ſucceſs from our unhappy diviſions.

"We perceive, by the raſh and wicked coun"ſels which have lately prevailed in the Court "of Spain, that the deſperate and extravagant "projects of one ambitious man, though not "capable of giving fears to their neighbours, "may occaſion to them ſome expence and "trouble.

"That Court being influenced by counſels "odious and deſtructive to the Spaniards, who "find themſelves neglected and oppreſſed, after "having endeavoured to foment conſpiracies and "ſeditions both here and in France, and ſtoop"ed to practices unuſual, accompanied by ma"nifeſtoes of a ſtile unheard of among great "Princes, has at laſt proceeded to acknowledge "the Pretender.

"As this news has given great ſurprize to all "Europe, I queſtion not, but it will be received "by every good Briton with indignation and "contempt.

"It is our happineſs, at this juncture, to find "ourſelves aſſiſted by the greateſt powers in Eu"rope againſt an enemy, that has no Allies, but "thoſe, who would betray the Government, 1719.
"under which they live, and are protected.

Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons,

"I thank you very heartily for the Supplies "you have granted me this year. The manner, "in which you have raiſed them, without any "new burden to my people, the great addition "you have made to the fund for ſinking the "debts of the Nation, the diſcharge of the Ex"chequer bills, and the proviſions you have "made to pay whatever remains juſtly due to "foreign States and Princes, are the ſtrongeſt "proofs of your wiſdom, as well as of your zeal "for my Service, and the good of your Country. "You may obſerve, I have hitherto been very "cautious of making uſe of the power you have "given me, to increaſe our forces by ſea and "land. If our enemies ſhould oblige me to a "greater expence, it ſhall be employed for your "ſervice. This is what the truſt you repoſed "in me requires at my hands, and what I owe "to ſo dutiful and affectionate a Houſe of Com"mons.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

"There being nothing more deſirable, at all "times, than a firm Union between Proteſtants, "I reflect with ſatisfaction upon the law you "have paſſed this Seſſion, which will, I hope, "prove effectual to that purpoſe. As it is a "ſignal inſtance of moderation and indulgence "in our Eſtabliſhed Church, ſo I hope it will "beget ſuch a return of gratitude from all Diſ"ſenting Proteſtants, as will greatly tend to her "honour and ſecurity, both which I ſhall ever "have near at heart.

"I have always looked upon the glory of a "Sovereign, and the liberty of a Subject, as in"ſeparable; and think it is the peculiar happi"neſs of a Britiſh King, to reign over a free "people. As the civil rights, therefore, and "privileges of all my ſubjects, and eſpecially of "my two Houſes of Parliament, do juſtly claim "my moſt tender concern; if any proviſion "deſigned to perpetuate theſe bleſſings to your "Poſterity remains imperfect, for want of time, "during this Seſſion, maturely to diſcuſs and "ſettle matters of ſo great importance, I pro"miſe myſelf, you will take the firſt opportu"nity to render my wiſhes for your happineſs "compleat and effectual, and to ſtrengthen the "Union, which is of ſo much conſequence to "the welfare of this Kingdom.

"If

---

number may be ſupplied by new creations of Commoners, natural born ſubjects of this Kingdom, and ſo, toties quoties, as often as ſuch failure ſhall happen.

II. That no perſon be at any time hereafter created a Peer by writ, nor any Peerage granted by Patent for any longer eſtate than for the grantee, and the heirs male of his body.

III. That there be not any reſtraint on the Crown to create any of the Princes of the Blood Peers of Great-Britain, with right to ſit in Parliament.

IV. That, whenever any of the Lords now ſitting in Parliament, whoſe ſons have been called by writ, ſhall die, then it ſhall be lawful for his Majeſty, his Heirs and Succeſſors, to create a Peer to ſupply the number ſo leſſened.

V. That every creation of a Peer hereafter to be made contrary to theſe reſolutions ſhall be null and void to all intents and purpoſes.

(1) The Plebeian has the following expreſſions: 'The greateſt Traitor to civil ſociety, that ever yet appeared, will be the man, if ſuch a one can be found, who ſhall contend for ſuch a bill, ſhould it be propoſed among the Commons, with the aſſurance in his pocket of being a Peer, as ſoon as the bill paſſes. And ſhould he ſucceed, which God forbid, that honour, which is to be the reward of ſo baſe a treachery, will be a laſting mark of infamy to the family that bears it, whilſt any notion of honour remains among mankind.'

Mr. Benſon was ſoon after removed from his poſt of Surveyor-General of his Majeſty's works, and was ſucceeded by Sir Thomas Hewet.

(1) An

1719. "If the circumſtances of my affairs ſhall allow "of my going abroad this ſummer, I ſhall take "the ſame care of your intereſts, as if I remain- "ed here. The many Negotiations, which "will be on foot, to reſtore the peace of the "North, in which the trade and tranquillity of "this Kingdom may be very much concerned, "will make my preſence there of great uſe to "theſe my Dominions. And, as in that caſe I "deſign, by the bleſſing of God, to meet you "early next winter, I will only recommend to "you moſt earneſtly, that, laying aſide all ani- "moſities, you would, in your ſeveral Coun- "ties and Stations, uſe your utmoſt endeavours "to preſerve the public peace, and ſee a due "execution of the laws."

After this ſpeech, the Parliament was prorogued to the 19th of May; and afterwards, by ſeveral prorogations, to the 23d of November (1).

The King goes to Hanover.

Soon after the prorogation, the King declared his intention of going to Hanover, and appointed for Lords Juſtices, in his abſence, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Lord Chancellor Parker, the Dukes of Kingſton, Argyle (now alſo Greenwich) Newcaſtle, Bolton, Marlborough, and Roxburgh, the Earls Sunderland, Berkly, and Stanhope, and Secretary Craggs. The Prince and Princeſs of Wales, not being appointed Regents, retired into the Country, and appeared no more till the King's departure, a few days after which they came to St. James's to ſee the young Princeſſes, who kept a levy twice a week: And to them it was, that the Lords Juſtices, and a numerous appearance of foreign Miniſters, Nobility, and Gentry, made their compliments on the King's birth-day, who was entered into the ſixtieth year of his age.

As the King thought his preſence in Germany neceſſary to forward the many Negotiations that were on foot, he ſet out the 11th of May, and, after a ſhort paſſage of ſeventeen hours, arrived in Holland. With the King embarked Earl Stanhope, the Ducheſs of Munſter (now Ducheſs of Kendal) and the Lord and Lady How, with ſome others. The King ſtaid two days at Oſnabrug, and came to Herenhauſen, the 18th of May.

He makes peace with Sweden.

The death of the King of Sweden having removed the chief obſtacle to the peace of the North, the King turned his thoughts firſt that way. The new Queen, who had ſucceeded her Brother Charles XII, as well as the whole Nation, were deſirous of peace; drained of men and money, they were unable to make war: Almoſt the whole army, led by the late King to the fatal expedition of Norway, miſerably periſhed. But it was not ſufficient to give peace to Sweden, it was neceſſary alſo to diſarm her other enemies, and bound their pretenſions. Theſe enemies were the Czar, and the Kings of Denmark, Pruſſia, and Poland. King George, diſpleaſed with the Czar, whom he ſuſpected of having entered into all the projects which had been formed againſt him, reſolved to keep no meaſures with him. He began with a ſincere reconciliation with Sweden, then endeavoured to ſoften the King of Denmark, and induce the two others to proceed with great moderation, to acknowledge him for Mediator, and join with him, if neceſſary, to compel the Czar to accept of equitable conditions. 1719.

The Duke of Orleans, in concert with King George, had offered his mediation to Sweden for a reconciliation with that Prince. The offer was accepted, and, in July, a proviſional treaty was ſigned, by which a peace was to be concluded as ſoon as poſſible, agreeable to the plan, and terms agreed upon with the Mediator. This was punctually performed, and in November, the Sieur de Baſſewitz, Miniſter of his Britannic Majeſty, as Duke and Elector of Brunſwick, ſigned the peace with the Plenipotentiaries of Queen Ulrica.

By this treaty Sweden gave up for ever, to the Royal and Electoral Houſe of Hanover, the Duchies of Bremen and Verden, with all their rights and dependencies, according to the treaty of Oſnabrug, of the 23d of October, 1648, by virtue of which the Kings of Sweden had enjoyed them. On the other hand, the Elector of Hanover engaged to continue to his new ſubjects their rights, privileges, effects, and religion; and to diſcharge the engagements of his predeceſſors in thoſe Duchies. Moreover, he obliged himſelf to pay to the Queen of Sweden a million of Rix-Dollars at two payments; the firſt before the ſigning of the treaty; the ſecond, five or ſix weeks after the exchange of the ratifications. He engaged likewiſe to renew, both as King of Great-Britain, and Elector of Hanover, the Alliances formerly eſtabliſhed with his Predeceſſors and the Kingdom of Sweden. Laſtly, the treaty of Weſtphalia was renewed with a reſervation of demanding and accepting the guaranty of the Emperor, and, according to circumſtances, of ſome other powers.

At the ſame time the Lord Carteret, Ambaſſador Plenipotentiary from Great-Britain to the Court of Sweden, was employed to negotiate the confirmation of this treaty of peace, by an Alliance between the two Crowns, ſtill under the mediation and guaranty of France. But this Alliance was not concluded till the next year, as will be related.

Theſe Negotiations with the Queen of Sweden were not the moſt difficult; ſhe readily agreed to a peace, and conſidered it as the ground of her ſafety, and the end of her miſeries. But it was not the ſame either with the King of Denmark or the Czar, who looked upon theſe Negotiations as the ruin of their ſchemes, and an obſtacle to their conqueſts. As for King Auguſtus, he entered intirely into the views of the King of Great-Britain, and was contented with being acknowledged King of Poland; he did not even require, that the intereſts of his Competitor ſhould

(1) An act paſſed after the Reſtoration, obliging all Mayors and Aldermen, &c. at their admiſſion into offices, to ſign a declaration againſt the ſolemn league and covenant, on a conſiderable penalty. As this act was ſtill in force, and all the Magiſtrates liable to the penalty of it, becauſe the declaration had been univerſally neglected, on a petition of the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of London, an act paſſed this Seſſion to repeal it, under the title of an act for quieting and eſtabliſhing Corporations.

The Truſtees of the forfeited eſtates delivered in an account of the value of the eſtates of Papiſts, which had, in purſuance of an act, for that purpoſe, been regiſter'd in the ſeveral Counties of England, amounting to 375,284*l.* 15*s.* 3*d.* ½.

(1) Captain

should be abandoned, and consented, that, in the provisional treaty, the Queen of Sweden should reserve to herself the liberty of demanding for him what she should think proper. 1719.

The King of Prussia was a little more difficult; but he complied at last, and, accepting the mediation of Great-Britain, granted a suspension of arms till the conclusion of the peace.

The King of Denmark had made great preparations for an expedition against Sweden, which he was to execute in person: He had already had some success, but of a sudden he desisted, and, consenting to a suspension of arms for six months, accepted of the mediation of France and Great-Britain, and, after numberless disputes, gave way to the instances of the Mediators, and accepted of a sum of money by way of satisfaction for the conquests, which he was obliged to restore. The Czar was the only Prince, who would not comply, but sent his fleet to the Scheuron or Batses of Sweden, where twelve or fifteen thousand Muscovites landed, and made a dreadful ravage. The English fleet, which, under Sir John Norris, was in those seas, to support the Negotiations, had orders to treat the Russian fleet, as Admiral Byng had done that of Spain; but the Czar recalled his fleet, and prevented the blow. Thus stood affairs in the North; it is now time to see what was done in the Mediterranean this summer.

Whilst Admiral Byng and the Viceroy of Naples were waiting for the return of Count Hamilton, whom they had agreed to send to Vienna, to represent the posture of affairs, and bring back the final resolutions of that Court concerning the operations of the war, the Admiral sailed to Port-Mahon to refit his squadron (1).

Signor Patinho had hitherto resided in Messina, directing the affairs of the Island for the interest of his Master with great prudence; but, his presence being wanted at the Court of Spain, he embarked on board a Felucca, on the 16th of January in the night, and put to sea, attended by two gallies. If the darkness had continued an hour longer, he would have undoubtedly fallen into the mouths of two of the English cruizers, which chased his gallies into a bay near Palermo; but the Felucca escaped, and landed him in Italy, from whence he proceeded to Madrid, and, by his counsels and industry, all methods were used for supporting their army in Sicily with recruits of men, and all necessaries of war. The Venetians and Genoese, and even the French Consuls in the ports of Italy, notwithstanding the severe prohibitions of the Regent, were corrupted to give them all the assistance possible; and, though many vessels were taken, many escaped. As to the French, Admiral Byng found himself under a difficulty how to treat the ships of a Nation, that was in strict Alliance with England. He made loud complaints of their partiality, till at last the Regent gave him leave to confiscate all those he met with in the service of Spain, which put some stop to their clandestine proceedings (2).

Admiral Byng, having refitted most of his squadron at Port-Mahon, hastened away from thence with four men of war the 30th of March, leaving the rest to follow him, and arrived the 4th of April at Naples, where he hoped to find the army from Hungary arrived, and in a readiness to embark; but, contrary to his expectations, he saw every thing in extreme backwardness, partly for want of money.

On the 23d of April, Count de Mercy arrived at Naples from Vienna, to take upon him the command of the whole army. He was a native of Lorrain, but brought up in the Emperor's service, where he had risen to the rank of General of the horse. He was of a tall graceful presence, with a very soldierlike appearance, but had the misfortune of being short-sighted, almost to purblindness. He had great strength of body and

(1) Captain Matthews being left with a squadron at Pentemelia, to observe Rear-Admiral Cammock, and hinder his escaping out of Messina to the Southward, had the good fortune to run one of them ashore, a ship of sixty-four guns, called the Sta Rosalia; and another called the St. Pedro of sixty guns was cast away in Tarento Bay. Cammock himself, endeavouring to get away to Spain in a small frigate of twenty-two guns, was chased the 6th of February by a ship of Captain Matthews's squadron, and escaped with much difficulty in his boat to Catania, but the frigate was taken, with all his effects and papers, amongst which was a commission from the Pretender, appointing him Admiral of the white squadron.

This unhappy man was a native of Ireland, and, being bred up at sea, had raised himself to the post of a Captain, and served in Queen Anne's war, with no bad character. But associating himself with those who were enemies to the House of Hanover, and becoming obnoxious to the Government, on the Accession of that Family to the Crown, he abandoned his Country, and entered into the service of Spain, where he was promoted to the rank of a Rear-Admiral, and served in that post in the expedition against Sicily. He had never been noted to want courage, but, in the action of Passaro, he ran away among the first, and escaped to Malta, affording an instance, how much a consciousness of guilt and dread of punishment depresses the heart, more than the fear of an enemy. He was a vain boasting man, with a roving unsettled head, filled with airy schemes and projects, without any judgment or discretion. He assured Signor Patinho, that he could put most of the English fleet into his hands, in recompence for that which he had lost; and, in that senseless confidence, wrote a letter to the Admiral, to let him know, that he had the Pretender's commands to assure him, if he would bring over the greatest part of his fleet to Messina, or to any port in Spain, he would create him Duke of Albemarle, with a Royal Bounty of one hundred thousand pounds to support the honour and dignity of that rank; and that every Captain should have ten thousand pounds, and the seamen a gratuity of two months wages. That Signor Patinho would satisfy him of the King of Spain's security for the performance of this agreement, and that no body else but the Dukes of Ormond and Mar were in the secret. Whether he wrote by direction or not, does not appear, but the letter met with the contempt it deserved. He likewise sent another letter to Captain Walton, with the promise of a reward of ten thousand pounds, a Commission of Admiral of the Blue, and to be made an English Peer, if he would bring his ships into Messina, which the honest Captain brought to the Admiral, with vehement expressions of abhorrence and indignation.

(2) Mr. Corbet mentions here an instance or two of the unfair practice of other Nations at this time upon the English trade, and which, it is apprehended, will always be the case, whenever England is engaged in foreign wars. The Admiral having intelligence from Genoa, that a privateer of twenty-four guns had been fitted out by French Merchants of that place, and was cruizing with a Spanish Commission off of Cape Corso, and 1719. and mind, and was indefatigable in the uſe of both, when neceſſary. He was full of fire, and his converſation abounded with wit and humour. He had great ſkill in courting and careſſing perſons, when he wanted to gain any point, but, at other times, his behaviour diſcovered much haughtineſs. He had an inſatiable thirſt for glory, which was ſeconded by a bold and moſt reſolute temper, always heading his troops himſelf, and ſeemed to have a ſort of paſſion for fighting. He was ſeldom in any action but he was wounded, and was not eſteemed a fortunate Officer. He deſpiſed an enemy too much, was impatient for engaging, and had the character of not caring what men he ſacrificed to obtain his purpoſe, when a few days patience might perhaps have ſucceeded as well without it; which opinion made the ſoldiers uneaſy under him, as they were in continual apprehenſions of being led to the ſlaughter. Upon the whole, as he had great parts, and great experience of ſervice, he muſt have made a great General (as he was a complete fine Gentleman) if he had had a cooler temper, or could have commanded it better. But with all his faults he was certainly in the ſuperior rank of men, of which there needs no better proof, than that he was a favourite of Prince Eugene. He was now going to encounter an old ſchool-fellow in the Marquiſs de Lede, who was a Fleming by birth, and a good General under a quite oppoſite character, being as different from the other in perſon, as he was in temper. He was of a low miſhapen ſtature, not affable nor open in his diſpoſition, but much eſteemed for his judgment and prudence, and was of great military experience too. He was as cautious and circumſpect, as the other was bold and enterprizing; and, in this reſpect, both ſeemed to be in their proper employment, the one in a ſituation of defence, and the other of attack. It was thought, that, in the courſe of this war, he ſlipped ſome opportunities, which the overſight, or wants of the Germans, gave him of acting upon them to advantage; but, he conſidered, that he was in a Country, where he was ſhut up from receiving any conſiderable ſupplies of men, while the enemy poured in what numbers they pleaſed, and that any large diminution of his troops might endanger the whole, and therefore made it a principal point to preſerve his army as much as poſſible, and with the advantage of the paſſes, and the affection of the country people, to diſtreſs and diſable his adverſary, which he effected with much ſkill and wiſdom, and maintained the honour of the arms of Spain with great reputation; and at laſt, when the King his Maſter was forced by the weight of the Alliances againſt him, to relinquiſh the Iſland, he brought a gallant army back into Spain (1).

Whilſt the troops were arriving, and the veſſels to tranſport them getting ready, Admiral Byng aſſiſted at ſeveral Conferences with the Viceroy of Naples and General Mercy, about the intended deſcent on Sicily. All agreed, that Syracuſa was out of the way, but it was not ſo eaſy to determine, whether it would be beſt to land at Palermo, or near Melazzo. Palermo was judged ſafeſt, and would not only make them Maſters of the capital City, but alſo of the fertile Province of Mazzara, from whence they might eaſily draw proviſions and neceſſaries for the ſubſiſtance of the army. But Melazzo was moſt expeditious, as it would preſs the enemy cloſer, and bring matters more quickly to a deciſion; and this opinion prevailed. But, when they came to examine into the ſtate of their military ſtores, they were ſo deficient in a train of artillery, that the Admiral yielded to ſupply them with cannon, powder, and ball from the Spaniſh prizes, rather than ſuffer time to be loſt for want thereof.

All things being at length got ready, the army embarked, conſiſting of ten thouſand foot, and three thouſand five hundred horſe, all choice troops, and the flower of thoſe, that had lately ſerved victoriouſly in Hungary. The Admiral ſailed from the Bay of Baiæ, the 22d of May, N. S. with eight men of war, and above two hundred tranſports; and, on the 27th in the evening, arrived before Melazzo, from whence General Zumjungen came off, and adviſed Count de Mercy to land in the Bay of Patti, about twenty miles weſtward, the coaſt to the eaſtward being all guarded by the enemy. Upon this, ſo good a diſpoſition and order was made, that, the

and having no ſmall frigates with him, he converted the Loo Hoſpital ſhip into a frigate, and, putting twenty guns and one hundred men into her, ſent her, under the command of Captain Prothero, in queſt of the ſaid privateer. The Captain fortunately met with her off the Iſland of Capraia, and after a ſmart engagement took her. She had one hundred and thirty men, moſt French, of whom fifty-ſix were killed, and nineteen wounded, with the loſs only of two men in the Loo, and four wounded. The Admiral directed the priſoners to be ſent to Thoulon, and delivered into the cuſtody of the Intendant; and he wrote to the Engliſh Ambaſſador at Paris to repreſent thoſe proceedings to the Regent, to whoſe juſtice he left the priſoners. Another ſhip was fitted out at Venice, with fifty guns, and two hundred and fifty men, all Venetians, except three Spaniards, and eight Engliſh; and having taken a Spaniſh commiſſion at Malta, which Signor Patinho had lodged there for her, ſhe went a cruizing on the coaſt of Spain. The Admiral, being informed of it, ſent the Orford and Rupert after her, the latter of which, meeting with her off of Peniſcola, engaged and took her by boarding, having killed ſixty-one men, and wounded twenty-nine, with the loſs only of one man killed and three wounded.

(1) The City of Naples was at this time full of General Officers, and perſons of high quality and diſtinction, and abounded in all the pleaſures of that delightful climate. The Viceroy was ſtudious of making the place agreeable to the Admiral, as much out of affection, as politeneſs. On the feſtival day of St. Januarius, he appointed him a box near his own, to behold that famous ceremony. The blood continued long without liquifying, at the approach of the head of the Saint. The vaſt concourſe of people began to ſhew ſigns of concern: They fell firſt to praying, afterwards proceeded to groans and lamentations; and, at length, ſuch a confuſed murmuring and uneaſineſs was perceived amongſt them, that the Viceroy, being apprehenſive of ſome ill conſequences, ſent Count Hamilton to the Admiral, to beg he would not take it ill, if he deſired him to retire, not knowing what effect it might have upon the populace, if they ſhould take it into their heads to attribute the failing of the miracle to the Saint's being diſpleaſed at his preſence. The Admiral had no ſooner quitted his box, and was ſtepping into the Viceroy's coach, but he heard a prodigious ſhout of, é fatto, é fatto, it is done, it is done; and ſuch joy and exultation appeared in every countenance, as if they had been delivered from ſome terrible calamity.

19. the next morning early, all the foot landed in leſs than two hours, and moſt of the cavalry by three in the afternoon, having only loſt two horſes in the voyage.

Upon the landing of the Imperialiſts, the Marquiſs de Lede decamped with precipitation, and marched, without halting, to Franca Villa, a ſtrong poſt, thirty-two miles diſtant, in a mountainous Country, and from whence three roads led to Palermo, Meſſina, and Syracuſa. Count de Mercy arrived, by eaſy marches, at Melazzo, and found in the Spaniſh camp ſome cannon, with ammunition and utenſils of war, which the haſte of the Spaniards had left behind.

Whilſt matters were preparing here for the further operations of the army, Count Seckendorf was detached with a body of two thouſand five hundred foot, and one hundred and fifty horſe, to reduce the Iſlands of Lipari to the Emperor's obedience, which he effected, after ſome reſiſtance, in four days time. This conqueſt was abſolutely neceſſary to keep open the navigation between Naples and Sicily, which had been diſturbed by the armed veſſels of thoſe Iſlands. Lipari, the principal Iſland, is ſaid to contain eight thouſand inhabitants, a bold people, addicted to pillage, and the beſt mariners in thoſe parts.

It was now under deliberation, whether the army ſhould go and beſiege Meſſina, or follow the Spaniards, who were ſtrongly intrenching themſelves at Franca Villa. Meſſina had a numerous garriſon, and was well provided for a long ſiege, which might waſte away the ſummer, whilſt the Spaniards got in the corn, now near ripe, and kept the magazines of the Iſland in their poſſeſſion. It was therefore determined to march towards the enemy, and to endeavour to bring them to battle. The haſty retreat they had made from Melazzo animated Count de Mercy ſo much, that he did not imagine they would make any great ſtand at Franca Villa, but that he ſhould trample them under foot (which was his expreſſion) when he came up with them. The way to the enemy lay through a barren mountainous Country, and it took up ſo much time to get together a few mules and horſes for carriage from Calabria, that the army did not move from Melazzo till the 17th of June, N. S. amounting to about twenty-one thouſand men. They ſuffered a moſt painful march of three days, through wild unknown roads, broken up, and rendered almoſt unpaſſable by the enemy, conducted by ignorant guides, and climbing over cragged rocks and precipices, the ſoldiers oppreſſed with the weight of their ammunition, and ſix days bread, which they carried, beſides their arms, with a fiery ſun burning over their heads, and harraſſed and aſſaulted all along the heights and eminences by the armed peaſants of the Country, mixed with ſome Spaniſh foot; but arriving, the 19th in the afternoon, on the top of the mountain of Tre Fontane, they diſcovered the enemy incamped below, in the valley of Franca Villa. At the ſight of their camp, a ſhout of joy ran through the whole army, in hopes of coming to a deciſive action, which ſeemed to promiſe favourably to them, it not being imagined, that the enemy could poſt themſelves in a bottom, with ſo much advantage againſt an army deſcending from higher ground upon them.

The ſituation of the Spaniſh camp was in this manner. The rapid river Cantara, whoſe banks are of a ſteep quick rock, from ſix to eight feet perpendicularly deep, and runs through the valley of Franca Villa, was in their front. Their left was on the riſing grounds about Franca Villa (the town lying behind in their center) and extended to a high mountain, where they had placed ſome armed peaſants, and a few foot. On the other ſide of the river (but joined by a bridge to the town of Franca Villa) was a ſteep rock, with a convent of Capuchins upon it. Here they placed five battalions of their beſt troops, in as many rows of intrenchments cut into the rock, one above the other; and at the point of the rock was a ſmall battery of two pieces of cannon of three pounders. On their right they had carried on a fortification of large ſtones, like a wall, all along the river, as far as a high rocky hill, which had a convent on the top, as advantageouſly fortified, as that of the Capuchins; and, cloſe behind the hill, the ſteep river Caſtiglione runs into the Cantara, by means of whoſe confluence, and the neighbouring mountains being guarded by armed peaſants, the Spaniards were ſecure from any danger in their rear. It was unfortunate to the Germans, that not one deſerter, nor even a peaſant of the Country (who were all up in arms in favour of the Spaniards) came over to give them the leaſt information, ſo that they knew little of the ſtrength and advantage of the enemies poſt, till they came to action, and were within musket-ſhot of their trenches. 1719. The battle of Franca Villa.

Count de Mercy made a diſpoſition for attacking the enemy that evening at three different places. He detached all the firſt line of foot, conſiſting of ſixteen battalions and twenty-three companies of grenadiers, with three hundred Huſſars, under the command of General Zumjungen, to an adjoining hill on the left. He had under him the Lieutenant-Generals Wallis, Wachtendonck, and the Prince of Holſtein. Upon that hill General Zumjungen was to ſeparate his men in two bodies, the one under the command of Wallis, conſiſting of eight battalions and eleven companies of grenadiers, being to deſcend on the right, whilſt Zumjungen did the ſame on the left with eight battalions, twelve companies of grenadiers, and the Huſſars. All the horſe and ſecond line of foot, this conſiſting of twelve battalions under Lieutenant-General Seckendorf, and the horſe under Lieutenant-General Count de Eck, conſiſting of thirty-five ſquadrons, including three companies of horſe-grenadiers, and as many carabiniers, were at the ſame time to deſcend from the mountain of Tre Fontane, and join the other bodies below. Before all this could be effected, night came on, which obliged them to put off the attack till the next morning; and at break of day the ſecond line of foot being got down, and meeting with ten or twelve ſquadrons of the enemy in the valley, they obliged them, as they advanced, to retire towards their intrenchments. When the army was got down to the places appointed in the valley, Count de Mercy perceiving, that the enemy poſſeſſed ſeveral conſiderable poſts on a hill to his right, from whence they would flank him in his attack, he ordered Lieutenant-General Seckendorf, and the Prince of Heſſe-Caſſel, with ſix battalions, to endeavour to diſlodge them from thence, and then to deſcend and rejoin the army in the general attack, which the

Generals

1719. Generals Zumjungen and Wallis were ordered to defer till they ſaw Seckendorf engaged, and deſcending towards them. The hill being very ſteep and difficult, and the enemy being very advantageouſly poſted, Seckendorf was obliged to make many windings, which took up much time to get up to them. In the mean while the enemy, ſeeing that detachment, ſent more foot thither, which made Count de Mercy ſtrengthen him with four battalions more; ſo that it was four in the afternoon before they all arrived on the top of the mountain. Seckendorf, having his ten battalions together, drove the enemy down from thence to their intrenchments; and, if night had not come on too ſoon, it was thought he would have been able to have forced his way into their lines, which at that place were weakeſt, and moſt eaſy to be penetrated. At the ſame time four companies of grenadiers of Wallis's body attacked a poſt of the enemy on the back of the ſame hill, and drove them thence, whilſt the reſt of the grenadiers (being ſeven companies) ſuſtained by the battalions of the ſame body, and the regiment of Dragoons of Anſpach, attacked a ſmall intrenchment, which the enemy had made acroſs the valley, and, having carried it, they advanced on towards the rock of the Capuchins, which they attacked about ſix in the evening, being reinforced by two battalions of Leffelholtz, which Count Mercy had drawn from the left to ſuſtain them. Here was very warm and bloody work, the Germans being expoſed to a continual fire from the ſeveral trenches of the enemy on the ſides of the rock. During this attack, Count d'Eck, with the carabiniers and horſe-grenadiers, followed by the regiments of horſe of Liege, Hanover, and Portugal, traverſed the valley within half muſket-ſhot of the enemy, and placed himſelf to the left of Zumjungen, the plain there appearing large enough for the horſe to act, and to ſuſtain Zumjungen's attack, and penetrate with him into the enemies intrenchments. But this motion of the horſe croſſing Zumjungen in his march, did very much retard his attack, ſo that it was late before he attacked three caſſines, which ſtood near the river, within eighty paces of the enemy's lines, which he took, not without loſs of men. Here the Prince of Holſtein was mortally wounded, and, being left on the field of battle, he ſent to the Marquiſs de Lede, who cauſed him to be carried into Franca Villa, where he died three days after. While Zumjungen was diſpoſing his troops to attack the intrenchments, by the way of a mill, which lay on the river oppoſite to the caſſines, he perceived the Heſſian battalions on his right following by miſtake the two battalions of Leffelholtz to the rock of the Capuchins, which diſappointed his deſign, for it was night before they returned. Count de Mercy animated his troops every where by his preſence and example, heading himſelf the two battalions of Leffelholtz at the attack of the Capuchins, and after having one horſe killed under him, and two diſabled, he was at laſt himſelf dangerouſly wounded in the reins with a muſket-ball. Night coming on put an end to the action, and left things undecided, except that the Germans maintained ſome ſmall poſts they had gained, which ſerved to ſtraiten the enemy in their camp. In this action the Germans had eight hundred and forty-ſix men killed, and two thouſand four hundred and forty-nine wounded; amongſt the latter Admiral Byng's ſecond ſon very dangerouſly, who ſerved as a volunteer. The Spaniards had about one thouſand five hundred men killed or wounded. 1719

Count de Mercy, having withdrawn his wounded men in the night, ranged his army in order to renew the attack next morning; but, the action of the day before having convinced the other Generals of the ſtrong ſituation of the enemy, and perceiving the ſoldiers extremely diſpirited and dejected with their hardſhips and ill ſucceſs, they, with much difficulty, prevailed upon him not to perſiſt in that reſolution, but, by extending to the left, endeavour to cut off the enemy from Meſſina, and open a communication with the Engliſh convoy, which (according to agreement) was to rendezvous in Schiſo-Bay near Taormina, a ſea-port town, about three hours diſtant from Franca Villa, with the tranſports laden with proviſions, ammunition, baggage, and other neceſſaries, which the army ſtood in extreme need of. Here was a contingency of great hazard and danger, which gave the Germans much fear and uneaſineſs. For it might have happened, that the winds had hindered the convoy from paſſing through the Faro. Or, if they ſhould have gained their paſſage into Schiſo-Bay, Taormina and all that coaſt was poſſeſſed by the enemy, and it was poſſible, that the ſhips might not be able to open a communication with the ſhore. Or ſtill, if both theſe points ſucceeded, the eſtabliſhing a correſpondence between the ſea and the camp, through an hoſtile Country, was another work of hazard and difficulty; and a diſappointment, in any one of them, was the inevitable ruin of the whole army, who ſaw themſelves near the end of their proviſions, without any other poſſibility of getting more. But they were ſoon delivered from their fears, by hearing, that the convoy was ſafely arrived in Schiſo-Bay; that the ſailors had taken and deſtroyed a ſmall fort of two guns, which had endeavoured to moleſt their anchoring; and that the guns of the men of war had diſperſed a body of troops, which the Marquiſs de Spinola had ſent from Meſſina to the ſea-ſide, to oppoſe them. Upon this reviving news, Count de Mercy ſent General Wachtendonck, with three thouſand foot and five hundred horſe, down to incamp at the ſea-ſide, where the ſhips lay at anchor, and ordered the roads, which were hardly paſſable, to be repaired, under the direction of Engineer-General Schmettau; and, having got ſome field-pieces from the ſhips up to the camp, he greatly annoyed the enemy, who lay beneath him. This communication was too important for the Marquiſs de Lede not to endeavour to interrupt it; and, amongſt many ſkirmiſhes that daily happened, a party of ſeven hundred Spaniſh horſe fell in with the bread-waggons and mules, that were returning from the ſea-ſide, laden with proviſions for the camp, and guarded only by three hundred horſe. The defence, which the Germans made, was reckoned a gallant action. A ſmall party of foot, that happened to be in the neighbourhood, hearing the fire, and coming up to their aſſiſtance, they put the Spaniards to flight, and conducted the waggons and mules ſafe to the camp.

When Count Merci parted from Admiral Byng at Melazzo, to go in queſt of the Spaniſh army, it was the Admiral's deſign to return to Naples, and put things there in motion for an intended 1719. intended expedition to Sardinia, which the Duke of Savoy had much at heart, and was no leſs preſſed by the Courts of England and France. But reflecting within himſelf, that the impetuous temper of the German General, and the contempt he ſaw he had of the enemy, might poſſibly bring about ſome occaſions, that would want his aſſiſtance, he tarried a few days on the coaſt, in uneaſy expectation of the news of the ſucceſs of their march from Melazzo. The armed peaſants had cut off all communication between Franca Villa and Melazzo; ſo that the firſt miſdoubt he entertained, that things had not gone well, was from hearing the firing of the guns at Meſſina and at the Faro, and ſeeing great illuminations made along the coaſt. Soon after he perceived the Neapolitan gallies rowing out of the Faro, and the General of them, coming on board, gave him an imperfect account of the action, but enough to ſatisfy him, that it had not been fortunate; upon which he immediately imbarked two battalions from the garriſon of Melazzo, and about a thouſand recruits, who were juſt arrived there, and ſent them, the ſame day, under a convoy, through the Faro to Schiſo-Bay. In the evening he received letters from Count de Mercy, informing him of the particulars of the whole action, with the great difficulties he laboured under, and uncertainty what to do; earneſtly preſſing him to come to the camp, that they might confer and conſult together. Upon this, the Admiral ſent his firſt Captain with his own ſhip and two others to Naples, by whom he ſent a letter to the Vice-roy, giving his opinion, that all thoughts of an expedition to Sardinia ſhould be laid aſide for the preſent, and the troops, which could be ſpared from his Government, ſent immediately into Sicily, till whoſe arrival all things there would be at a ſtand; and that he had ſent his officers and ſhips to promote that ſervice. He then imbarked on board the General of the gallies, laying aſide the ceremony of his flag and character, and, in his way to Schiſo, Count de Ligneville came to him in a Felucca, bringing freſh letters from Count de Mercy, which expreſſed his great impatience to ſee him. Being landed at Schiſo, General Wachtendonck renewed the ſame intreaties, which the Admiral's zeal did not want; who, accepting that General's horſes, and forgetting for a while his own ſtation and element, ſet out under a ſtrong eſcort, attended by Captain Matthews and his eldeſt ſon, and paſſing through roads ſtrewed with dead bodies of men and horſes, that had fallen in ſkirmiſhes the day before, between the ſea-ſide and the camp, he alighted at Count de Mercy's tent in the evening, where a guard of Grenadiers being drawn out for his reception, one of them was ſhot through the head by a muſket-ball from the enemy's camp, at the door of his tent, and fell down dead at his feet. He found the General very weak and faint with his wound, the ball ſtill remaining in his reins; but, as he had a magnanimity of ſpirit ſuperior to his condition, it did not hinder them from entering into converſation on the melancholy ſituation of their affairs. The General ' made great complaints of Zumjungen, to whoſe ſlowneſs in marching, and coming ſo late into action, he attributed his ill ſucceſs. He ſaid, he himſelf was ſtill of opinion to make another attack upon the enemy, rather than decamp and retire; but that his Officers in general were againſt it; and in that caſe he ſaw nothing left for them to do, but to go down, and join the forces at the ſea-ſide, and march into the Country about Catanea and Syracuſa, for their better ſubſiſtance. That he had wrote for two battalions of Savoyards to be ſent to him from Syracuſa, which, with the troops the Admiral had ſent from Melazzo, would repair his loſs of men; but that the loſs of his Officers was irretrievable; for, beſides many killed, a conſiderable number of the beſt and principal were wounded, and incapable of preſent ſervice.' After many propoſitions and ſchemes ſtarted and diſcuſſed between them, without any being concluded on, the Count deſired the Admiral to ſtay in the camp that night, to be preſent at a Conſultation of general Officers next morning. The converſation being ended, the Admiral went to ſee his ſon, who (as was mentioned before) was wounded in the action, and whom he found languiſhing in his tent, in a way, that gave little hopes of his recovery, not ſo much from the malignity of the wound (though that was in a dangerous part) as from the unſkilfulneſs of thoſe, who attended him, the German army being very ill provided with ſurgeons and medicines (1). 1719.

Such an univerſal dejection had reigned throughout the army, on account of the ill ſucceſs of the late action, and for the loſs and diſability of ſo many brave Officers, and they had ſuch continual apprehenſions, that the fiery temper of their General would order them on another attack, that their joy on the arrival of the Admiral was inexpreſſible. They looked on him as their Deliverer, who alone, they thought, could extricate them from their preſent difficulties and misfortunes, and influence their General with cool and prudent counſels. In the morning early he viſited General Zumjungen, the ſecond perſon in the army, whoſe ſedate deliberate temper had procured him great eſteem and confidence among the ſoldiery. He complained much ' of the General's raſh impatience, in not giving time to all the troops to come up; which if

(1) Mr. Corbet obſerves here, It may be wondered, that the Emperor is ſo well ſerved in the courage of his troops, when ſo little care is generally taken of their preſervation in accidents of wounds or ſickneſs. Surgeons and medicines are few and bad in their armies, and there is little difference between being wounded and killed in action, except that of a lingering or a ſudden death. After the battle of Franca Villa, the wounded men were laid on the ground, with their ammunition-bread ſet by them, and left expoſed to the ſun and fortune. The General himſelf had only his own Valet de Chambre to dreſs his wound, and attend him. It was a moving ſpectacle to the Admiral, to meet with great numbers of poor wretches in his way up to the camp, ſome endeavouring, with the ſupport of their wives or comrades, to crawl down to the ſea-ſide, in order to get a paſſage over to the hoſpital at Reggio; others unable to go on from pain or faintneſs, falling down on the earth, and left to die there. This is a great blemiſh of their ſervice, and gives handle to the maxim which their enemies would fix on them, that they account it cheaper to get a man than cure one, and ſo give themſelves little concern for his recovery.

1719. if he had done, and had delayed the attack till next morning, they would have had the whole day before them, have judged better of the measures for carrying it on, which would then have been diſpoſed in another manner, and with more reaſonable expectation of ſucceſs; and that this was not his own ſingle opinion, but that of all the other Officers. He bewailed the little regard the General gave to the advice of his Officers; and intreated him to oppoſe any overture he might make at the Conſultation for another attack, which he feared was not out of his head, and what he (the Admiral) only had credit enough to diſſuade him from it.'

The principal Officers of the army being met in the General's tent, the firſt point he put in queſtion was, Whether the enemy ſhould be attacked again? The Officers keeping a long ſilence, and directing their looks to the Admiral, he addreſſed his ſpeech to the General, wherein he 'reminded him of the warning he had formerly given him not to deſpiſe the enemy, whoſe numbers and reſolution he now experienced to be otherwiſe than what he expected. He ſaid, that he had viewed the ſituation of the enemies camp, the night before; and, though he did not pretend to much judgment in the operations of land ſervice, yet it ſeemed to his plain underſtanding, that for one army to attack another equal in number, under the ſhelter of ſtrong and almoſt impregnable intrenchments, was rather an undertaking of deſpair than diſcretion, and could not be attended with any reaſonable hopes of ſucceſs.' All the other Officers declaring themſelves of the ſame opinion, that queſtion was laid aſide. It came next under deliberation, What the army was to do? The General's opinion was, 'That it was inſufficient for a ſpeedy conqueſt of the Iſland, in regard the enemy had as numerous an army, with all the ſtrong holds and magazines in their poſſeſſion, and the affection of the people on their ſide. That, as they could not continue where they were, it was his opinion, they ſhould march into the fertile Country about Catanea, and endeavour to make themſelves maſters of Auguſta; or elſe canton themſelves about Syracuſa for their better ſubſiſtance, till new and effectual ſupplies of troops were ſent from Germany.' To this the Admiral replied, 'That he was ſo much of his opinion, that they wanted a further reinforcement of men, that, upon the firſt news of the ill ſucceſs of the battle, he had wrote to the Viceroy of Naples his ſentiments accordingly: That indeed the Courts of London and Paris did earneſtly preſs the carrying on the enterprize againſt Sardinia; but, when they ſhould come to be informed of the ſtate of affairs, they would probably conſent to have the army, deſigned for that expedition, paſs firſt into Sicily, which, as things ſtood, he thought the neareſt way to the conqueſt of both Iſlands. That, after his departure from them, he would immediately go to Naples, and labour that point with the proper Courts, with all the earneſtneſs and application poſſible. That, as to their marching in the mean time into the Country about Catanea for ſubſiſtance, he apprehended, it would give the world a worſe opinion of the late action than it deſerved, and make it be concluded, that they had been defeated and diſabled; which would blemiſh the credit of their arms, and give too much ſpirit to the enemy, and to the Sicilians in their intereſt. That being now joined by the recruits he had ſent them, and the battalions from Syracuſa being daily expected, they would be in a condition to act offenſively, and advance the Emperor's affairs: That Auguſta was out of the way, and not worth their attention; and delaying their time there was drawing the war into unneceſſary length; but that the way was open to Meſſina, the beſieging of which City would ſupport the character of their arms, and the taking of it make the reduction of the reſt of the Iſland eaſy. That, as to what regarded the fleet, the experience of the laſt winter in keeping two ſquadrons, one within, the other without the Faro, to block up the ſhips in Meſſina, and ſecure the paſſage of the proviſions, which the army at Melazzo drew from Calabria and Apulia, had determined him never to hazard again the deſtruction of his Maſter's ſhips on a ſea-ſervice of ſuch evident danger in that tempeſtuous ſeaſon, without having a port to ſhelter or befriend him. That the reduction of Meſſina was their mutual intereſt, as his ſhips would then clean there, and be more at hand to aſſiſt them; and, the cauſe of the blockade being removed, he ſhould be able to ſend a detachment to cruiſe on the coaſts of Spain, which would ſtraiten the enemy, and obſtruct their ſending ſuccours into Sicily.' This remonſtrance had the weight it deſerved, and not only convinced, but gave great ſatisfaction to the General and his Officers; eſpecially after his removing an objection of their being in want of cannon for battery, by agreeing to ſpare them out of the Spaniſh prizes twenty-ſeven cannon of twenty-four pounders, twelve of eighteen, and as many of twelve pounders; with a proportionable quantity of powder and ball, to inable them to begin the ſiege, and promiſing to ſollicit ſtrongly at Naples for remitting to the army all things neceſſary for carrying on that important ſervice with ſucceſs.

The Conference being over, the Admiral took his leave, the General and all his Officers expreſſing the greateſt eſteem and affection for him at their parting, and, being eſcorted down to the water-ſide, he imbarked in the neareſt man of war, and, without regard to his own dignity of moving at the head of a fleet, ſailed away with two ſhips only, and after an impatient paſſage of eleven days, a time tedious to a mind active and charged with important affairs, he arrived at Naples, where the firſt thing he heard, with great ſurprize and concern, was, that his friend Count Daun was removed from the Government, and departed for Vienna, though his time was not expired, and that Count de Gallas was come thither in his room. The diſplacing at that juncture a man ſo experienced in military affairs was a ſtep very inconvenient to the Emperor's intereſt, and an unhappy effect of Court faction; for, though the new Viceroy was a man of undoubted worth and honour, and had ſuſtained the character of Ambaſſador at the Courts of England and Rome, with proper dignity and magnificence, and in quieter times might have filled his Government with great ſufficiency and applauſe, yet, not being bred a ſoldier, it was not to be expected, he could ſo readily comprehend the ſprings of motion in armies, or foreſee every proviſion neceſſary for military operations, the timely ſupplies of which are the ſureſt foundations of ſucceſs in war.

After

1719. After the first civilities, the Admiral, entering into Conferences with the Viceroy, painted out to him in very lively colours the state of the Imperial army in Sicily, 'where the event of things, he said, had not answered the sanguine hopes they had flattered themselves with, on their landing on that Island; that, instead of trampling over the enemy, they had received such a shock themselves, as very much humbled their spirits and expectations, and had been so far from making impression on an army favoured and assisted by the Natives, that they were reduced to think of their own preservation, being intangled among barren mountains, depending on a precarious subsistance from the sea, and in a Country, where every man they saw was their enemy; and finally, that, without a reinforcement equal to another army, the conquest of that Kingdom was impracticable.' The Admiral, having proceeded thus far, was cautious of touching on the army, that lay in the Milanese, designed for Sardinia; for, by the last letters, the Courts of England, France, and Turin, were still very pressing for that expedition: But he demanded of the Viceroy, Whether the Emperor had any considerable number of troops in Italy, besides those designed for Sardinia? To which he replying, he believed not: The Admiral asked, Whether, if those troops designed for Sardinia were immediately sent over to Sicily, they could soon be replaced by other troops from Germany, to go on that expedition? Which the Viceroy doubting, he then spoke out his opinion plainly, 'That the expedition to Sardinia ought to be laid aside for the present: That the carrying on both undertakings together would end in the failure of both; and that the shortest way of getting both Islands was by conquering one first.' The Viceroy replied, 'That the proposition was so much for his Master's interest, that his concurrence with it was not to be doubted, but that he feared, he was not at liberty to divert those troops, without the consent of the other Courts in Alliance; and prayed the Admiral to make the proper representations thereupon to them, as he would do himself to the Emperor.' The Conference being over, the Count de Ligneville, whom Count de Mercy had sent with the Admiral to Naples, was dispatched away to Vienna, with instructions to lay before that Court the state of their affairs in Sicily, and the measures proposed for retrieving them.

Naples seemed to be, at this time, the center of affairs in Europe. All the powers in the Quadruple Alliance, as well as those, who had any concerns with them, had Ministers there to watch over their respective interests, and drew their measures from information of what passed there. The Admiral went to the Viceroy to visit the Marquis de Breille, the King of Sardinia's Minister; and shewing him the weak condition of the Imperial arms in Sicily, and that the expedient of sending the troops designed for Sardinia thither was the effect of invincible necessity, and not a pretence for postponing his Master's interests, which the Courts of England and France had as much at heart as those of the Emperor, he convinced that Minister of the reasonableness of the measure, who, at his request, represented the matter in a true light to his own Court, and obtained his Master's concurrence.

During the Admiral's stay at Naples, the Grafton brought in two Genoese ships, which she had taken off Palermo, with six hundred Swiss recruits on board for the Spanish army, who were committed prisoners to the Castles. The Lenox ran a third a-shore, with about two hundred more soldiers, and burnt her, but most of the men escaped. 1719.

There being nothing more to do at Naples, till the sentiments of the several Courts were known, upon the proposed alteration of measures, the Admiral determined, in the mean time, to pass over again into Sicily, hoping to find the army before Messina, in which case his assistance would be wanting. He had then a strong feverish disorder hanging on him, which had reduced him to a very low condition; a little rest seemed necessary for his recovery; but his heart was with the army, and his health had no part in his thoughts. The Viceroy too was ill in bed of a fever; they were desirous of seeing each other before the Admiral departed, having some necessary points to settle together. The Admiral, scarce able to stand, was carried to the Viceroy's bed-side, where being seated, they could do little more than give broken and imperfect hints to each other, of what their minds laboured with, and were soon obliged to put an end to a Conference, wherein the weakness of their bodies did not second the zeal of their hearts for the public. The Admiral complimented the Viceroy with as many of the Swiss prisoners, as would be necessary to exchange what Germans were prisoners in Sicily; and, taking a final leave of him, imbarked for that Island. The Viceroy died two days after, whose sickness the Italians attributed to his travelling through the Campania of Rome in the dog-days, which they esteem fatal. His death threw the affairs of that Kingdom into great confusion; the collateral Council assuming the Government, and the military Power refusing to obey their orders, which proved no small disservice and retardment to the affairs in Sicily.

During the Admiral's absence, Count de Mercy, being struck blind with an apoplectic fit, was obliged to quit the camp, and pass over to Reggio for advice, leaving the command of the army to General Zumjungen. General Wachtendonck had taken by stratagem the town of Taormina, a strong pass in the way to Messina, upon which encouragement Zumjungen broke up from Franca Villa with his army, on the 17th of July, without any molestation from the enemy, and forcing the strong passes of Alexis and la Sceletta, with less opposition than was expected, after a painful march through a mountainous Country and excessive heats, but assisted by the transport-vessels coasting along with the provisions, artillery, and heavy baggage, he sat down, the 20th, before Messina; in which the enemy had three thousand men, under the command of the Marquis de Spinola, an Officer of great reputation, and well furnished with provisions and all necessaries for a long and obstinate defence. In the mean time, Count de Mercy burning with impatience to lie idle at Reggio, notwithstanding the anguish of his wound, and the Surgeon's not being able to get the ball out of his body, as soon as ever he began to see a little with one eye, returned to the camp before Messina. The Admiral, after a passage of five days, anchored, the 28th, off of the point of the Faro, and, being too weak to go out of his ship, sent his first Captain a-shore to the General, 1719. ral, to acquaint him with his proceedings at Naples; and learning, that he was in great want of powder, ſent him a conſiderable ſupply.

The Imperialiſts having taken the Caſtle of Gonzaga, which ſtands on a hill over the City; and the baſtion of the town, called Secreto, having a conſiderable breach made in it, and the Governor having withdrawn his troops from the town into the citadel, the Senate of Meſſina ſent out Deputies to capitulate upon articles; but the General deſiring to know, whether he was to treat with them as ſubjects of the Emperor, or as enemies; if as the former, he bid them open the gates, and receive his troops, and he would interpoſe his good offices with the Emperor in their favour; but, if he was to treat with them as enemies, they were to get the beſt terms they could for themſelves; and he gave them leave to go back into the town to conſider with their principals about it. They returned the ſame evening, and told the General, that the next morning, as ſoon as it was day, they would open the gates, and rely on the Emperor's clemency; and accordingly the troops marched on the 8th of Auguſt, N. S. and took poſſeſſion.

The City being taken, the Admiral landed ſome Engliſh grenadiers, who took the tower of the Faro; which opening a free paſſage for his ſhips, he came to an anchor in Paradiſe Road, which the Officers of the Spaniſh men of war in the Mole perceiving, and deſpairing now of getting out to ſea, they unbent their ſails, and unrigged their ſhips, expecting their fate with that of the citadel. This gave the Admiral great eaſe, and inabled him to employ ſhips on other ſervices, which had long attended the blocking up of that port.

It came now to be matter of debate, what was to be done with thoſe ſhips, when the citadel ſhould be taken, and they fall into their hands. Signor Scarampi, General of the King of Sardinia's gallies, firſt ſtarted the queſtion, and claimed the two beſt of ſixty and ſixty-four guns, new ſhips, which had belonged to his Maſter, and were ſeized by the Spaniards in the port of Palermo. He grounded his right on a Convention made at Vienna, the 29th of December, 1718, in which it was ſaid, 'That as to the ſhips belonging to the King of Sardinia, if they be taken in port, they ſhall be reſtored to him: But that this ſhall be referred to Admiral Byng to anſwer.' To this the Admiral replied, 'That, this Convention having been only a ground-work for another to be made at Naples, he could be directed by none but that, which was made in conſequence thereof in April, 1719, between the Viceroy of Naples, the Marquiſs de Breille Miniſter of Sardinia, and himſelf, in which no mention is made of thoſe ſhips; and, as to the reference to his opinion, he did freely declare, he could not think the King of Sardinia had any ſhadow of title to them: That they had been taken by the enemy, and were now fitted out, and armed at their expence, and under their colours: That they would put out to ſea, if he did not hinder them, and attack all Engliſh ſhips they met with; and, if ſtronger, take them; ſo that he could not conſider them in any light, than what they were, the ſhips of an enemy.' Count de Mercy put in his claim for the Emperor, alledging, 'That as thoſe ſhips would be found within the port of a town taken by his Maſter's arms, according to the right of Nations, they belonged to him.' The Admiral 1719.
replied, 'That it was owing to his keeping two ſquadrons on purpoſe, and at a great hazard, to watch and obſerve theſe ſhips, that they were now confined within the port, which if he was to withdraw, they would ſtill be able to go to ſea, and he ſhould have a chance of meeting with and taking them.' But reflecting afterwards with himſelf, that poſſibly the garriſon might capitulate for the ſafe return of thoſe ſhips into Spain, which he was determined never to ſuffer: That, on the other hand, the right of poſſeſſion might breed an inconvenient diſpute among the Princes concerned; and if it ſhould prove, that they did not belong to England, it were better they belonged to no body, he propoſed to Count de Mercy to ſet up a battery, and deſtroy them as they lay in the baſin; who urging, that he had no orders concerning thoſe ſhips, and muſt write to Vienna for inſtructions about it, the Admiral replied with ſome warmth, that he could not want a power to deſtroy every thing, that belonged to the enemy, and inſiſted on it with ſuch firmneſs, that the General, being concerned in intereſt not to carry matters to a diſagreement, cauſed a battery to be erected, notwithſtanding the proteſtations of Scarampi, which in a little time ſunk and deſtroyed them, and completed the ruin of the naval power of Spain.

In five days after the taking of the City, the Imperialiſts obliged the Caſtles of Caſtellazzo and Matagriffone to ſurrender; and, being thus become maſters of all the caſtles and eminencies about the City, they applied themſelves to the ſiege of the Citadel, where from the ſtrength of the place, the numerous and well-provided garriſon, and the great reputation of the Governor, they were ſure to meet with a very warm and vigorous reſiſtance, and the more, as the Germans were ill provided with neceſſaries for ſuch an undertaking.

On the 13th of Auguſt, N. S. the Count de Ligneville arrived in the Camp from Vienna with the good news of the Emperor's having diſpatched orders to the Governor of Milan to ſend his troops, which lay in the Milaneſe, and were deſigned for Sardinia, down to Vado, in order to be tranſported into Sicily. He brought a gracious letter from the Emperor to the Admiral, wherein he ſignified to him 'his approbation of a project, that was the effect of his zeal and activity; the ſatisfaction he had in his wiſe conduct, and for his love and attachment to his Imperial perſon and auguſt houſe; and on all occaſions he ſhould give him marks of his affection and eſteem, and of his good remembrance of the ſervices he had done him.'

The tranſportation of the troops from Genoa to Sicily was a ſervice of ſuch moment, and diſpatch in it ſo neceſſary, that the Admiral determined to conduct that affair himſelf, well knowing from his experience of the ſlowneſs of the Germans in all their undertakings, how much his weight and credit were neceſſary to give their motions that quickneſs, which their affairs required; and having intimated his reſolution to Count de Mercy of paſſing over to Naples, and from thence to Genoa for that purpoſe, he prayed the Admiral to repreſent plainly his wants to the Government of Naples; which no body knew or underſtood better than himſelf, and, giving him a liſt of what particulars he wanted, added jocoſely,

1719. jocoſely, 'That, as the ſiege was a child of his own begetting, he ought to nurſe it, as well for his own ſake, as for the common intereſt.'

The Admiral ſailed the 16th of Auguſt, N. S. and anchored the 23d before Naples, where the Cardinal de Schrottenbach was newly arrived by ſea from Rome in quality of Viceroy. The next day the Admiral went to the palace, and, entering into Conference with the Cardinal, repreſented to him, 'how much the army had ſuffered from the diviſions of the Government during the Interregnum. That the ſiege they were employed in was a deciſive point, on which the fate of the Iſland depended;' and ſetting before him the evil conſequences, that would attend a miſcarriage by the want of neceſſary ſupplies from his Government, he put into his hands a liſt of particulars he had received from the General. The Cardinal was an honeſt good-natured man, and very willing to forward buſineſs, but had no great talents for it. His high quality had advanced him to the purple, being Lord of a principality in Bohemia, with ſome marks of Sovereignty. He was appointed to manage the Emperor's affairs at Rome, after the departure of Count Gallas, and, at his death, ſucceeded him in his Government. He told the Admiral, 'That, by the accounts he had received from the proper Officers, there was not in the ſtores the quantity of cannon and ammunition, which the General demanded: That he would ſend to Mantua for cannon, which might be tranſported down the Po into the Adriatic, and ſo on by ſea to Meſſina, where poſſibly, if no croſs accidents happened, they might arrive in two months time.' The Admiral coming to know, that thoſe cannon had no carriages, the Cardinal thought he ſatisfied that objection, by ſaying, 'he would ſend ſome carpenters into the woods of Abruzzo to cut down timber for carriages.' Thoſe and the like unſoldierlike propoſals gave the Admiral a ſenſible regret of the loſs of Count Daun, in whoſe room he found himſelf co-operating with a Viceroy better qualified for his breviary than for council in operations of war, and whoſe Court was crouded with Monks and Prieſts, and ſuch like diſagreeable objects, inſtead of men of buſineſs and ſervice (1).

The Admiral perceiving, that the army had no reſource, but what lay in himſelf, generouſly ſent them twenty-four pieces of cannon of eighteen pounders, belonging to the Spaniſh prizes, and a proportionable quantity of powder and ſhot, contenting himſelf with the ſingle credit of the General for repayment to the captors, and at the ſame time wrote to Genoa and Leghorn, to purchaſe one thouſand barrels more of powder, engaging his own ſecurity to the Britiſh Conſuls for their repayment. 1719.

During theſe tranſactions, a number of tranſports having been provided at Naples, the Admiral ſent them under a convoy to Vado, and, having diſpatched his other affairs with the Cardinal, departed after them, and arrived at Genoa the 7th of September, N. S.

He had been made to believe, that, by the time of his arrival there, the army would be ready to imbark; but he found every thing in extreme backwardneſs. The troops had not ſo much as begun their march from the Milaneſe, nor could get to Vado in leſs than a fortnight: Very few proviſions or neceſſaries had been bought up, and none ſhipped, nor were the tranſport-veſſels properly fitted for the reception of the troops. Count de Bonneval, who was to command this body, arriving the next day, went on board the Admiral, and underſtanding that he intended to tranſport his army to Melazzo, and even to Meſſina, if Count Merci ſhould think it neceſſary, he was mortified to the laſt degree. He had been appointed to command theſe forces on the intended expedition to Sardinia, and the diverting them to a different ſervice ſo diſguſted him, that, inſtead of forwarding the imbarkation of the troops, he reſolved to retard it all he could. Accordingly, whilſt the Admiral gave himſelf incredible pains at Genoa and Vado, to quicken their departure, he threw in the way all the ſecret obſtructions he could, till he knew the iſſue of the ſollicitations he was carrying on at Vienna, to be continued in a ſeparate command. However, the Admiral after twenty days labour and pains, and at laſt ſuch menaces as even Bonneval himſelf began to be afraid of the Admiral, ſhipped off the troops to the number of about ſix thouſand, on the 27th of September, N. S. with ſuch proviſions as could be got, and, leaving a man of war to convoy the remainder when ready, ſailed the 28th from Vado (2). The Admiral receiving letters in his paſſage, from Count de Mercy, requeſting,

(1) The Viceroy returned the next day the Admiral's viſit, and, upon conſidering the ſeveral points in the General's demands, the ſame difficulties recurred about complying with them, eſpecially as to the cannon and ammunition. The Viceroy ſaid, 'he would ſummon all the general Officers in town, and conſult with them about finding out expedients to ſatisfy the wants of the army, which was all that was in his power to do.' Upon which the Admiral deſired his eminence, 'That, after they had attended him, and taken thoſe matters into conſideration, he might have a Conferrence with them.' Accordingly the next day the general Officers came to the Admiral's houſe, and entering into converſation together, upon the particulars of the General's demands, which lay before them, the articles relating to corn and recruits were ſoon got over; but the main difficulty was the demand of cannon and ammunition. The Admiral told them, 'That Count de Mercy had not above twenty cannon in battery: That he was within two hundred paces of the counterſcarp of the citadel; and hoped he ſhould not be forced to ſtop in ſo fair a way, for want of neceſſary ſupplies; and that he would be contented, if they could ſend him but ten or twelve cannon from Naples, with a proportionable quantity of powder and ball.' The Officer of the ordnance attending gave in a liſt of eight cannon, which he ſaid might be taken from the mole and batteries of the City, and ſent to Meſſina; but, upon enquiry, they appeared to be of fifty and ſixty pounders, ſome without ball, others without carriages, all of them too unwieldy and unfit for battery. He then delivered in to them a ſtate of all the ordnance ſtores in the Kingdom; upon examining of which the general Officers unanimouſly confeſſed, that the whole Country was not able to furniſh the cannon and ammunition, which Count de Mercy wanted. This was ſuch a declaration of weakneſs, as was not to be expected in ſo fine a Kingdom.

(2) Bonneval, finding his troops incorporated with the army, and his projects of a ſeparate command vaniſhed, pretended ſickneſs, and, getting leave to go to Reggio for advice, he repaired to Vienna, and returned

1719. queſting, that the troops might not land at Melazzo, but go on to Meſſina, he ſtood away for the Faro, and arrived before Meſſina, the 8th of October, N. S. which ſo elevated the ſpirits of the army, that, upon the firſt ſight of the fleet, Lieutenant-General Wallis, with five thouſand men, made a vigorous attack upon the half-moon, which was neareſt to their approaches, and carried it with the loſs of only one hundred and three killed, and eight hundred and thirty wounded. The Admiral, going aſhore to the General's quarters, was embraced by him, and all the general Officers, with the moſt tender marks of affection and gratulation, the whole army being overjoyed to ſee a man, who always brought them relief and ſucceſs, and every good, that attended them. On the 17th at ten in the morning, the Imperialiſts aſſaulted the counterſcarp, and mounted to the top of the breach with great gallantry; but, after two hours very warm work, were repulſed with the loſs of one hundred and twenty men killed, and ſix hundred and ſeventeen wounded. The Governor having acquitted himſelf with great honour in this repulſe, as well as in the general defence of the place, and finding himſelf unable to hold it longer, beat a parley the next day, and ſurrendered it upon articles. The Spaniſh garriſon marched out through the breach, and were tranſported by ſea to Auguſta. Thus ended a ſiege of twenty-one days, which coſt the Germans above five thouſand men killed or wounded.

Meſſina ſurrenders to the Imperialiſts.

Whilſt the ſiege of the Citadel was depending, the Spaniſh army decamped from Franca Villa, the 31ſt of Auguſt, and, marching towards Rametta, the Marquiſs de Lede gave out, that he would attack the Imperialiſts, and appeared upon the hills in ſight of the camp, attended by a great number of peaſants he had drawn together; but finding it well guarded, and his army being ſickly, he fortified a ſtrong and advantageous poſt at Caſtro Giovane, in the center of the Iſland, where he laid in large magazines, in order to retire thither in caſe of neceſſity; and in the mean time cantoned his troops about Aderno, Palermo, and Catanea (1).

The Imperialiſts having ſpent ſome time in levelling the lines, trenches, and batteries before Meſſina, and in putting the place into a poſture of defence, they held ſeveral Conſultations, at which the Admiral aſſiſted, concerning what meaſures were next to be taken. The reduction of Meſſina had brought Val Demona under the obedience of the Emperor; but the whole Province, being mountainous and barren, was ſo little able to ſupply the army with proviſions and forage, that the inhabitants of Meſſina and other towns daily petitioned the General for their own ſubſiſtance, ſince they could draw no corn, as they uſed to do, from the plentiful parts of the Iſland, which were in the poſſeſſion of the Spaniards. To march after the enemy in a wintry ſeaſon, with their horſe already harraſſed, and almoſt ſtarved, through an adverſe Country, and without any proviſions but what they carried; and, if they ſurmounted all theſe difficulties, to attack them in the ſtrong camp of Caſtro Giovane, was judged too raſh to be attempted, after the experience of Franca Villa. To march to Palermo, and get poſſeſſion of the Capital, was more deſirable than eaſy of execution. It was a march of ſeventeen days, along the northern coaſt of the Iſland, through an unknown, mountainous, ſterile Country, where they ſhould be expoſed to ſudden inſults, great part of the way being ſo narrow, that two men could hardly go a-breaſt; and, if they met with no enemy, they had no forage for their horſe, no magazines in the way of their march, nor a ſufficient number of beaſts of burthen to carry proviſions along with them, nor money to buy them, if they could be got. The next project, that occurred, was to go to Trapani, where the Piedmonteſe had a garriſon. This would be changing the ſcene of the war to great advantage; for, inſtead of being confined and famiſhed in the mountains, they ſhould be able to inlarge themſelves in a plentiful Country, and, by acting on equal terms with the enemy, have a reaſonable chance to drive them out of the Iſland. But to go thither by land was impracticable; and, as their tranſport-veſſels could not carry above a third part of the army no more to the army. He was a native of France, and had all the ſprightlineſs and levity of that Nation. He was a gallant Officer, had received many wounds, and ſtill feels the painful remembrance of a moſt terrible one he got in Hungary. He had no zeal for the ſervice of his Prince, any farther than it ſuited his own intereſt or ambition, to which he willingly ſacrificed his duty. Corbet.

1719.

---

(1) It was during this ſiege, that the Admiral having received information, that veſſels belonging to Malta had gone to ſea with Spaniſh Commiſſions, and taken ſome Engliſh Merchant-ſhips, ſent a letter to the Grand Maſter, 'complaining of his partiality and injuſtice, demanding ſatisfaction for the damages the Merchants had ſuſtained, and his giving ſtrict orders to prohibit the like unfair proceedings for the future.' He wrote, at the ſame time, to Mr. Alexander Young, the Engliſh Conſul at Malta, to make a ſtrict inquiry what Merchant-ſhips had been taken by Privateers fitted out from Malta, or wherein Malteſe ſubjects had been concerned, and to lay a ſtate thereof before that Government, with a demand of reparation, and to let him know their anſwer. The Grand Maſter and his Council, being alarmed at this meſſage, ſent the Chevalier Balbini to the Admiral, to repreſent and excuſe the proceedings of their Government in the points complained of, and to lay before him the difficulties they were under, from their dependance on Spain, and to endeavour to remove all cauſes of his diſſatisfaction with them. But the Admiral, not having yet received any ſpecific account of the particular loſſes of the Merchants, and ſo not able to ſettle the terms of reſtitution with Balbini, ſent his firſt Captain, Saunders, with two men of war, to Malta, directing him 'to make an exact inquiry into the ſeveral captures, that had been made, and to lay the ſame before the Grand Maſter and his Council, and to demand reparation, ſo far as their ſubjects had been concerned therein; and, in caſe he found them willing to give reaſonable aſſurances of doing juſtice for what was paſt, and of a better behaviour for the future, he was to enter into a Convention with them for that purpoſe, and for eſtabliſhing a good agreement with them; but, otherwiſe, he was to take all ſhips and veſſels he ſhould meet with belonging to that Iſland.' Captain Saunders, arriving at Malta, found a fair diſpoſition in thoſe people to give the Admiral and the Engliſh Nation all reaſonable ſatisfaction in their proceedings. They ſhewed, 'That they had never conſented to, or approved of their ſubjects entering into the ſervice of Spain, but had iſſued ſtrict proclamations, prohibiting them to be any ways concerned on either ſide in the war. They did not deny, that one of their veſſels had taken a Commiſſion from the Marquiſs de Lede, to cruiſe upon the enemies of Spain,

19. army at a time, the diviſion of their troops was hazardous, and might be fatal. For, Trapani being ſituated on an Iſthmus, and having no magazines of corn, the Marquiſs de Lede might march, and pen up the firſt detachment within that narrow neck of land, where they would ſtarve for want of proviſions, before the reſt of the army could join them. The only choice remaining was to go to Syracuſa; but that too was impracticable by land, by reaſon of the ſame objections, as are already mentioned; and beſides, there lay in the way ſeveral deep and rapid rivers, where the enemy might defend the paſſages with great advantage. And, though it was not difficult to tranſport the army thither by ſea, yet it was an uncomfortable reflection, that they ſhould be then the whole length of the Iſland diſtant from Palermo, and could only propoſe to ſubſiſt themſelves from day to day during the winter, the enemy lying between them and the great Caricatori, or ſubterraneous magazines, where the inhabitants uſually lay up their corn, which were ninety miles diſtant. With theſe diſagreeable proſpects they paſt away ſome days under uncertainty what to do; when, one evening, the Generals Mercy and Zumjungen repairing on board the Admiral, and renewing the ſubject of their late Conferences, they told him, in a very deſponding manner, 'That, having thoroughly weighed the ſituation of their affairs, and finding they could neither ſubſiſt nor undertake any action where they were, they had come to a reſolution to leave a ſtrong garriſon in Meſſina, and tranſport the horſe over by ſea to Calabria, and the foot to Syracuſa, where they might be able to maintain themſelves during the winter, and be ready to make uſe of ſuch advantages as might offer, for acting againſt the enemy in the ſpring; and prayed his aſſiſtance in that ſervice.' The Admiral replied, 'That he hoped, their affairs were not ſo deſperate, as they apprehended: That he had been employing his thoughts for their ſervice, and believed he ſhould be able to extricate them out of their preſent circumſtances: That, of all the late propoſitions, the tranſporting the army to Trapani pleaſed him beſt, as it would turn the difficulty upon the Spaniſh army, by obliging them to make uneaſy marches, and to keep the field in the winter. That, when the whole army was at Trapani, they ſhould be able to inlarge their quarters; the granaries of corn would fall into their hands, and their neighbourhood to Palermo keep that place in awe, till the ſeaſon ſhould favour their marching towards it, the reduction of which would bring the war to a ſpeedy iſſue. That he had conſidered of the difficulty of ſubſiſting one part of the army at Trapani, till the reſt arrived; and, as England was in peace with the Governments of Barbary, he would ſend his Secretary to Tunis, which was the neareſt African port to Trapani, and employ him, and the Engliſh Conſul, to buy up whatever quantity of corn was neceſſary, and tranſport the ſame to Trapani. That he knew very well they had no money, and therefore would employ his own caſh, and credit, to procure this Supply, depending upon their honour for repayment, and did not doubt to lodge the corn at Trapani, before the firſt detachment of troops arrived there.' Count de Mercy, penetrating immediately into the facility, and advantageous conſequences of this ſcheme, roſe up, and, embracing the Admiral in a kind of tranſport, acknowledged, 'That he had hit on the only method practicable, not only for the preſervation of the army, but even for puſhing on the war with ſucceſs. That, as it was a Proteſtant ſcheme, he ſhould have Proteſtant troops, and Proteſtant Generals to put it in execution.' And accordingly General Zumjungen, with Count Seckendorf, the Prince of Heſſe, and General Schmettau, imbarked the 23d of November, with ſeven thouſand foot, and five hundred horſe, and arrived fortunately in three days at Trapani, where finding a plentiful remittance of corn ready arrived from Tunis, they not only poſted themſelves there in ſecurity, but, inlarging their quarters into the Country, brought the Cities of Marſala and Mazzara to ſubmit to the obedience of the Emperor. The tranſports and convoy, returning, brought thither more troops. Count de Mercy 1719.

Spain, but made appear, that they had ſent one of their order to intreat him to revoke that Commiſſion, and had made the ſame application to the Court of Madrid, but had been anſwered with great roughneſs and menaces. That, to avoid as much as they could all occaſions of complaint, they had called in all their Privateers, which had been cruiſing in the Levant againſt the Turks, in order to diſarm them; but they could not always govern the unrulineſs of their people, when they would enter into the ſervice of any Chriſtian Prince, whoſe colours protected them from their inquiry or viſitation, which was the misfortune of their Conſtitution, as they depended upon the Chriſtian Princes of Europe for their revenue, and, in particular, drew at that time their daily ſuſtenance of proviſions from that part of Sicily, which was under the ſubjection of the Spaniſh General; and, finally, that they received no part or benefit from the prizes, which had paſſed intirely through the hands of the Spaniſh Agent, and in which they had no manner of intereſt or concern.' The Captain was convinced of the ſincerity and truth of their declaration; but, on the other hand, told them, 'That it was not his buſineſs to inquire into the nature or dependance of their Government; and it was for them to accommodate their grievances with Spain as they could. That his inſtructions were plain, and founded in juſtice, demanding redreſs for the loſſes his Countrymen had ſuſtained, from thoſe, who occaſioned them, who were their ſubjects; and that, if they would not enter into a Negotiation for that purpoſe, he ſhould be obliged to put his orders in execution.' Intimidated by theſe threats, they immediately appointed two Commiſſaries to treat with him; and it being made out by proof, that five Engliſh Merchant-ſhips had been taken by Malteſe ſhips under Spaniſh colours, they ſubmitted to pay the full value of them and their lading, within twelve months after application from the Claimants. But thinking themſelves aggrieved by this treaty, and proteſting themſelves to be under a force to ſign any terms, rather than feel the effects of the Admiral's diſpleaſure, they reſerved to themſelves a liberty of appealing to the equity of the Admiral, and from him to the King, for a mitigation of the ſeverity of the conditions. They diſpatched away, accordingly, the Chevalier de la Val to the Admiral, who not thinking he had any right to compound for other men's properties, the Deputy paſſed on to the Engliſh Court at London, to execute his Commiſſion. He had likewiſe a private inſtruction, to implore the King's intereſt with the ſeveral Princes at the approaching Congreſs, that Malta might be freed from its ſubjection to Sicily, and enjoy the rights and privileges of a free and neutral port in time of war, among the Chriſtian powers.

1719. Mercy and the Admiral departing with the laſt convoy from Meſſina, on the 19th of January, conſiſting of five thouſand four hundred foot, and eleven hundred horſe, they were overtaken by a violent ſtorm off the Iſle of Alicudi, which drove all the tranſports into Melazzo and Meſſina, the Admiral, with the General on board his ſhip, getting with difficulty to Trapani, on the 29th, but the whole convoy did not arrive there till the 2d of March, many ſoldiers dying in the paſſage, and amongſt them General Wachtendonck, regretted by every body. The whole army, being got together, amounted to fourteen thouſand foot, and three thouſand horſe, beſides the garriſons left in Meſſina, Melazzo, Syracuſa, and the adjacent parts.

Theſe motions of the Imperialiſts made the Marquiſs de Lede quit the poſts of Mola, Taormina, and Catania, and leaving a detachment in his ſtrong camp at Caſtro Giovane, to ſecure the magazines he had erected there, he marched and fixed his camp from Alcamo to Salama, with his head quarters at Caſtel Vetrano, from whence he continually ſent out detachments to deſtroy the Country about Marſala and Mazzara, and to carry off all the cattle, grain, and wine, which Zumjungen could not at firſt prevent; but, being ſtrengthened with new ſupplies by ſea, he at laſt obliged their parties to retire, and, on the arrival of Count de Mercy, the Spaniſh General was reduced to fortify his camp with ſtrong intrenchments and redoubts, with batteries of cannon.

Count de Mercy making a motion of extending his quarters beyond Mazzara, the Marquiſs de Lede quitted Caſtel Vetrano, and retired with his army to Alcamo, from whence he ſent his Mareſchal de camp Signor d'Aponte, on the 6th of February, 1719-20, N. S. with overtures to Count de Mercy and the Admiral for evacuating Sicily, on condition of leave to tranſport his army into Spain, and in order thereto deſiring a ſuſpenſion of arms. This propoſition contained nothing diſagreeable to the Germans, who would thereby obtain all they wanted, by becoming maſters of the Kingdom, without any further trouble; but the Admiral proteſting againſt it, and declaring, that not a man of the Spaniſh army ſhould paſs out of that Iſland, until a general peace was made, for that it would be to furniſh Spain with a body of their beſt troops to ſtrengthen their army acting againſt France, or elſe they might be employed in diſturbing England, he was diſmiſſed with this counter-propoſition from the Count de Mercy, that, if the Marquiſs would ſurrender Palermo, and the South-ſide of the Iſland, and retire with his army into the middle of the Country towards Caſtro Giovane, or to any other paſs proper for his ſecurity, he would conſent to a ſuſpenſion of arms for ſix weeks, till the ſentiments of the ſeveral Courts might be known; which being an advantage more than equivalent to the operations of ſix weeks in that early ſeaſon, the Admiral conſented thereto, with this reſtriction, that, if the Spaniards attempted to withdraw any of their men in the mean time, the ſuſpenſion ſhould be void, and he would act againſt them with all his force. Count de Mercy diſpatching Lieutenant-Colonel Bellaire to Vienna, to acquaint that Court with theſe overtures, and bring back their directions, the Admiral ſent away thither his eldeſt ſon Mr. Byng, with inſtructions, if the Imperial Court liſtened to the propoſals of the Spaniſh General, to declare, that his father could never ſuffer any part of the Spaniſh army to depart out of the Iſland, till the King of Spain had acceded to the Quadruple Alliance, or till he received poſitive inſtructions from England for doing ſo. 17

The 12th of February, N. S. Count de Mercy marched towards Caſtel Vetrano, for the more commodious ſubſiſtance of his cavalry, from whence he detached General Seckendorf, with fifteen hundred men, and ſome cannon, to reduce Sacca, where there was a large caricatore of corn. The town immediately ſurrendered, but the Spaniards, to the number of three hundred, retired into the Caſtle.

The Marquiſs de Lede, finding his firſt propoſitions ineffectual, ſent two General Officers, the Marquiſs de San Vicenzo and Signor d'Aponte, to the Imperial camp, the 19th of February, N. S. with inſtructions to treat about the ſurrender of Palermo, and a conſiderable part of the adjacent Country, in conſideration of a ſuſpenſion of arms for three months. But, whilſt the Negotiation was depending, the Marquiſs receiving an expreſs from Madrid, on the 28th, with advice, that a general peace was made, he ſent immediately to break off the treaty. This ſeemed matter of great ſurprize; but the ſecret reaſon was, that Spain was at that time treating with France to reſtore Fontarabia, St. Sebaſtian, and other places taken in the war, and hoped to get in exchange, for the evacuation of Sicily and Sardinia, the reſtitution of thoſe towns, and of Gibraltar, or, at leaſt, to have both the one and the other referred to a Congreſs. Upon this, Count de Mercy gave freſh orders for attacking the Caſtle of Sacca, which had been retarded by the great rains. The Caſtle being battered with four pieces of cannon, and not very ſtrong, ſurrendered, the 6th of March, the garriſon being made priſoners of war. The taking of this place gave great relief to the Imperial army, who found there twenty thouſand ſolms of wheat.

During theſe tranſactions, a Courier diſpatched from Paris by the Earl of Stair, the Britiſh Ambaſſador there, brought the Admiral information, that the Marquiſs de Beretti Landi, the Spaniſh Miniſter at the Hague, had ſigned the Quadruple Alliance the 17th of February, N. S. and he brought likewiſe a packet from that Miniſter to the Marquiſs de Lede, and another from the Emperor's Miniſter to Count de Mercy, to acquaint them therewith. A trumpet was ſent with the Spaniſh Miniſter's packet to the Marquiſs de Lede, and to know his ſentiments thereupon. He returned anſwer, 'That, his Maſter's Miniſter having ſigned the Quadruple Alliance, he looked upon the peace as a thing concluded, and was therefore ready to treat of a ceſſation of hoſtilities by ſea and land, until they ſhould receive farther orders from their reſpective Courts.' To this it was replied by the Admiral and Count de Mercy, 'That, as the evacuation of Sicily and Sardinia was to be performed within two months after the ſaid ſigning, they were ready to conſent to a ſuſpenſion of arms, upon his delivering up the City and Caſtles of Palermo, at which place tranſports would be beſt provided, and other neceſſary meaſures concerted for the tranſportation of their army into Spain.' The Marquiſs returned anſwer, 'That, as he underſtood, the Plenipotentiaries of their Maſters

19. Maſters at the Hague were in treaty for ſettling the terms of evacuating thoſe Iſlands, he did not think himſelf authorized to agree to a ceſſation on any other condition, than that each party ſhould remain on the ground they occupied, and expect further orders from their reſpective Principals.'

The diſadvantages ariſing from ſuch an agreement were too obvious to be ſubmitted to; for the men of war and tranſports lay very inconveniently at Trapani, an unſafe road, where they had ſuſtained conſiderable damage, and ſome of the tranſports had been loſt. It was therefore neceſſary to have poſſeſſion of Palermo, as a ſecure retreat for the fleet, and the moſt commodious port for ſhipping off the troops. Beſides, it was a pledge of the ſincerity of the intentions of Spain to evacuate the Iſland. In the next place, it put the Germans under a manifeſt inequality, to be confined to the ground they occupied, while the Spaniards were in poſſeſſion of the principal Caricatori of corn, and plundered and rifled at pleaſure a Country they were ſoon to leave. Nor could they comprehend, how an enemy, who, ſix weeks before, offered to leave the whole Iſland, on condition of being ſent back into Spain, ſhould now ſcruple to ſurrender Palermo; and therefore, as it had the appearance of chicaning, they reſolved to go on with the operations of the war. But, before they proceeded to action, they agreed to ſend a joint letter to the Marquiſs, propoſing an interview between them at the Caſſine de Roſſignola, halfway between the two armies, where accordingly they met the 2d of April, N. S. at noon, with an eſcorte of two hundred horſe on each ſide. In the Conference the Marquiſs de Lede owned, 'That he knew the King his Maſter had ſigned the Quadruple Alliance, and did not doubt of his intention to evacuate Sicily; but declared, he had no orders yet about it: That he expected full powers and inſtructions ſoon, and wiſhed they would, in the mean time, come to a ceſſation of arms.' He was asked, 'What propoſals he had to make for that purpoſe?' He anſwered, 'None, but that both armies might hold the Country, that was in their poſſeſſion, until he received orders to treat about the evacuation.' Count de Mercy thinking it unreaſonable to be tied down to a ſmall tract of the Country, where he could not ſubſiſt, asked him, 'Whether, in caſe they ſhould conſent to his keeping poſſeſſion of Palermo, he had power to deliver up Auguſta, and the other poſts they held on that ſide of the Iſland, which were now of no uſe to him, but it would be rather a conveniency to him to draw away the garriſons and troops he had in thoſe parts, to join his army, in order to the intended evacuation?' He confeſſed, 'He could not give up, nor quit the poſſeſſion of any part he had of the Iſland, until he received further orders from his Maſter;' and read part of his inſtructions to them. Count de Mercy, on the other ſide, ſhewed him part of the Emperor's orders, which directed him 'to agree to a ſuſpenſion of arms, in order to the evacuation of Sicily and Sardinia, and to concert with the Marquiſs de Lede the neceſſary conditions for facilitating the ſame, and to adjuſt that affair by all reaſonable meaſures: But that, if the Marquiſs de Lede ſhould not own his having orders, or endeavour to evade them, and gain time, by pretending to ſend to Madrid for farther inſtructions, and not name a reaſonable time for beginning to imbark part of his troops, in that caſe he was to make uſe of his arms to oblige him to execute the treaty, which the Spaniſh Miniſter had ſigned at the Hague.' He farther told the Marquiſs, that the 17th of April was underſtood to be the time they ſhould go upon the evacuation; but, if it was not poſſible for him to begin ſo ſoon, he would not differ about a few days, provided they entered now into ſome agreement about the manner of doing it. He offered him the tranſports he had in his ſervice, and aſſured him, that he ſhould be accommodated with proviſions, and every thing he could in reaſon demand. The Admiral, on his part, gave him the like aſſurances, and that he ſhould be eſcorted by as many of his Maſter's ſhips, as he ſhould deſire. The Marquiſs owned, that all they ſaid was reaſonable; but, complaining of the want of orders, the Conference broke off, without coming to any iſſue. At parting, the Marquiſs deſired the Admiral to releaſe the Biſhop of Mazzara, who was his priſoner, which the Admiral readily conſented to. 1719.

During theſe debates, one of the Engliſh ſhips, cruiſing off Palermo, took a Felucca, ſent by Cardinal Aquaviva from Rome, with packets of letters from Spain, to the Marquiſs de Lede, which he delivered to the Admiral; who, ſeeing the King of Spain's ſeal to the letters, generouſly ſent them unopened to the Marquiſs, and ſet the Felucca and Crew at liberty.

The Conference being broken off, the Admiral returned to the fleet at Trapani, and Count de Mercy, reſolving to attack the Spaniards, marched towards Alcamo, where he arrived the 8th of April, N. S. the Marquiſs having retreated the night before with precipitation, leaving ſome ſick men behind, whom he could not carry away. The Marquiſs incamped at Valguernera and Sala di Partenico; but, fearing to be followed by the Imperialiſts, he retired on to Monreale. The retreat of the Spaniards made Count de Mercy reſolve on the ſiege of Palermo; in order to which he ſent Colonel Baron Neyperg to confer with the Admiral about the neceſſary aſſiſtance to be given by the fleet in facilitating the march of the army towards that place, by coaſting along with the proviſions and neceſſaries they ſhould want in their march, as well as in the ſiege, and ſupplying them with cannon and ammunition for that enterprize. The neceſſary diſpoſitions being concerted between the army and fleet, the Count decamped from Alcamo the 18th of April, N. S. and followed the Marquiſs de Lede, who, retreating towards Monreale, kept poſſeſſion of that and other advantageous poſts, which led into the plains before Palermo, fortifying at the ſame time a ſtrong paſs by the ſea-ſide, called Sferra Cavallo, which was another way between the ſea-ſhore and the mountains into the ſame plain. Count de Mercy being arrived at Sala di Partenico, and not judging it adviſeable to attempt the paſſes, which the enemy poſſeſſed on the road of Monreale, he divided his army into two bodies, ſending General Zumjungen, with all his cavalry (except the Huſſars, and a regiment of Dragoons) and ſeven battalions of foot, with the artillery and baggage, to the ſea-ſide, with orders to force the paſs of Sferra Cavallo, and enter that way into the plain of Palermo, whilſt he himſelf with the reſt of the army aſcended the difficult mountains about Carini, in order to 1719. get down that way into the ſame plain, judging, that, if the Marquiſs drew his army to defend the paſs of Sferra Cavallo, he ſhould get between him and Palermo, or, at leaſt, have the advantage of falling upon his rear. The Count having gained the heights of the mountains, from whence are diſcovered the Plain and City of Palermo, perceived the Spaniſh army incamped in the bottom, intending to obſtruct his deſcent, and occupying all the paſſes in the way. Here Count de Mercy ſent to Zumjungen to rejoin him, which he did by the aſſiſtance of guides, provided by the Magiſtrates of Carini, leaving a detachment under the command of Colonel Baron de Witgenau, to convoy the artillery and baggage by the way of the ſea-ſide, who, arriving at the paſs of Sferra Cavallo, found it abandoned by the Spaniards. On the 21ſt, the Germans began to deſcend from the mountains, and, forcing the ſeveral paſſes with leſs oppoſition than was expected, were almoſt all got down before night to the bottom. The whole was a moſt difficult and fatiguing march, through ways, that the inhabitants themſelves had rarely practiſed, but which the Count ſurmounted with great expedition and military judgment.

The Admiral coaſting along, in conformity to the motions of the army, came to an anchor with the fleet the 20th, in Mondello-Bay, and ſent ſome of his ſoldiers to take poſſeſſion of a tower on the point, and another at the landing-place, as alſo three caſſines, that ſtood between, in order to preſerve their communication. On the 22d, the Marquiſs de Lede ſent Colonel Lacy, his Aid de Camp, with a letter to the Admiral, incloſing a Spaniſh Gazette, wherein was publiſhed the treaty of ſuſpenſion of arms at ſea, concluded at the Hague between the Miniſters of Great-Britain, France, and Spain, which was to take place on the 10th inſtant; and therefore he propoſed to the Admiral, 'to come to an agreement with him, for a ſeparate ceſſation of hoſtilities, as they had both full powers for that purpoſe; and proteſted againſt any violences he ſhould commit, contrary to the plain inſtructions of their Sovereigns.' This ſnare, laid to ſeparate the Admiral from the German army, had no effect, the Admiral returning anſwer, 'That he could give no regard or credit to a pretended Convention, publiſhed in a foreign news-paper, and even in which there was a clauſe, that nothing in it ſhould derogate from what ſhould be agreed between him and the Marquiſs, for what concerns the Mediterranean Sea. That, as the Spaniſh Miniſter had ſigned the Quadruple Alliance ever ſince the 17th of February laſt, it was ſurpriſing, that in all this time the Marquiſs had received no orders for treating about the evacuation of the Iſland, which was the neceſſary conſequence of it, but that he ſtill maintained every point and poſt with the ſame zeal and ardour, as before his Maſter's Acceſſion to the Alliance. That the time for beginning the evacuation was elapſed; and therefore, without ſome reaſonable ſecurity, that he really intended it, he could come into no agreement for a ſuſpenſion of arms; but, whenever he ſhould be impowered to treat for both, he would moſt gladly go more than half-way to meet him, and not only agree on ſuch meaſures, as might put an end to the preſent differences, but which might reſtore and cultivate a good underſtanding, which no body more ardently wiſhed for, than he did.' This was an adventurous proceeding in the Admiral; for his inſtructions from England directed him to come to a ſuſpenſion of arms with Spain, without ſtaying for ſettling the terms of evacuation, which might take up time. But his penetration ſhewed him, that, if a ſuſpenſion took place at ſea, the Spaniards might introduce what ſuccours and troops they pleaſed into the Iſland, which would unravel all they had been doing; and, if any interruption happened in the Negotiations on foot, put the Spaniards in a better ſtate of proſecuting the war, and perhaps protract it another year. Their late conduct had made him jealous of their artifices, ſeeing them lay hold of every advantage to evade the evacuation of the Iſland, which this ſeparation would encourage, and render the way to peace more diſtant and difficult. He determined therefore, as the Convention for a ceſſation of arms at ſea, ſigned at the Hague the 29th of February, N. S. left him at liberty of treating as he thought proper, to remain united to the Germans, which, he prudently ſaw, was the quickeſt way to bring the Spaniards to a compliance, and to come into real meaſures for the evacuation of the Iſland. The event juſtified his precaution, and his conduct received at home the approbation it deſerved. 1719.

The march of the Imperialiſts had made the Spaniards change the ſituation of their camp, which they pitched acroſs the plain before Palermo, extending their left to Monte Caputo, and their right to the ſea near the mole of Palermo, the whole army being under the cannon of that City, and having ſtrong intrenchments before them, lined with forty pieces of cannon. They were provided with plenty of all things, and ſeemed determined to ſtand the fate of a battle. The Germans incamped on the ſame plain, in the front of the enemy, and within a mile and a half diſtance, with their right at the foot of the mountains, from whence they had deſcended, and their left reaching to Monte Pelegrino, near the ſea-ſide, the artillery and baggage being arrived in their camp by the way of Sferra Cavallo. Count de Mercy ſeeing himſelf ſtraitened in room, and under difficulty of ſubſiſting, whilſt the enemy plundered and inriched themſelves with the ſpoils of a Country they were quickly to abandon, he determined to bring matters to an engagement as ſoon as poſſible. In order to it, his ſcheme was to endeavour to get poſſeſſion of the mole, by which means he ſhould flank the enemy, and oblige them either to come to a battle with diſadvantage, or elſe to retire to Termini. For this purpoſe he detached Baron Neyperg on the 26th, with ſix companies of Grenadiers, to diſlodge the enemy from ſome poſts, which they had fortified on the ſea-ſide; and, to facilitate the ſame, ſent Baron de Witgenau, with ſix other companies of Grenadiers, to ſeize on Monte Pelegrino. At the ſame time the Admiral detaching three ſhips, to cannonade the poſts on the ſea-ſide, their fire made the Spaniards abandon them, and the Imperialiſts took poſſeſſion of them without any loſs. Theſe advantages confirmed Count de Mercy in his reſolution to puſh his point that way; and, having made the neceſſary diſpoſitions, the next day he cauſed to be attacked a Caſſine, that ſtood a little diſtance from the enemy's trenches, but ſtrongly fortified with lines, and ſome cannon, drawing out his whole army at the ſame time in order of battle,

719. battle, in caſe the enemy ſhould come out of their camp to ſupport it. The lines were ſoon taken, but the Caſſine was not carried till after a very vigorous defence of above an hour, wherein the Germans had about one hundred and forty men killed or wounded; among the former a Prince of Anhalt, and Lieutenant-General Seckendorf wounded in the ſhoulders. On the 2d of May, about two in the afternoon, the weather being very hot, and the Spaniſh guard taking a Sieſto, according to the cuſtom of that Nation, the Germans ſurprized a redoubt near the enemy's lines, entering the ſame without firing a ſhot, and puſhing the Spaniards out with their bayonnets in their pieces. The Marquiſs de Lede, being informed of it, roſe from table, and ordered the army to be immediately drawn out, in order to retake that fortification, which commanded the whole line of the camp. On the other hand, Count de Mercy being determined to maintain his hold, both armies were in motion, and juſt on the point of engaging, when fortunately a courier arriving in the very inſtant from Spain, in a Felucca, delivered to the Marquiſs a packet, containing full powers from the King of Spain to treat and agree about the evacuation of the Iſlands of Sicily and Sardinia, and the tranſportation of the army into Spain. The Marquiſs upon this drew off his army, and ſent letters by a trumpet to the General and Admiral, to inform them of his orders. The next morning early, the Admiral repairing to the German camp, Officers were appointed on each ſide to treat of the ſuſpenſion of arms, and to regulate the manner of evacuating both Iſlands; and Conventions were drawn up for that purpoſe, and ſigned that for Sicily on the 6th of May, and that for Sardinia two days after.

In purſuance of theſe Conventions, the Germans were put in poſſeſſion of Palermo and the Citadel of Caſtelamare the 10th, and the Spaniſh army marched to Termini, a ſea-port, about twenty-five miles diſtant, from whence the firſt imbarkation conſiſting of about twelve thouſand foot, and ſix hundred horſe, ſailed the 20th of June, for Barcelona, and the remainder arrived at the ſame place the 25th of Auguſt following. 1719.

Nothing now remained to be done, but to put the Duke of Savoy in poſſeſſion of the Iſland of Sardinia: In order to which four battalions of Piedmonteſe troops imbarked at Palermo, under the command of Baron St. Remi, and ſailed under the convoy of ſome Engliſh men of war to Cagliari, where the Admiral arriving as ſoon as he had ſettled all affairs in Sicily, he aſſiſted at the Conferences with the Miniſters and Generals of the ſeveral powers concerned, wherein was regulated the manner of ſurrendering the Iſland by the Spaniſh Viceroy to the Emperor, and the ceſſion of the ſame from the Emperor to the Duke of Savoy; and, at the inſtance of this Prince, the Admiral did not depart, till he had ſeen the whole fully executed, the Spaniſh troops returned into Spain, and the Duke of Savoy put into quiet poſſeſſion of his new Kingdom.

Thus ended the war of Sicily, wherein the fleet of Great-Britain bore ſo illuſtrious a part, that the fate of the Iſland was wholly governed by its operations, both competitors agreeing, that the one could not have conquered, nor the other have been ſubdued, without it. Never was any ſervice conducted in all its parts with greater zeal, activity, and judgment; nor was ever the Britiſh flag in ſo high reputation and reſpect in thoſe diſtant parts of Europe (1).

Progreſs of the French againſt Spain.

During theſe tranſactions in the Mediterranean, the French army, under the command of the Duke of Berwick, advancing to the frontiers of Spain, took Fort-Paſſage, where they deſtroyed ſix men of war on the ſtocks. Then the Duke formed the ſiege of Fonterabia, which was taken the 5th of June. The King of Spain made an unſucceſsful attempt to relieve the place, and approached

(1) As this Hiſtory will not go down ſo low as the Admiral's death, it may not be improper to inſert here what Mr. Corbet ſays of him: King George, who had named him for the expedition to Sicily, and knew his abilities, uſed to ſay to his Miniſters, when they applied for inſtructions to be ſent to him for his guidance, on certain important occaſions, that he would ſend him none, for he knew how to act without any; and indeed, all the meaſures he took abroad were ſo exact and juſt, as to ſquare with the councils and plan of policy at home. The cauſe of the Emperor being become the cauſe of his Maſter, he ſerved the intereſts of that Prince with a zeal and fidelity, that ſtood a pattern to his own ſubjects. He lived in ſuch harmony with the Imperial Viceroys and Generals, as has been ſeldom ſeen among fellow-ſubjects united in command, the want of which has proved the ruin of many important expeditions. He was incapable of performing his duty in a cold or negligent manner; and, when any ſervice was committed to his management, he devoted his whole time and application to it; nor could any fatigue or indiſpoſition of body ever divert or interrupt his attention from any point that required preſent diſpatch. To this it might be in great meaſure owing, that he was never unfortunate in any undertaking, nor miſcarried in any ſervice that was entruſted to his direction. For whoever will trace upwards, to the ſprings and cauſes of public or private events, ſhall find (except where the immediate finger of Providence is viſible) that what is uſually called ill-luck, is generally the effect of negligence, or imprudence. He always proceeded upon ſolid principles, and left nothing to fortune, that could be accompliſhed by foreſight and application. His firmneſs and plain dealing were ſo apparent to the foreigners, who treated with him upon buſineſs, that it contributed much to the diſpatch and ſucceſs of his tranſactions with them; for they could depend upon what he ſaid, and as they ſaw he uſed no arts or chicanes himſelf, and had too diſcerning a ſpirit to ſuffer them to paſs unobſerved in others, they often found it their beſt policy to leave their intereſts in his hands and management, being very ſure of a moſt impartial and punctual performance of whatever he engaged in. His reputation was ſo thoroughly eſtabliſhed in this particular, that in the frequent diſputes and altercations which aroſe between the Savoyards and Germans in the courſe of the war, and between the latter and the Spaniards at the concluſion of it, wherein little faith or confidence was given to the promiſes or aſſeverations of each other, he was the common umpire between them, always ſtemming and oppoſing any extravagant or unjuſt demands (which the over-bearing temper of the German General was very apt to ſuggeſt, where he had the ſuperior hand) and reconciling, as much as poſſible, the violences of war, with the rules of honour and juſtice. When he departed from Italy to attend his late Majeſty at Hanover, the King, among many gracious expreſſions, told him, that he had found out the ſecret of obliging his enemies as well as friends, and that the Court of Spain had mentioned, with great acknowledgment, his fair and friendly behaviour in the proviſion of tranſports and other neceſſaries for the imbarkation of their troops, and in protecting them from many vexations and oppreſſions 1719. approached with an army of nine thouſand foot, and four thouſand horſe; but it was in the hands of the French before he could draw near enough to it; ſo he marched back to Pampeluna, doubly diſappointed, both of raiſing the ſiege, and of the French forces deſertion: For he depended as much on an Inſurrection in France, as on a Rebellion in England; upon both which Cardinal Alberoni's projects were founded. The Cardinal ſtill refuſing to accede to the Quadruple Alliance, the Duke of Berwick took St. Sebaſtian; and a party of French, joined by two hundred Engliſh ſeamen, made themſelves maſters of Port Antonio, in the bottom of the bay of Biſcay, where two ſixty guns ſhips were deſtroyed on the ſtocks, and all the naval ſtores were burnt by the Engliſh.

Negotiations with Spain.

About this time the Cardinal received the news of the action at Franca Villa, in a letter from the Marquiſs de Ledè, who aſſumed to himſelf the victory. The Cardinal choſe that occaſion to yield to the preſſing inſtances of the Dutch Ambaſſador to conſent to a peace: He declared to him, that his Catholic Majeſty's intention was, that the States-General ſhould be Mediators.

A few days after, he ſent the Marquiſs de Scotti to Paris, from whence he was to paſs into Holland, to carry inſtructions to the Marquiſs de Beretti Landi, how to proceed with the States. The Duke of Orleans, to whom he had orders to declare his intentions, refuſed him a paſſport, ſaying, he could not do it without the knowledge of the Emperor and King George, who were ſtill more concerned than himſelf in this affair, and that the paſſport would be a tacit approbation of the conduct of the States-General, and a ſort of acceptance of their mediations; deciſions, ſaid the Regent, that become me not to make. And indeed, the Emperor and King George, being conſulted on that head, abſolutely rejected it.

Beſides that, they were unwilling the States (with whom they were diſpleaſed for their ſlowneſs in acceding to the Quadruple Alliance) ſhould have the honour of this mediation, and reap, as it were, the fruit of their conduct, they had each their particular hopes and views, which a ſudden peace would have diſappointed. The Emperor wanted to repair the glory of his arms by the conqueſt of Sicily; and King George had a mind to be revenged, for the uneaſineſs given him, on account of the intended Invaſion of Scotland. He was reſolved to make ſome conqueſt, that ſhould indemnify his ſubjects for the charge they had been at. He formed two projects, to take the Corunna, the beſt port of Biſcay, and to make himſelf maſter of Peru in America. Great preparations were made, fifty tranſports were provided, with three bomb-veſſels, and four thouſand men were ordered to be in readineſs to imbark in the Iſle of Wight (1). The Lord Cobham was appointed to command in chief, with the title of Captain-General (2). Theſe forces being imbarked ſailed from St. Helens the 21ſt of September, under convoy of five or ſix men of war, commanded by Admiral Mighels, who was to be joined by Captain Johnſon, then cruiſing off Fonterabia. But this junction was never made, and the important and ſecret (as it was called) expedition upon the Corunna ended only in the taking of Vigo, which ſurrendered at the firſt ſummons; the Citadel made ſome reſiſtance, but ſurrendered likewiſe in a few days. On the 10th of October, the garriſon marched out, conſiſting of about three hundred men, beſides one hundred and fifty peaſants, there having been above three hundred killed or wounded by the bombs. The Engliſh loſt but two Officers, and three or four men. There were in the town about ſixty pieces of large cannon, which when the enemy abandoned, they nailed and damaged them, as much as the time would give them leave. In the Citadel were forty three pieces, of which fifteen were braſs guns, and two large mortars; beſides above two thouſand barrels of powder, and ſeveral cheſts of arms, amounting to about eight thouſand muſkets. All theſe ſtores and the braſs ordnance had been lodged there from on board the ſhips, which were to have viſited Great-Britain, and the very troops, which gave up Vigo, were likewiſe of that expedition. The Lord Cobham had ſummoned the adjacent Country to furniſh proviſions, and pay contribution, on pain of military execution; and had ſent a party that had been attempted. No wonder, that a man, endowed with ſuch talents and ſuch a diſpoſition, left behind him in Italy, and other foreign parts, the character of a great Soldier, an able Stateſman, and an honeſt Man.

1719. Vigo taken.

---

To give ſome deſcription of his perſon, he was of a ſlender conſtitution, but well ſupplied with ſpirits, which did not diſplay themſelves ſo much in gaiety of converſation (for he was modeſt in his nature) as in activity in all the duties and functions of life or buſineſs, in which he was indefatigable, and, by a continued habit of induſtry, had hardened and inured a body, not naturally ſtrong, to patience of any fatigue. He had made no great proficiency in ſchool-learning (which the early age of going to ſea ſeldom admits of) but his great diligence, joined with excellent natural parts, and a juſt ſenſe of honour, made him capable of conducting difficult Negotiations and Commiſſions with proper dignity and addreſs. In his younger days he was both in the ſea and land ſervice, being an Officer of foot in the garriſon of Tangier, but, preferring the ſea, he was ſoon diſtinguiſhed and favoured by that great ſeaman Admiral Ruſſel (afterwards Earl of Orford) who made him his firſt Captain at the age of twenty-nine, a poſt equal in rank to a Rear-Admiral, and, by degrees, he arrived to be a Commiſſioner of the Admiralty, and firſt Admiral of the fleet, in which quality he commanded in the war of Sicily. On his repairing to Hanover, his late Majeſty was pleaſed to expreſs his regard to his eminent ſervices, by making him Treaſurer of the Navy, and Rear-Admiral of Great-Britain; and ſoon after a Privy-Counſellor, and Peer of Great-Britain, with the title of Viſcount Torrington; and afterwards Knight of the Bath, upon the revival of that order. When his preſent Majeſty came to the Crown, he was pleaſed to place him at the head of his naval affairs, as firſt Lord Commiſſioner of the Admiralty, in which high ſtation he died, in the year 1733, in the 70th year of his age.

(1) Seven Companies out of each of the three regiments of Guards; Colonel Chudleigh's regiment, Lieutenant-General Wills's regiment, Lord Hinchinbrook's regiment; and the regiments of Howard, Grove, Hurley, and Barrel, and fifty dragoons.

(2) He had under him Major-General Wade, the Lords Mark Kerr and Dunmore, Colonel Honeywood, Brigadier-General; Colonel Armſtrong, Quarter-Maſter General; and Colonel Ligoniere, Adjutant-General.

(1) While party to Redondella, where they found the old fort abandoned, and run to ruin, and the inhabitants fled. That part of the province was under ſuch conſternation, that it was thought half the people had run away into Portugal. There were but few regular troops in the province; but the Marquiſs de Riſburg had drawn together as many as he could get near Tuy, which is within three or four leagues of Vigo.

Two days after the ſurrender of the Citadel of Vigo, one thouſand men were ordered on board four tranſports under the command of Major-General Wade, to ſail to the upper end of the bay of Vigo, and to march from thence to Pont a Vedra, ten leagues off. The Magiſtrates of the town met them with the keys; and there were found in the place two forty-eight pounders, four twenty-four pounders, ſix eight pounders, and four mortars, all braſs; beſides ſeventy pieces of iron cannon, two thouſand ſmall arms, and ſome bombs. The Biddeford man of war, and two tranſports, were ſent thither, to bring away the braſs cannon, arms, and ſtores; after which the detachment under Major-General Wade was ordered on board their ſhips, and the Major-General returned to Vigo, the 23d of October. Four days after, the troops being imbarked, the fleet ſailed for England (1).

Vice-Admiral Hoſier was to ſail to the Weſt-Indies with a ſquadron of men of war, where he was to be joined by all that were in thoſe parts; but this expedition was fruſtrated by the winds, and Peru was not ſo much as attacked.

Spain, oppreſſed on all ſides, and drained by the great efforts ſhe had made, began to think ſeriouſly of peace. A plan was ſent to the Marquiſs de Beretti Landi, which he delivered to the States the 22d of December. By this plan, England was to reſtore Gibraltar and Port-Mahon, and France all the conqueſts ſhe had lately made: The Succeſſions of Tuſcany, Parma, and Placentia were to be ſettled on the Queen of Spain's ſon, without being held either of the Emperor or Empire: All the ſhips taken this war were to be reſtored to Spain: Sicily, in the hands of the Emperor, was to be ſubject to the ſame right of reverſion, as when granted to the Duke of Savoy: The Pope was to be obliged to reſtore to the Duke of Parma the Duchy of Caſtro, and the Country of Roneiglione, uſurped by Innocent X. from the Houſe of Farneſe: Laſtly, The Dominion and Commerce of the Weſt-Indies ſhould be regulated, according to the treaty of Utrecht.

Theſe propoſals had been preceded by a ſtep very grateful to the Allies. The ambition of Cardinal Alberoni had rendered him perſonally odious to the Emperor, to King George, and to the Duke of Orleans. All three had declared, at leaſt intimated, that they would hearken to no peace as long as he was in place: The King of Spain thought it proper to make him a ſacrifice, and purchaſe the tranquillity of his people at the expence of a Miniſter ever unfortunate. The King writ to him with his own hand, forbidding him to meddle with the affairs of State, to appear any where in his preſence, to remain in Madrid above eight days, and in Spain above three weeks. 1719.

Spain accedes to the Quadruple Alliance.

The plan of the Court of Madrid was rejected as ſubverſive of the treaty of London, and nothing leſs would be accepted, but a full acceſſion to the Quadruple Alliance; which, after immenſe charges, and many mortifications, was ſubmitted to by the King of Spain. The war with Spain has been thus related, without regard to the order of time, that an idea of the whole might be formed, without having recourſe to different parts of the Hiſtory.

The King intercedes for the Proteſtants in Germany.

Whilſt the King was at Hanover, memorials full of grievances were preſented to him by the Proteſtants from Hungary, Poland, Spire, Mentz, and particularly from the Palatinate. In Poland, contrary to the fundamental Conſtitutions of the Kingdom, and the expreſs tenor of the Treaties, the Popiſh Clergy had engaged the Diet of Grodno to take from ſome of the Reformed Towns their right of ſuffrage. In Hungary, by the credit and practices of the Jeſuits, many books of Divinity, brought from England and Holland, were confiſcated. At Spire and Mentz, ſeveral Churches were taken from them, and given to the Catholics.

The greateſt complaints came from the Palatinate. The Catechiſm of Heidelberg was ſuppreſſed, after having been received above a hundred and ſixty years as a formula of union among the Reformed. The Church of the Holy Ghoſt at Heidelberg was alſo taken from the Proteſtants, on pretence of its belonging to the Court, and likewiſe the Church of Creutzpach, with the revenues of ſeveral others; and, what ſeemed ſtill more intolerable, the diſpoſal of the alms of the Reformed were given to the Catholics, who forced them, moreover, to contribute to the Popiſh ceremonies, and forbid them to open their ſhops, or to work on the holidays.

Almoſt all the Proteſtant States and Princes interpoſed in behalf of the oppreſſed. King George diſtinguiſhed himſelf by his zeal on this occaſion, and writ very preſſing letters, which were ſupported by memorials from his Miniſters. But this affair ſucceeded not to his wiſh: His repreſentations were well received, as they could not fail to be, conſidering his great weight; the Elector Palatine gave favourable anſwers, and made fair promiſes; but the grievances were not redreſſed (2).

During

(1) While the Engliſh were at Vigo, Captain Johnſon, Commander of the Weymouth, the Wincheſter, and another Engliſh man of war, came up with a Portugueze Carval from Ribadeo, and being informed that there were two Spaniſh men of war in that port, about ſixteen leagues to the Eaſt of Cape Ortegas, he made thither; ſent the boats in a head to ſound, and followed with the ſhips. He anchored within muſket-ſhot of the enemy's ſhips, and a battery of eight guns fired on both, and ſoon beat the Spaniards out of the battery, which he took poſſeſſion of, and entirely demoliſhed. In the interim, the two Spaniſh men of war blew up; and after ſome ſmall firing on the town, he ſailed out of the harbour, taking with him a Spaniſh Merchant-ſhip, which he found there.

(2) The King, in his letter to the King of Poland, in behalf of the Proteſtants, expreſſed himſelf thus: 'That they may enjoy, for the future, their former liberty of conſcience, which cannot be forced by any human power, and over which God hath reſerved to himſelf the ſole command.'

At his return to England, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury,

1719. During the King's abſence all was quiet at home, and the Regency had little to do. There was, however, a kind of diſpute with the Czar's Miniſter about his Secretary, who had been committed to priſon by a Juſtice of Peace. But, upon the firſt complaint of his Maſter, the Secretary was releaſed, and the Juſtice put out of his office, and obliged to beg pardon for his imprudence. There was alſo a great riot in June, raiſed by the journeymen weavers about Biſhopſgate and Aldgate. They inſulted the women for wearing calicoes, and tore their gowns off their backs. The Militia was ordered out to ſuppreſs the Rioters, of whom ſome of the ring-leaders were taken and condemned to ſtand in the pillory (1).

The Parliament of Ireland meets, July 1.

The Parliament of Ireland met the 1ſt of July. The Duke of Bolton, Lord Lieutenant, pointed out in his ſpeech the ſubjects of their deliberations. He ſaid, they were called together to conſult of proper meaſures, and to make neceſſary proviſions to repel or ſuppreſs any attempt to involve the Kingdom in the calamities of a Rebellion, or a foreign Invaſion. He repreſented it as a deluſion to imagine, that the deſigns of their enemies did not extend to Ireland, as well as to England and Scotland: And, though theſe deſigns had been hitherto prevented by the King's counſels and indefatigable endeavours, yet it would be prudent to provide ſuch effectual remedies as might render it impracticable to proceed farther with any proſpect of ſucceſs.

'It is obvious and viſible to every conſidering man, that a good agreement and union among all Proteſtants will greatly contribute to this end; and the numbers, as well as ſtrict union, of the Papiſts, among themſelves, together with their apparent inclinations and attachment to the intereſt of the Pretender, ſeem to make it more immediately neceſſary at this time. In what manner a thing ſo deſirable may be obtained, his Majeſty leaves to your conſideration, and has commanded me to acquaint you, that as he has the welfare of the Church, by law eſtabliſhed, under his peculiar care, and reſolves always to ſupport and maintain it; ſo it would be very pleaſing to him, if any method could be found (not inconſiſtent with the ſecurity of it) to render the Proteſtant Diſſenters more uſeful and capable of ſerving his Majeſty, and ſupporting the Proteſtant intereſt, than they now are; they having, upon all occaſions, given ſufficient proofs of their being well affected to his Majeſty's Perſon and Government, and to the Succeſſion of the Crown in his Royal Houſe: And this I am ordered to lay before you as a thing greatly importing his Majeſty's ſervice and your own ſecurity.'

The method here mentioned was already found. The act paſſed in the laſt Seſſion in England was an ample direction to proceed by. Both Houſes aſſured, that they thought it their duty and intereſt to promote a good underſtanding and union among all Proteſtants, to enable them to withſtand the deſigns of ſuch numerous and malicious enemies, and therefore they would readily enter into the conſideration of ſuch methods, as might render the Proteſtant Diſſenters more eaſy and capable of ſupporting the Proteſtant intereſt. Accordingly, an act paſſed for that purpoſe, under the title of 'A bill for exempting the Proteſtant Diſſenters of the Kingdom of Ireland from certain penalties, to which they are now ſubject.'

The Parliament made other uſeful regulations, for preventing the marriage of infants againſt the will of the parents or guardians; for incouraging the cultivation of lands; for preventing tumults and ſeditious aſſemblies; for ſuppreſſing tories, robbers, and rapparees; and for the better maintenance of ſchools and teaching the Engliſh tongue throughout the Kingdom.

In Scotland there appeared no remains of Rebellion. The Chiefs being retired, the Highlanders ſurrendered their arms, and the Regency ſeemed to fear no diſturbance from that quarter, nor had they any orders to give. However, the evil was not quite cured, of which were ſeen now and then ſome ſtrange proofs. At Edinburgh alone, five Miniſters, cited before the Magiſtrates, refuſed to acknowledge King George, and their Churches were forced to be ſhut up.

The retu

After ſix months abſence, the King returned to London, the 14th of November, more reſpected than ever, on account of the great things he No had

---

terbury, accompanied with ten other Biſhops, in a congratulatory ſpeech ſaid, among other things, 'I am alſo directed by my Lords the Biſhops, to return our moſt humble acknowledgment to your Majeſty, for the protection your Majeſty hath been pleaſed to give to our brethren, the Proteſtants of the Palatinate, and of Poland and Lithuania, perſecuted for the faith of Chriſt: We are perſuaded, that this Royal charity will draw down innumerable bleſſings from Heaven, upon the Perſon of your ſacred Majeſty, and your affairs.'

In the addreſs from the Univerſity of Cambridge, preſented by Dr. Gooch, the Vice-Chancellor, were the following words: 'It is with particular pleaſure we behold your Majeſty, in conjunction with other powers, aſſerting the cauſe of Liberty, and ſupporting the intereſt of our Proteſtant Brethren abroad, whoſe deplorable condition every day convinces us, that the Proteſtant Profeſſion muſt ſtand or fall with the Proteſtant Succeſſion.

(1) During the King's abſence died Mr. Joſeph Addiſon, June 17. He was ſon of Dr. Lancelot Addiſon, Dean of Litchfield; and, being educated at the Charter-Houſe ſchool, was ſent from thence to the Univerſity of Oxford, where he finiſhed his ſtudies in Magdalen-College: He became firſt known to the world by the excellency of his Latin poems, which he publiſhed in the Muſæ Anglicanæ, and dedicated to Charles Mountague, Earl of Halifax, who, together with the Lord Sommers, then Lord-Keeper (to whom he inſcribed the firſt piece he publiſhed in Engliſh, viz. A poem to his Majeſty King William III. on the taking of Namur, in the year 1695) recommended him to that Prince, who gave him a penſion of 300 l. per ann. and ſent him to travel. At his return from his travels, he was made Commiſſioner of Appeals in the Exciſe; afterwards he was under Secretary to two Secretaries of State, and Secretary of State himſelf in Ireland under two Lord Lieutenants: Upon the death of Queen Anne, he was made Secretary to the Regency, after that one of the Lords Commiſſioners for Trade and Plantations, and then advanced to be one of the Principal Secretaries of State to King George; which office, by reaſon of his ill ſtate of health, he was obliged to reſign ſome time before his death. He married Charlotte, daughter of Sir Thomas Middleton, of Chirk-Caſtle, in the county of Denbigh, Bart. and relict of Edward Rich, Earl of Warwick, by whom he left iſſue only one daughter.

July 6, died Meinhardt Schomberg, Duke of Schomberg and Leinſter, Marquiſs of Harwich, &c. Knight Companion had done for the welfare and intereſt of his Dominions. He was received with demonſtrations of the livelieſt joy, and thoſe who were not forward to ſhew it were puniſhed by the populace, and the windows broken that were not illuminated. Whilſt in Germany, he had ſent orders for the meeting of the Parliament on the 23d of November, and for the Members to be all there, by reaſon of the importance of the affairs he had to communicate to them. 1719.

On that day the Seſſion was opened with the following ſpeech, read by the Chancellor to both Houſes: Parl. Hiſt. 23.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

" THE ſatisfaction, with which I always " meet you, is very much increaſed at this " time, when it has pleaſed Almighty God ſo " to ſtrengthen the arms of Great-Britain and " our Confederates, and ſo to proſper our ſe- " veral Negotiations, that, by his bleſſing on our " endeavours, we may promiſe ourſelves to reap " very ſoon the fruits of our ſucceſſes. I am " perſuaded, it will be accounted by all my good " ſubjects a ſufficient reward for ſome extraordi- " nary expence, that all Europe, as well as theſe " Kingdoms, is upon the point of being de- " livered from the calamities of war, by the in- " fluence of Britiſh arms and counſels. One " Proteſtant Kingdom * has already been re- " lieved by our ſeaſonable interpoſition; and " ſuch a foundation is laid, by our late treaties, " for an union amongſt other great Proteſtant " Powers, as will very much tend to the ſecurity " of our holy Religion.

" I believe you cannot but be ſurprized at the " continuance of the war, where our enemies " have nothing to hope, and ſo much to fear. " It is indeed difficult to frame any judgment of " thoſe counſels, which have broke out of late " in ſo many raſh and ill-concerted meaſures. If " they depend upon our diviſions at home, I " doubt not but, in a very ſhort time, their " hopes, founded upon this expectation, will " prove as vain and ill-grounded, as any of their " former projects.

" In congratulating with you on this happy " poſture of affairs, I muſt tell you, that, as I " have been very juſt and faithful to my engage- " ments, ſo I have met ſuch frank and power- " ful returns of aſſiſtance from my Allies, as will, " I doubt not, eſtabliſh a laſting friendſhip a- " mong us.

Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons,

" You will ſee, by the accounts I have or- " dered to be delivered to you, how moderate a " uſe I have made of the power intruſted with " me, to augment my forces by ſea and land. " I depend upon the eminent duty and affection " you have always ſhewn to my Perſon and " Government, that you will be vigorous in " diſpatching the neceſſary Supplies for the year; " to which purpoſe I have ordered the eſtimates " to be laid before you. And, at the ſame " time, I muſt deſire you to turn your thoughts " to all proper means for leſſening the debts of " the Nation.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

" You all muſt be ſenſible of the many un- " deſerved and unnatural troubles I have met " with, during the courſe of my Reign. Our " diviſions at home have been magnified abroad; " and, by inſpiring into ſome foreign powers a " falſe opinion of our force, have encouraged " them to treat us in a manner, which the " Crown

---

Companion of the moſt noble Order of the Garter, and Count of the ſacred Roman Empire: He married Charlotte, eldeſt daughter of Charles Lewis, Elector-Palatine, by whom he left iſſue only two daughters; Frederica, married to Robert d'Arcy, Earl of Holderneſs (the preſent Counteſs Fitzwalter) and Mary, married to Count Dagenfeldt of the Empire.

July 24, died Heneage Finch, Earl of Aylesford, ſecond ſon of Daniel Finch, Earl of Nottingham. He was ſucceeded by his ſon of the ſame name.

While the King was abroad, a great diſpute and diſference aroſe between the Diſſenting Miniſters in London, about ſubſcribing and non-ſubſcribing articles of advice for the conduct of their congregations.

The Diſſenters at ſeveral places, but more eſpecially at Exeter, being jealous that their Miniſters were not as orthodox as themſelves, in the article of the Trinity, had demanded of them a confeſſion of faith; and upon advice of the differences between their paſtors and them, on this occaſion, the Diſſenting Miniſters, in and about London, held a Synod, to conſult of articles of advice for peace. They met at Salters-Hall. The main debate was inſerting in the advice the firſt article of the Church of England, and the anſwer to the fifth and ſixth queſtions in the Aſſembly's-Catechiſm. But upon the queſtion it was carried by a majority of fifty-ſeven againſt fifty-three, That no human compoſitions or interpretations of the Doctrine of the Trinity ſhould be made a part of theſe articles of advice, which they were met to draw up. How far the heats carried them on both ſides, may be ſeen by what happened at the diviſion. One of thoſe, who were againſt human compoſitions, ſaying, as he went out, You that are againſt perſecution, come up ſtairs; and another, who was for them, You that are for the Doctrine of the Trinity, ſtay below:

The Subſcribers withdrew from the aſſembly, notwithſtanding the queſtion had been carried againſt them, and ſet their names to a paper containing the firſt article, and the two anſwers beforementioned.

At the ſame time the Non-Subſcribers made the following declaration:

' We freely declare that we utterly diſown the Arian doctrines, and ſincerely believe the doctrine of the Trinity, and the proper Divinity of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, which we apprehend to be clearly revealed in the Holy Scriptures; but are far from condemning any who appear to be with us in the main, though they chuſe not to declare themſelves in other than Scripture terms, or not in ours.'

Which they farther explained thus:

' The human words, Trinity and proper Divinity, in this Declaration of our faith, are uſed only to notify the things we ſpeak of; and we do not preſume in the way of Teſt to go into any particular explanations of thoſe things, either in our own, or other mens words: But for that we refer to the Holy Scriptures, whence it may appear, that we take the Scripture account of thoſe things, to be the beſt and fitteſt we can uſe on ſuch occaſions.'

Whilſt theſe matters were tranſacting at London, three Congregations at Exeter proceeded to the actual excluſion of their Paſtors, Mr. Pierce, Mr. Withers, and Mr. Hallet, for refuſing to ſubſcribe certain articles of faith, which had been prepared for them.

It is not unlikely (ſays a certain Author *) that a leading man or two among the Subſcribers had private incouragement from a great Prelate to proceed as they did.

* Oldmixon.

1719. " Crown of Great-Britain ſhall never endure " while I wear it. The trouble and expence, " which this hath brought upon us, have been " the moſt loudly complained of by thoſe, " who were the occaſion of them. But with " your aſſiſtance I have hitherto got through all " theſe difficulties, and, by the continuance of " your help, I hope very ſoon to overcome " them, ſince the hand of God hath ſo viſibly " been with us in all our undertakings.

" If the neceſſities of my Government have " ſometimes engaged your duty and affection to " truſt me with powers, of which you have " always, with good reaſon, been jealous, the " whole world muſt acknowledge they have " been ſo uſed, as to juſtify the confidence you " have repoſed in me. And, as I can truly " affirm, that no Prince was ever more zealous " to increaſe his own authority, than I am to " perpetuate the liberty of my people, I hope " you will think of all proper methods to eſta- " bliſh and tranſmit to your poſterity, the free- " dom of our happy Conſtitution, and particu- " larly to ſecure that part, which is moſt liable " to abuſe. I value myſelf upon being the firſt, " who hath given you an opportunity of doing " it; and I muſt recommend it to you, to com- " pleat thoſe meaſures, which remained imper- " fect the laſt Seſſion.

" So far as human prudence can foretel, the " unanimity of this Seſſion of Parliament muſt " eſtabliſh, with the peace of all Europe, the " glory and trade of theſe Kingdoms on a laſt- " ing foundation. I think every man may ſee " the end of our labours. All I have to ask of " you is, that you would agree to be a great " and flouriſhing People, ſince it is the only " means, by which I deſire to become a happy " King."

Addreſſes of both Houſes.

The addreſſes were agreeable to the ſpeech, the King was thanked and congratulated for the great ſucceſs of his meaſures to eſtabliſh the peace of Europe. 'It is with the utmoſt plea- ſure and ſatisfaction (ſay the Lords) that we ſee the preſent happy union between your Majeſty and the other great Proteſtant Powers, which does ſo viſibly tend to the ſecurity of our Holy Religion; and we deſire to expreſs the deep ſenſe which we have of your Majeſty's ſeaſonable interpoſition for the poor perſecuted Proteſtants abroad; and we humbly beſeech your Majeſty, that you would be pleaſed to continue your powerful protection and offices in favour of them.' They concluded with ſaying, 'We promiſe ourſelves, that the whole world will ſoon be convinced with how little foundation the enemies of your Majeſty and your Kingdoms have flattered themſelves to reap any benefit from our inteſtine diviſions.

We ſhould be wanting in our duty to your Majeſty and our Country, if we did not return your Majeſty our moſt hearty thanks for that tender and unprecedented care and concern, your Majeſty has been pleaſed to expreſs in your moſt gracious ſpeech from the Throne, for the liber- ties of your People, and the freedom of our happy Conſtitution.'

The Commons, after thanks and congratula- tion, very ſtrongly expreſſed their aſſurances in theſe words:

'We crave leave to aſſure your Majeſty, that we will, on our parts, by the vigour of our reſolutions, for the ſupport of your Government, and by the diſpatch which we will give to the neceſſary Supplies, convince the world, that, if our enemies have conceived any hopes from our diviſions at home, this hath been the vain- eſt of all their projects. And we will enable your Majeſty, in concert with your Allies, effec- tually to ſupport and perfect thoſe juſt and equi- table meaſures which have been taken to eſtabliſh a general peace.

And we farther aſſure your Majeſty, That we will apply ourſelves to find out the beſt means for leſſening the debts of the Nation, and ſup- porting the public credit, and will concur in all proper methods to eſtabliſh and preſerve the freedom of our happy Conſtitution, for which your ſacred Majeſty has given ſo many tender proofs of your care and affection.'

As the King had recommended in his ſpeech the thinking of proper methods to eſtabliſh the freedom of the Conſtitution (by which was meant the Peerage-Bill) the Duke of Buckingham, two days after the beginning of the Seſſion, revived the bill for limiting the Peers, which had been dropped by the prorogation. In op- poſition to this bill, Earl Cowper ſaid, 'Beſides the reaſons, that induced him laſt Seſſion to be againſt this bill, he had now another, that weighed no leſs with him than all the reſt, the earneſtneſs, with which it was recommended, and the eagerneſs, with which it was brought be- fore them at the beginning of a Seſſion. He had obſerved both from hiſtory, and his own experience, that, in affairs of moment, precipi- tation was ever dangerous, and, in many caſes, to be ſuſpected; and, for his own part, he could not help being of opinion, that, if there were no ſecret meaning in this bill, ſome men would not be ſo preſſing for it.' To this the Earl of Sun- derland anſwered, 'That it could not with any juſtice be ſaid, that any precipitation had been uſed in this affair, ſince the bill in queſtion had been brought in the laſt Seſſion, and then thoroughly examined; ſo that he doubted not, but every Member of that Houſe was fully ap- prized of it, and ready to give his vote for or againſt it. That the reaſon, why it was brought in ſo ſoon at this time, he conceived to be, that it might give no interruption to the other impor- tant affairs, which the King had recommended to his Parliament. And, as for any ſecret mean- ing in this bill, he ſolemnly declared, he knew of no other, but what his Majeſty had been pleaſed graciouſly to intimate in his ſpeech, the ſecuring the freedom of our Conſtitution, by by preventing, for the future, the abuſe of one branch of the Royal Prerogative, of which they had a fatal inſtance in the late Reign, and which had given juſt offence, and terrible apprehen- ſions to all ſober men.' To this it was replied, 'That if it was foreſeen, that bill might inter- rupt the other important affairs, it had been ad- viſable to keep it till the middle, or towards the end of the Seſſion, and to begin with the King's buſineſs.' But the Duke of Bucks compromiſed the matter, by ſaying, 'That, for his own part, he apprehended no danger from this bill; and if it was attended with any inconveniencies, as all human affairs are apt to be, time would diſcover it; and then, as in all other caſes, they might apply a remedy to it. As to the time of bringing it in, he thought it no mate- rial objection, ſince this Houſe had no other 1719. buſineſs to go upon; but that he foreſaw, that, whatever diſpatch they made in that bill, it would not get ſo quick a paſſage in the other Houſe.' After theſe ſpeeches, the bill paſſed the Lords without any farther oppoſition, and was ſent to the Commons, where it was oppoſed by a great many Members. Mr. Craggs urged in favour of the bill, 'That his Majeſty, ſince his Acceſſion to the Throne, had had no other view, than to procure the good and happineſs of his ſubjects, and to ſecure their rights and liberties. That having, in his Royal wiſdom, conſidered the abuſe, that was made in the laſt Reign of that branch of the prerogative relating to the creating of Peers, which abuſe had brought the liberties of Great-Britain, and of all Europe, into immediate danger, his Majeſty, through a condeſcenſion worthy of a Prince truly magnanimous, had graciouſly been pleaſed to conſent, that ſuch bounds be ſet to that part of the prerogative, as may prevent any exorbitant and dangerous exerciſe of it for the time to come. That it was only in the Reign of good Princes, that Legiſlators had opportunities to remedy and amend the defects, to which all human inſtitutions are ſubject: And that, if the preſent occaſion of rectifying that apparent flaw in our Conſtitution were loſt, it might perhaps never be retrieved.' Mr. Walpole ſpoke on the other ſide, and endeavoured to anſwer all that had been offered for the bill. He took notice, 'That among the Romans, the wiſeſt people upon earth, the Temple of Fame was placed behind the Temple of Virtue, to denote, that there was no coming to the former, without going through the other. But that, if this bill paſſed into a law, one of the moſt powerful incentives to virtue would be taken away, ſince there would be no coming to honour, but thro' the winding-ſheet of an old decrepit Lord, and the grave of an extinct noble family. That it was matter of juſt ſurprize, that a bill of this nature ſhould either have been projected, or at leaſt promoted by a Gentleman, who not long ago ſat amongſt them, and who, having got into the Houſe of Peers, would now ſhut up the door after him. That this bill would not only be a diſcouragement to virtue and merit, but alſo indanger our excellent Conſtitution: For, as there was a due balance between the three branches of the Legiſlature, if any more weight were thrown into any one of thoſe branches, it would deſtroy that balance, and conſequently ſubvert the Conſtitution. That the Peers were already poſſeſſed of many valuable privileges; and to give them more power and authority, by limiting their number, would, in time, bring back the Commons into the ſtate of the ſervile dependency, which they were in, when they wore the badges of the Lords. That he could not but wonder, that the Lords would ſend ſuch a bill to the Commons; for how could they expect, that the Commons would give their concurrence to ſo injurious a law, by which they and their poſterities are to be excluded from the Peerage? And how would the Lords receive a bill, by which it would be enacted, that a Baron ſhould not be made a Viſcount, nor a Viſcount be made an Earl, and ſo on? That, beſides all this, that part of the bill, which related to the Peerage of Scotland, would be a manifeſt violation of the act of Union, on the part of England, and a diſhonourable breach of truſt in thoſe, who repreſented the Scots Nobility. That ſuch an infringement of the Union would indanger the intire diſſolution of it, by diſguſting ſo great a number of the Scots Peers, as ſhould be excluded from ſitting in the Britiſh Parliament. For as it was well known, that the Revolution-Settlement ſtood upon the principle of a mutual compact, if we ſhould break firſt the articles of Union, it would be natural for the Scots to think themſelves thereby freed from all allegiance. And as for what had been ſuggeſted, that the election of the ſixteen Scots Peers was no leſs expenſive to the Crown, than injurious to the Peerage of Scotland, it might be anſwered, that the making twenty-five hereditary ſitting Scots Peers would ſtill increaſe the diſcontents of the electing Peers, who thereby would be deprived of a valuable conſideration for not being choſen.' After theſe, and ſeveral other ſpeeches, the bill was at laſt rejected by a majority of two hundred and ſixty-nine againſt one hundred and ſeventy-ſeven. Thus the prerogative of increaſing the number of the Peers, as the King ſhould think proper, which he ſeemed ſo willing to diveſt himſelf of, was, as it were againſt his conſent, preſerved to him. It was obſerved by an * oppoſer of the bill, that ſome perſons had through indiſcretion occaſioned an unhappy difference [in the Royal Family] and he was apprehenſive if that bill, ſo prejudicial to the rights of the next heir, ſhould paſs into a law, it might render that difference irreconcileable. This was ſaid chiefly with regard to the Earl of Sunderland, who promoted the bill with the greateſt eagerneſs. It was alſo reported that Mr. Craggs was to have been one of the ſix Engliſh Peers, to be created after the paſſing of the bill.

1719.

* Sir J. Packington.

During this Seſſion, a bill, for better ſecuring the dependency of Ireland upon the Crown of Great-Britain, paſſed both Houſes. This bill took its riſe, from an appeal to the Houſe of Peers in England, by Maurice Anneſley, againſt a decree of the Houſe of Peers in Ireland; which the Britiſh Houſe of Peers received, and ordered the Barons of the Exchequer in Ireland to cauſe Mr. Anneſley to be forthwith put in poſſeſſion of certain lands in the County of Kildare, of which he had been diſpoſſeſſed by virtue of a decree of the Houſe of Peers in Ireland. Purſuant to this order, the Barons of the Exchequer in that Kingdom iſſued out an injunction to Alexander Burrows, Sheriff of the County of Kildare, and ſet ſeveral fines upon him, for refuſing to put it in execution; which the Houſe of Peers in Ireland diſcharged, and voted, that Jeffery Gilbert, Lord Chief-Baron of the Exchequer, John Pocklington and Sir John St. Leger, the other Barons of the Exchequer in Ireland, had acted in manifeſt derogation to the King's prerogative, in his High Court of Parliament in Ireland, as alſo of the rights and privileges of this Kingdom, and of the Parliament thereof. Theſe Barons were alſo ordered to be taken into cuſtody of the Uſher of the Black-Rod (1).

A bill for ſecuring the dependency of Ireland

Pr H. L. Pr. H. C.

The

(1) Several Lords diſſented from theſe reſolutions, viz. the Lord Middleton, Lord High-Chancellor, the Lords Donerayle and Fitz-Williams, and the Biſhops of Meath, Kildare, Killala, Kilmore, and Derry.

(1) The

1719-20. The House of Peers in Ireland drew up a long representation to be transmitted to the King, setting forth their right to the final Judicature of causes in that Kingdom; and the Duke of Leeds, in a protest against a vote passed in the House of Peers in England, gave fifteen reasons to support the claim of the House
Jan. 28. of Peers in Ireland. But the House of Lords in England resolved, 'That the Barons of the Exchequer in Ireland had acted with courage according to law, in support of his Majesty's prerogative, and with fidelity to the Crown of Great-Britain;' and ordered an address to the King, 'for conferring on them some marks of his Royal favour, as may be a recompense for the ill usage they have received, by being unjustly censured, and illegally imprisoned, for doing their duty.' Then it was that the bill, for better securing the dependency of Ireland, was
Feb. 22. brought in, and, having passed the House of Lords, was sent down to the Commons. Mr. Pitt was the first, who spoke against the bill, because, as he said, it seemed calculated for no other purpose, than to increase the power of the British House of Peers, which, in his opinion, was already but too great. He was seconded by Mr. Plummer, who excepted, in particular, against the preamble of the bill, as incoherent with the enacting part; which was partly owned by Sir Joseph Jekyll, who, in the main, spoke for the bill. Mr. Hungerford, on the other hand, endeavoured to shew, that Ireland was ever independent with respect to Courts of Judicature; and he was supported by the Lord Molesworth, the Lord Tyrconnel, and some other Members; but, Mr. Yorke having supported the Master of the Rolls, the bill was at last agreed to, and received the Royal assent (1).

About this time a misunderstanding happened between Mr. Lechmere, Attorney-General, and Sir William Thompson, Sollicitor-General, which was carried so far in a grand Committee of the Commons, the 16th of March, that Sir William charged Mr. Lechmere with breach of his oath, trust, and duty, as a Privy-Counsellor; urging, 'that he acted as Council, and received sums of money for his advice, in matters to him referred by the Privy-Council, as Attorney-General'. After this, he proceeded to the reading of several reports, made either by the Attorney-General or himself, but was interrupted by Mr. Craggs, who said, 'They were not there to examine, who was the best Lawyer; but that, a heavy accusation having been raised against a 1719-20. Gentleman of distinguished merit, and in very eminent stations, it was incumbent upon the Accuser to produce clear evidence to make good his charge.' Upon this, Mr. Lechmere stood up in his own defence, and said, 'He had the honour to be a Privy-Counsellor, Chancellor of the Duchy, Attorney-General, a Member of that House, and a Gentleman; and therefore such a heinous accusation could not but fall the heavier upon him: That he owned himself liable to a great many human frailties and imperfections; but, as his conscience intirely acquitted him of the crimes laid to his charge, so he defied all the world, and the worst of his enemies, to prove him guilty of corruption or any unwarrantable practices: That, though he was thus wrongfully accused in so solemn a manner, yet, as a good Christian, he did heartily forgive his Accuser, and was willing to believe, that he was prompted to this rash action, rather by mistake, or ignorance, than by malice; concluding, with desiring that Honourable Assembly to sift and weigh the whole matter with their usual candour, impartiality, and equity, and to excuse any unguarded expressions, that might escape him, in vindicating his innocence.' After this, several witnesses were sworn, and eight or nine of them examined; but, their depositions amounting to no more, than that Mr. Lechmere had taken nothing but his usual fees, as Chamber-Counsellor, the accusation laid against him appeared groundless to the Committee, and was declared by the House to be malicious, false and scandalous.

On the 8th of March, Sir Joseph Jekyll presented to the House a bill, to prevent the impious practice of duelling; which was occasioned by a duel between Mr. William Aldworth of Windsor, and Mr. Owen Buckingham, Member of Parliament for Reading; who, quarrelling after having drank too freely, fought in the dark, and Mr. Buckingham was killed. But this bill was dropped in the House of Lords.

The King had earnestly recommended, in his speech, the consideration of all proper means for lessening the debts of the Nation. Accordingly, a scheme was laid to reduce all the public funds into one, for discharging the national debt. The South-Sea Company and the Bank of England presented their several proposals to the House of Commons. The liberty of taking in the national debts, and, in consequence thereof, of increasing their capital stock and yearly fund,

---

(1) The act was as follows:

'Whereas attempts have been lately made to shake off the subjection of Ireland unto, and dependance upon, the Imperial Crown of this Realm, which will be of dangerous consequence to Great-Britain and Ireland.

And whereas the House of Lords in Ireland, in order thereto, have, of late, against law, assumed to themselves a power and jurisdiction to examine, correct, and amend the judgments and decrees of the Courts of Justice in the Kingdom of Ireland: Therefore, for the better securing of the dependency of Ireland upon the Crown of Great-Britain, may it please your Majesty, that it may be enacted; and it is hereby declared and enacted, by the King's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, That the said Kingdom of Ireland hath been, is, and, of right, ought to be, subordinate unto, and dependent upon, the Imperial Crown of Great-Britain, as being inseparably united and annexed thereunto; and that the King's Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons of Great-Britain in Parliament assembled, had, hath, and, of right, ought to have, full power and authority to make laws and statutes of sufficient force and validity, to bind the People and the Kingdom of Ireland.

And be it farther enacted and declared by the authority aforesaid, That the House of Lords of Ireland have not, nor, of right, ought to have, any jurisdiction to judge of, affirm, or reverse any judgment, sentence, or decree, given or made in any Court within the said Kingdom; and that all proceedings before the said House of Lords, upon any such judgment, sentence, or decree, are, and are hereby declared to be, utterly null and void, to all intents and purposes whatsoever.'

fund, was looked upon as a very valuable benefit; and therefore the conteſt between the Bank and the South-Sea Company was great. They endeavoured to outbid each other in Parliament. The South-Sea Company, for the liberty of taking into their ſtock the irredeemable and redeemable debts, by purchaſe or ſubſcription (amounting to above thirty millions) offered at firſt 3,500,000 l. to be paid into the Exchequer by four equal quarterly payments, beginning at Lady-day 1721. And agreed, that their whole capital ſhould be reduced to 4 per cent. after Midſummer 1727, and be thenceforth redeemable by Parliament.

The Bank, for the like liberty, offered, upon the long and ſhort annuities, three years purchaſe, which (if the whole purchaſe was compleated) would amount to about 2,367,600 l. and 20 per cent. upon the redeemable debts, amounting to about 3,180,000 l. So their whole offer was above five millions and a half.

But the South-Sea Company being reſolved, at any rate, to obtain the liberty of taking in the public debts, offered, in a ſecond ſcheme, not only 500,000 l. more, but alſo four years and a half's purchaſe upon all the annuities they ſhould take into their capital ſtock, which (if all the annuities were taken in) would amount to about 3,567,503 l. So that their whole offer was about 7,567,500 l. They likewiſe offered to circulate 1,000,000 l. in Exchequer bills gratis, and pay 3 per cent. intereſt for that million; as alſo one year's purchaſe upon ſuch annuities, as ſhould happen not to come into the Company's capital, before the 1ſt day of March 1721.

Though the Bank made ſome farther advances, this ſcheme of the South-Sea Company was approved by the Commons, and a bill was ordered to be brought in.

While this affair was debating in the Houſe of Commons, the ſtocks of the South-Sea Company gradually roſe from 130 to above 300, and advanced to near 400; but, after ſome fluctuation, ſettled at about 330, in which ſtate, with little variation, they continued till the end of March. This great riſe was chiefly owing to the rejecting of a motion for a clauſe in the South-Sea bill, to fix what ſhare in the capital ſtock of the Company the Proprietors of the annuities ſhould have, who ſhould voluntarily ſubſcribe, or how many years purchaſe in money they ſhould receive upon ſubſcribing, at the choice of the Proprietors. It was pretended, that the obliging the Company to fix a price upon the annuities might endanger the ſucceſs of ſo beneficial an undertaking: That, as it was the intereſt of the Company to take in the annuities, ſo it was not to be doubted, they would uſe all their endeavours for that purpoſe, and offer ſuch terms to the Annuitants, as would encourage them to come in voluntarily: That therefore the Company ought to be allowed a competent time to try what they could do; and if, in a ſubſequent Seſſion of Parliament, it ſhould appear, that the conditions offered to the Annuitants were not reaſonable, and conſequently had been ineffectual, the Commons, in ſuch a caſe, might give what directions they ſhould think proper about the matter. Upon theſe and other reaſons, the motion was rejected; and, ſoon after, the bill for enabling the South-Sea Company to increaſe their capital ſtock, paſſed the Commons, by a majority of a hundred and ſeventy-two againſt fifty-five, and ſent to the Lords for their concurrence, where it occaſioned a warm debate. 1720.

The Lord North and Grey ſpoke firſt againſt the bill, which he repreſented to be 'unjuſt in its nature, and might prove fatal in its conſequences, ſince it ſeemed calculated for the inriching of a few, and the impoveriſhing of a great many, and not only made way for, but countenanced and authorized the fraudulent and pernicious practice of ſtock-jobbing, which produced an irreparable miſchief in diverting the genius of the people from trade and induſtry. 'His Lordſhip was ſupported by the Duke of Wharton, who endeavoured to ſhew, 'That the South-Sea project might prove of infinite diſadvantage to the Nation: Firſt, as it gave foreigners an opportunity to double and treble the vaſt ſums they had in our public funds, which could not but tempt them to withdraw their capital ſtock, with their immenſe gains, to other Countries, which might drain Great-Britain of a conſiderable part of its gold and ſilver. Secondly, That the artificial and prodigious riſe of the South-Sea ſtock was a dangerous bait, which might decoy many unwary people to their ruin, and allure them, by a falſe proſpect of gain, to part with what they had got by their labour and induſtry, to purchaſe imaginary riches. And, in the third place, that the addition of above thirty millions capital would give ſuch a vaſt power to the South-Sea Company, as might indanger the liberties of the Nation, and in time ſubvert our excellent Conſtitution, ſince by their extenſive intereſt they might influence moſt, if not all the elections of the Members, and conſequently overrule the reſolutions of the Houſe of Commons.' Earl Cowper ſpoke alſo againſt the bill, which he obſerved to be uſhered in and received with great pomp and acclamations of joy, but which was contrived for treachery and deſtruction. His Lordſhip urged in particular, 'That, in all public bargains, it is a duty incumbent on them, who are intruſted with the adminiſtration, to take care, that the ſame be more advantageous to the State, than to private perſons; but that a quite contrary method ſeemed to have been followed in the contract made with the South-Sea Company. For if the ſtocks were kept up to the advanced price, to which they had been raiſed by the oblique arts of ſtock-jobbing, either that Company, or its principal Members, would gain above thirty millions ſterling, of which they gave but one fourth part towards the diſcharge of the national debts. That, though this ſcheme carried the face of public good, yet nothing could be ſo, that was founded on injuſtice; as his Lordſhip took this bill to be. That he apprehended, in particular, that the main public intention of it, viz. The re-purchaſe of annuities, would meet with inſuperable difficulties; and that, in ſuch a caſe, none but a few perſons, who were in the ſecret, and had early bought ſtocks at a low rate, and afterwards ſold them at a high price, would, in the end, be gainers by this project.' The Duke of Bucks and ſome other Peers ſpoke on the ſame ſide; but the Earl of Sunderland anſwered moſt of their objections; and, among other things, ſaid, 'That, they who encouraged and countenanced the ſcheme of the South-Sea Company, had nothing in their view, but the eaſing the Nation of part of that heavy load of debt it labours

1720. bours under. That, on the other hand, the Managers for that Company had undoubtedly a proſpect of private gain, either to themſelves, or to their Corporation; but that, when that ſcheme was accepted, neither the one nor the other could foreſee, that the ſtocks would have riſen to the price they were now advanced. That, if they had continued as they were at that time, the public would have had the far greater ſhare of the advantage accruing from that ſcheme; and if the ſtocks were kept up to the price they had been raiſed to, which was not unlikely, it was but reaſonable, that the South-Sea Company ſhould enjoy the profits procured to it, by the wiſe management and induſtry of its Directors, which would enable it both to make large dividends among its Members, and thereby compaſs the ends intended by this ſcheme.' After theſe debates, the bill paſſed without any amendment or diviſion; and, on the 7th of April, the King came on purpoſe to the Houſe of Lords, to give the Royal aſſent to it. What were the effects of this famous act, will hereafter be largely ſhewn.

Abſtract of the act for for increaſing the capital ſtock of the South-Sea Company.

This act recites the ſeveral public debts and funds, the acts by which they were eſtabliſhed, the terms and conditions of their continuance, the amounts of the reſpective ſums of principal and intereſt due and payable, and dividing them into ſeveral claſſes and ſpecies of debts, namely, long and ſhort annuities, redeemable and irredeemable debts, and ſtating what rate of intereſt they bore, computes the principals and annuities at certain ſums, in order to ſettle the different rates and values at which they were to be eſtimated, to be redeemed, purchaſed, or taken in by the South-Sea Company.

The redeemable debts are ſtated at 16,546,482 l. 7 s. 1 d. ¾ (1), the irredeemable annuities, being for the remainder of ſeveral long terms of 89, 96, and 99 years, are computed to amount to 666,821 l. 8 s. 3 d. ½ a year, beſides ſome unſubſcribed lottery annuities and ſhort annuities for 23 and 22 ½ years then ſtanding out.

The Company is declared willing, and is accordingly authorized to take in by purchaſe, or ſubſcription, the irredeemable debts, at ſuch time or times as they ſhall find convenient, before the 1ſt of March 1721, and without any compulſion on any of the Proprietors, at ſuch rates and prices as ſhall be agreed between the Company and the reſpective Proprietors.

The Company is likewiſe declared willing, and is authorized at ſuch time and times, as they ſhall ſee convenient (but ſubject to ſuch notices of redemption as are therein mentioned) to take in all and every the redeemable debts, amounting to 16,546,482 l. 7 s. 1 d. ¾, either by purchaſe, taking ſubſcriptions, or by paying them off.

Provided that the Company for every annuity, part of the long annuities computed at 666,821 l. 8 s. 3 d. ſo to be taken by them, may, in lieu thereof, have an addition made to their capital ſtock, after the rate of twenty years purchaſe; and ſuch reſpective additions to their preſent yearly fund or annuity, as is after limited.

And for all ſuch ſhort annuities, as ſhall be taken in, to have an addition to their capital ſtock, after the rate of fourteen years purchaſe, with a proportional addition to their preſent annuity or yearly fund.

And for all and every of the redeemable debts that ſhall be taken in by purchaſe, ſubſcriptions, or paying off, to have an addition of 100 l. to their capital ſtock, for every 100 l. of the principal monies ſo taken in, with a proportional addition to their preſent yearly fund.

Thus far it appears, that the Proprietors of theſe public debts amounting to above twenty-ſix millions, that ſubſcribed into the South-Sea ſtock, by virtue of this act of Parliament, acted by their own choice and option without any compulſion. The Irredeemables were left at full liberty to have remained in the condition they were, and an expreſs proviſion was made for the ſecurity of ſuch as did not ſubſcribe.

The Redeemables had their option to have waited for the terms of redemption, to which they were before liable, and to have taken their money, when the public had been in a condition to pay them.

So that ſubſcribing and accepting South-Sea ſtock, in lieu and diſcharge of their former debts and annuities, was the voluntary act of them all, induced, no doubt, by the general infatuation that every where reigned, and the imaginary proſpect of great advantages.

For the liberty of thus taking in the national debts, and increaſing their capital ſtock, the Company in the firſt place have deſired and conſented that their preſent and to be increaſed annuity may be continued at 5 l. per cent. till Midſummer, 1727, and from thence be reduced to 4 l. per cent. and be redeemable by Parliament. In conſideration of this and other advantages expreſſed in the act, the Company are willing to make ſuch payments into the receipt of the Exchequer, as are herein ſpecified, for the uſe of the public, to be applied for paying off the public debts incurred before Chriſtmas, 1716.

The ſums, which they were obliged to pay, were 4,156,306 l. 4 s. 1 d. for the liberty of taking in the redeemable debts, and four years and a half's purchaſe for all the long and ſhort annuities that ſhould be ſubſcribed, and one year's purchaſe for ſuch long annuities as ſhould not be ſubſcribed. Theſe ſums upon the execution of the act were found to amount to about 7,000,000 l.

For enabling the Company to raiſe this ſum, they are impowered to make calls for money from their Members, or open books of ſubſcriptions,

---

(1) 5 l. per cent. annuities.

	l.	s.	d.
Principal ſum ——	11,779,660	11	3¾
4 l. per cent. annuities.
Principal ſum ——	4,766,821	15	9½
	16,546,482	7	1¼

The 5 l. per cent. annuities conſiſted of ſeveral lotteries, Bankers annuities, Blanks in lottery 1714, Navy deficiency, and Bank annuities.

The 4 l. per cent. annuities were, the Civil Liſt lottery, Prizes in lottery 1714, Deficiencies on low wines, &c. on funds, Canada bills, Army debts and debentures, firſt and ſecond lottery 1719.

o. ſcriptions, or grant annuities redeemable by the Company, or by any other method they ſhall think fit in a general Court. They might alſo borrow money upon any contract, bill, &c. under their common ſeal, or on the credit of their capital ſtock. The money, called for from their Members, ſhall (if thought proper) be an additional ſtock, but there ſhall be no addition thereby to the Company's annuities, to be paid out of the public duties.

Out of the firſt monies ariſing for the ſeveral ſums to be paid by the Company into the Exchequer, ſuch public debts carrying intereſt at 5 l. per cent. incurred before the 25th of December, 1716, founded upon any former act of Parliament, as are now redeemable, or may be redeemed before the 25th of December, 1722, ſhall be paid off in the firſt place: Then all the remainder ſhall be applied towards paying off ſo much of the capital ſtock of the Company as ſhall then carry an intereſt of 5 l. per cent. Proviſion is alſo made, that, after Midſummer, 1727, the Company is not to be paid off in any ſums, being leſs than one million at a time.

oyal Lon- Aſſu- Com- e.

Several projects were now ſet on foot, particularly for eſtabliſhing the two Companies of the Royal Aſſurance, headed by the Lord Onſlow, and of the London Aſſurance by the Lord Chetwynd. The projectors had been very induſtrious to beſpeak the countenance of the Houſe of Commons, for which they had cauſed two letters to be printed and given to the Members. But, theſe and all other ſollicitations having proved ineffectual, the Managers for the two Companies had recourſe to other methods, and being informed that the Civil Liſt was conſiderably in arrears (for which no proviſion had been, or could conveniently be made by the Parliament, becauſe the grand Committee of Supply had been inadvertently diſmiſſed) they offered to the Miniſtry 600,000 l. towards the diſcharge of that debt, in caſe they might obtain the King's Charter, with the parliamentary ſanction for the eſtabliſhment of their reſpective Companies. The Miniſters, being at a loſs for means to pay the Civil Liſt debt, readily embraced the offer, and, Mr. Craggs having the day before prepared the leading Members of the Houſe of Commons, Mr. Aiſlabie preſented, May the 4th, to the Houſe the following meſſage:

'His Majeſty having received ſeveral petitions from great numbers of the moſt eminent Merchants of the City of London, humbly praying, that he would be graciouſly pleaſed to grant them his letters patents for erecting Corporations to aſſure ſhips and merchandize; and the ſaid Merchants having offered to advance and pay a conſiderable ſum of money for his Majeſty's uſe, in caſe they may obtain letters patents accordingly: His Majeſty being of opinion, that erecting two ſuch Corporations, excluſive only of all other Corporations and Societies for aſſuring of ſhips and merchandize, under proper reſtrictions and regulations, may be of great advantage and ſecurity to the trade and commerce of the Kingdom, is willing and deſirous to be ſtrengthened by the advice and aſſiſtance of this Houſe, in matters of this nature and importance: He therefore hopes for their ready concurrence to ſecure and confirm the privileges his Majeſty ſhall grant to ſuch Corporations, and to enable him to diſcharge the debts of his Civil Government, without burdening his people with any new aid or ſupply.' 1720.

Purſuant to the meſſage, a bill was brought in to enable his Majeſty to grant letters of incorporation to the two Companies, which paſſed both Houſes, and received the Royal aſſent.

The buſineſs of the Parliament being now finiſhed, the King came to the Houſe of Peers, and put an end to the Seſſion with the following ſpeech to both Houſes: The Parliament is prorogued, June 11.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

" I am now come to put an end to this Seſ-
" ſion, which, though it hath advanced ſo
" far into the ſummer, cannot be thought a
" tedious one, when we conſider how much
" buſineſs hath been done, and the great ad-
" vantages, that may be expected from it.

" Your ſeaſonable vigour and perſeverance
" to ſupport me in the meaſures I have taken
" with my Allies, for reſtoring the tranquillity
" of Europe, have produced moſt of the effects
" I could deſire. Much the greateſt part of " Chriſtendom is already freed from the calami-
" ties of war; and by what hath happened both
" abroad and at home my people muſt be con" vinced, that their welfare is inſeparable from
" the ſtrength and ſecurity of my Govern" ment.

Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons,

" I return you my thanks for the Supplies
" you have raiſed for the ſervice of the current " year; and it is a particular ſatisfaction to me,
" that a method has been found out for making
" good the deficiencies of my Civil Liſt, with-
" out laying any new burden upon my ſubjects.
" The good foundation you have prepared this
" Seſſion for the payment of the national debts,
" and the diſcharge of a great part of them, with-
" out the leaſt violation of the public faith, will,
" I hope, ſtrengthen more and more the union
" I deſire to ſee among all my ſubjects, and
" make our friendſhip yet more valuable to all
" foreign powers.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

" You will ſee the good effects, which our " ſteadineſs hath produced. There remains but " little on our part, to ſatisfy the world, that
" more credit, ſecurity, and greatneſs, is to be " acquired by following the views of peace, and
" adhering ſtrictly to juſt engagements, than by
" depending on the advantages of war, or by
" purſuing the meaſures of ambition. To com-
" pleat what remains unfiniſhed, I propoſe very
" ſpeedily to viſit my Dominions in Germany,
" hoping to put an end to thoſe troubles in the " North, which are now reduced to a very nar-
" row compaſs. I flatter myſelf, that my pre-
" ſence this ſummer in thoſe parts will prove
" uſeful to our poor Proteſtant brethren, for " whom you have expreſſed ſuch ſeaſonable and
" charitable ſentiments.

" I doubt not but to meet you again next " winter, diſpoſed to put a finiſhing hand to all
" thoſe good works, which, by your aſſiſtance,
" I have brought ſo near to perfection. I could
" wiſh, that all my ſubjects, convinced by time

1720. " and experience, would lay aſide thoſe partialities and animoſities, which prevent them " from living quietly, and enjoying the happineſs of a mild and legal Government. It is " what I chooſe to recommend at this time, " when I am ſenſible, that all oppoſition to it is " become vain and uſeleſs, and can only end unfortunately for thoſe, who ſhall perſiſt in " ſtruggling againſt it. I am perſuaded, that, " during my abſence, every one of you will take " particular care to preſerve the peace in your " ſeveral Counties; and that I ſhall find you at " my return in ſuch a ſtate of tranquillity, as " will ſhew mankind how firmly my Government is eſtabliſhed, which I chiefly deſire, " becauſe I think the ſecurity and preſervation " of my people, and of this happy conſtitution, " depends entirely upon it."

After this ſpeech the Parliament was prorogued to the 28th of July.

Before the proceedings of the South-Sea Company are related, it will be proper to give ſome account of the foreign affairs during this Seſſion.

Particular Alliance with Sweden.

The Negotiations with Sweden, Pruſſia, and Denmark were far advanced, when the King left Germany to return to England. Soon after his arrival, he received an account of the concluſion of his treaty of Alliance offenſive and defenſive with Sweden. The Lord Carteret, aſſiſted by the French Miniſter, had laboured with ſuch application, that the treaty was finiſhed and ſigned at Stockholm on the 20th of January. It contained one and twenty articles, ſeveral of which were expreſsly againſt the Czar.

The Peace and Alliance were to be perpetual and univerſal. The contracting powers were not only not to injure, but to procure to each other all kinds of advantages.

They were obliged to inform each other of every thing they ſhould diſcover, that might injure or diſturb them, and to aſſiſt each other with advice and forces againſt all enemies; and not to give protection, much leſs advice or ſupport to rebellious ſubjects, nor to permit them to continue in their Dominions; and thoſe were to be eſteemed Rebels, whom one of the contracting powers ſhould declare to the other to be ſo.

In caſe Sweden ſhould be attacked in any part of its Dominions, in its rights and privileges, in its navigation or commerce, Great-Britain was to furniſh that Kingdom with an aid of ſix thouſand foot, who were to be ſent four months after the demand ſhould be made, and to that place which ſhould be appointed. The diſpoſition of the enemy to peace, the good offices, that ſhould be employed to produce that diſpoſition, were not to prevent the ſending of that aid. The power, who was to ſend the troops, was obliged to pay and maintain them; but the other was to take care, that in his Dominions they ſhould be furniſhed with every thing neceſſary, at the ſame price with his own troops.

The contracting powers were allowed to demand the aid, in whole or in part; to demand ſhips, proviſions, and ammunition for the ſurplus of the money; and it was ſettled, that a thouſand men a month ſhould be valued at four thouſand Rix-dollars. Theſe troops and their Commander were to be ſubject, with reſpect to all the operations of the war, to the power, to whoſe aſſiſtance they came; and the ſhips were to bear his colours.

If this number of troops was not ſufficient for the preſſing occaſions, a more conſiderable aid was to be ſent. 'And as Sweden (ſays the Treaty) is now in theſe unhappy circumſtances, with regard to the Czar of Muſcovy, whom many fruitleſs attempts have been made to induce to a peace, Great-Britain, conformably to its engagements in the treaty of 1700, which is renewed by the preſent, obliges herſelf to ſend a ſtrong ſquadron in the ſpring, to the aſſiſtance of his Swediſh Majeſty, to act in concert againſt the Czar, in order to oblige him to deſiſt from his invaſions, and to conſent to the juſt and reaſonable conditions of peace, which have been offered him.'

This was the main article of the treaty; in order to obtain aſſiſtance againſt that formidable enemy, Sweden had reſigned to the Elector of Hanover the Duchies of Bremen and Verden; and, in order to be revenged for the Czar's intrigues, the King of Great-Britain renewed the antient treaties, and entered into new engagements with the Crown of Sweden.

The other articles related to commerce, the particulars of which were to be regulated afterwards, for the contracting parties were deſirous to put an immediate ſtop to the conqueſts of the Muſcovites, and oppoſe the execution of their deſigns. The ſuccours, that were to be ſent, did not amount to a declaration of war, nor hinder a communication with the Prince, againſt whom they were ſent, provided however it was not prejudicial to the party aſſiſted. And therefore it was not permitted to furniſh the Czar with any thing, that ſerved directly for attack or defence, as powder, artillery, or ammunition; and their ſubjects were likewiſe forbid to ſerve him as ſoldiers or ſailors.

If the ſuccours cauſed an open war, it was to be carried on in concert, no propoſition of peace or truce, or any accommodation and convention whatever, was to be hearkened to but by mutual conſent. If one of the contracting powers was engaged in war, he was diſpenſed with ſending the ſtipulated ſuccours, and had even a right to recall his troops three months after having given notice of the neceſſity he was under of ſo doing. 'But the King of Great-Britain (adds the treaty) as a ſtrong mark of his friendſhip, promiſes, that the war, which he is now engaged in with Spain, ſhall not prevent his ſending the next ſpring a ſquadron ſufficient to ſtop the progreſs of the Czar, and induce him to peace, nor from furniſhing the Supplies of money, as long as the war with Denmark ſhall laſt.'

Theſe obligations were reciprocal between the two Crowns. Sweden, in particular, was obliged not to enter into any engagement with Spain, which might be contrary to the views of ſupporting the Emperor againſt that Kingdom. She undertook likewiſe to guaranty and maintain the Succeſſion of Great-Britain in the Houſe of of Hanover, and not to give any protection, refuge, aid, or counſel, in any manner whatever, to the perſon, who, in the life-time of King James II, ſtiled himſelf Prince of Wales, and who ſince that King's deceaſe had aſſumed the name of James III. King of Great-Britain.

Both Crowns had it ſo much at heart to limit the pretenſions and undertakings of the Czar, and

20. and to diveſt him by a peace, or by arms, of part of his conqueſts, that the following words were inſerted in the XVIIth article. 'As it is of the utmoſt concern to the Proteſtant Religion, to the commerce of the Kingdoms of Great-Britain and Sweden, and even to the repoſe of Chriſtendom, that the Czar ſhould not gain the aſcendant in the Baltic; if therefore that Prince ſhall refuſe to make peace with Sweden, and to reſtore to that Crown the Cities and Provinces neceſſary to eſtabliſh her ſecurity and the liberty of commerce, as they were before the preſent war; his Britannic Majeſty engages, not only to furniſh Sweden with the ſuccours, which he is obliged to by the preſent treaty, but likewiſe to uſe all his endeavours and intereſt with his other Allies, that, by their aſſiſtance, they may enable Sweden to repel the Czar, and force him to agree to a peace upon ſuch conditions, as may ſecure that Kingdom from inſults, and eſtabliſh the liberty of commerce in the Baltic.'

The ſame day, by the mediation of France and England, the peace was likewiſe ſigned between Sweden and Pruſſia. This treaty was the work of King George, who had laid the foundations of it in the preliminary treaty of the 25th of Auguſt, the laſt year. Sweden, by the advice and inſtances of the Mediators, gave up to the King of Pruſſia the City of Stetin, the diſtrict between the rivers of Oder and Pehnne, with the Iſles of Wollin and Uſedom, to poſſeſs and enjoy them for ever, with all their rights, and in the ſame manner, as the whole had been ceded and transferred by the Emperor and Empire to the Crown of Sweden, by the tenth article of the peace of Weſtphalia, in the year 1648, except the right of ſitting and voting in the Diet of the Empire, and in thoſe of the Circle.

The King of Pruſſia obliged himſelf, on his part, to preſerve to the inhabitants their liberties, rights, and privileges, as they now enjoyed them, as likewiſe the free exerciſe of their Religion, according to the Confeſſion of Augsburg. He likewiſe undertook to pay the debts, and to diſcharge the obligations due from the Crown of Sweden, to the Inhabitants and Communities of theſe Countries. He alſo promiſed not to aſſiſt or ſuccour, in any manner, nor under any pretenſe, the Czar, in his war againſt Sweden, to join with the King of Great-Britain, to engage the King of Denmark to make peace, and to reſtore that part of Pomerania he had ſeized.

Laſtly, the King of Pruſſia engaged to pay two millions of Rix-dollars of Leipſic money of 1690. This was almoſt purchaſing what was ceded to him; but that Prince abounded in ready money, and he could not better employ it, than in aggrandizing himſelf. Beſides, Sweden, exhauſted by a war, which had laſted twenty years, and was not yet ended, was very glad Pruſſia would purchaſe what ſhe was not in a condition to retake.

Thus King George, in concert with the Regent of France, diſpoſed of the affairs of Europe at pleaſure, and obliged the foreign Princes to ſubmit to his determinations. Spain, after having made ſeveral fruitleſs attempts to oppoſe him, was obliged to ſubmit to the ſtrict execution of the treaty of London of 1718: The Emperor was put in poſſeſſion of Sicily; the Duke of Savoy had Sardinia; Gibraltar and Port-Mahon remained in the hands of Great-Britain; the inveſtiture of the States of Tuſcany, Parma, and Placentia was not given; the Emperor continued to take the title of King of Spain, and to act as ſuch; the only favour, allowed that Crown, was the reſtoration of two or three places, taken by France; but the Emperor ſtill delayed the execution of his treaty with Spain, of which the Mediators took little notice. 1720.

The Czar's memorial.

The Czar was the only Prince, who would not comply: Inſtead of ſubmitting he continued the war a year or two longer, and made peace without any Mediator. Whatever reproaches might be caſt upon him, he loudly complained of the Elector of Hanover and King of Great-Britain, alledging, that King George in both qualities had failed in his engagements. His Reſident at London preſented a long memorial, in which he repreſented, that the particular engagements, which the King had entered into the laſt ſummer with the Queen of Sweden, and his Negotiations with the Kings of Poland, Pruſſia, and Denmark, in order to detach them from their Alliance with his Czariſh Majeſty, were inconſiſtent with the obligations, he had entered into as Elector of Brunſwick, never to treat with Sweden without the participation of the Czar, to uſe all poſſible means to procure him the ceſſion of Ingria, Carelia, Eſthonia, and Revel, and not to oppoſe in any manner the other pretenſions, he might form; obligations (added the memorial) contracted likewiſe as King of Great-Britain. Afterwards, by way of reproach, it was remarked, that the acquiſition of the Duchies of Bremen and Verden was owing to the earneſt ſollicitations of the Czar with the King of Denmark; that his Czariſh Majeſty had moreover offered a treaty of defenſive Alliance (like that of 1716) to maintain the Succeſſion of the Crown of Great-Britain in the Proteſtant line: That the reſt of the Czar's conduct had been anſwerable to theſe his proceedings: That, notwithſtanding theſe advances ſo often repeated, and ever neglected, not to ſay deſpiſed, no endeavours had been omitted to ſtir up enemies againſt the Czar, and to render him odious to the Engliſh, by making them believe, he intended to place the Pretender upon the Throne: That every thing had been done to embroil him with the Court of Vienna: That no explanation or accommodation was ever liſtened to; and all his propoſals for a reconciliation remained without any anſwer: That a ſtrong ſquadron had been ſent to the Baltic: That, warned by what had happened on other occaſions, he had deſired to be informed of the deſign of that ſquadron. That his deſire had been haughtily received: That the ſquadron, at the end of the campaign, had joined the Swediſh fleet: And, to compleat all theſe grievances, letters had been wrote to him in very imperious terms, and ſuch as ought not to be uſed to a Sovereign.

'Your Majeſty, ſaid the Memorial, who knows ſo well what is due to Sovereigns, when they are to be treated with, may judge by all that has paſſed on this occaſion, whether the manner, in which your Miniſters proceeded in offering the Czar your mediation, was agreeable to the friendſhip, which has ſubſiſted at all times between the Crowns of Ruſſia and Great-Britain; and whether a mediation offered with circumſtances ſo little equitable can be conſidered as impartial. To tell a Sovereign, in an imperious and threatening manner (as your Miniſters did) that he muſt put an end to the war, in order to obtain a reaſonable peace; and to propoſe to him

1720. him the mediation of a power, at the ſame time that he is told, that power is in league with his enemy, this is not endeavouring to induce him to peace, but rather ſeeking pretences for a rupture.'

The memorial concluded with demanding a poſitive anſwer, in order to know what was to be expected on the part of his Britiſh Majeſty.

This memorial, though ſeemingly expreſſed in a plain manner, was very artfully worded. Accordingly it was anſwered very carefully by the Miniſtry of Hanover, and of Great-Britain.

The anſwer to it. The Hanoverian Miniſter ſaid, it was the Czar, who had violated the treaty of 1715, by coming with an army to ſettle in the Empire, and by ſeizing the Provinces contiguous to Hanover. That the leaſt, that could be done in thoſe circumſtances, was to ſhew, theſe proceedings were not approved of: That the inſtances, which had been made for the withdrawing this army, were indiſpenſable, conſidering the rank the Elector of Hanover bore in the Empire: That, however, this was the ground of the Czar's reſentments, of which he had given many proofs by his correſpondence with the enemies of King George, and by his endeavours to deprive him of his friends. The particulars were then given of the Czar's intrigues with Baron Gortz, with the Pretender's Emiſſaries, and with the Court of Madrid, and eſpecially of the projects formed with the King of Sweden to carry the war into the Empire, and to aſſiſt that Crown to recover the Dominions in Germany, which had been taken from him. That, beſides theſe deſigns, an Invaſion of Scotland had alſo been concerted, and the Czar was upbraided with having continually endeavoured to deceive and amuſe his Allies.

It is therefore evident (concludes the anſwer) if the Czar has been prevented by a treaty with Sweden, he gave juſt cauſe for it, by his proceedings, as he had long been treating for a ſeparate peace, and was upon the point of reducing Sweden, and carrying the war into the bowels of the Empire.'

Earl Stanhope anſwered the complaints, which related to the King of Great-Britain. He repreſented the extravagant conditions, upon which the Czar had offered to enter into a ſtrict Alliance with Great-Britain. 'He required, ſaid the Earl, that his conqueſts upon Sweden ſhould be guaranteed to him; that he ſhould be aſſiſted with an Engliſh fleet, and that the fleet ſhould be under his command, which would have made all accommodation with Sweden wholly impoſſible, and incenſed thoſe powers, who were concerned in the preſervation of that Crown, and whoſe friendſhip was ſo neceſſary to accompliſh the projects formed for the tranquillity of Europe.'

The Earl then obſerves, that the Czar's complaints were intended only to cauſe his own deſigns to be overlooked: 'For if it be true (ſays the Earl) that the Czar, intimate Ally of the King of Denmark, had meditated no leſs than to make himſelf maſter of the Sound, and of Copenhagen (inſtead of making the deſcent on Schonen, with which the public had been amuſed for ſome months) it is natural to endeavour to put the change upon the public in that particular, and to wipe off the impreſſions of ſuch notions, by recriminations deſtitute of all manner of ground: And, if the Czar had really ſuch deſigns in view, it is probable, that nothing kept him from putting them in execution, but the juſt apprehenſion that the ſame ſhould be oppoſed by his Majeſty's fleet; which would infallibly have happened in ſuch a caſe. And may not the Czar's reſentment of the miſcarriage of ſo great a project, through the apprehenſion of the Britiſh fleet, be the cauſe of his great eſtrangement from his Majeſty ſince that time; from whence one may date the beginning of the animoſity he has ſhewn againſt his Majeſty on ſo many occaſions.

This was plainly perceived ſome time after, when, by the letters of Baron Gortz and Count Gyllemburg, it was diſcovered, that the Czar was ſo offended with his Majeſty, that he entertained ſerious thoughts of making a ſeparate peace with the King of Sweden, and aſſiſting the Pretender. And indeed, whatever aſſurances have been given to the contrary, the Czar's conduct ſeems to have been intirely agreeable to that plan. The Negotiations of the Ruſſian Miniſter with the Pretender's Agents are well known (1). All the world has ſeen the great number of Engliſh Rebels, to whom the Czar has given all manner of protection and encouragement. It is known, that the Conferences at Aland, which were begun without his Majeſty's participation, were the reſult of an interview at Loo with Baron Gortz, in Auguſt 1717. That Miniſter's papers have ſhewn, that the Invaſion of Scotland was to have immediately followed the conqueſt of Norway; it is therefore no wonder, the Czar was not ſollicitous either to prevent that conqueſt, or to aſſiſt the King of Denmark on ſo preſſing an occaſion. In fine, information has been had of the propoſitions the Czar has made, more than once, to the Court of Spain, to engage them in an offenſive Alliance againſt England, in favour of the Pretender.

It was ſhewn likewiſe, that the Czar had perſiſted in his deſigns ſince the death of the King of Sweden: That he had endeavoured to engage Queen Ulrica in the ſchemes of her Predeceſſor: And, not ſucceeding by his inſinuations, he had attempted to conſtrain her by force, and by almoſt unparalleled inſults. 'But, notwithſtanding all this, his Majeſty (continues the Earl) perſiſts in the ſame ſentiments of moderation towards the Czar, and renews the offer of his mediation. Nothing is more conformable to the intereſt of that Prince, ſince it is intended to procure him a peace, which will ſecure him a conſiderable part of his conqueſts. It is hoped, that ſo wiſe a Prince as the Czar will not only be inclined, for the general good of peace, to moderate

(1) People (ſays the Memorial) are not ignorant of the Negotiations of one Jerneghan, and of Sir Hugh Paterſon, brother-in-law to the late Lord Marr, with the Ruſſian Miniſter, during the Czar's ſtay in Holland. Intelligence has been had of the ſame Miniſter's intrigues, both with the late Duke of Ormond, during the ſtay he made incognito at Mittau, and with Sir Henry Sterling and the ſaid Jerneghan at Petersburg, as well as of the correſpondence eſtabliſhed, by means of this laſt perſon, between the Czar and the Court of Spain.

(1) The

derate his pretenſions, but likewiſe acknowledge, that it is more conſiſtent with prudence to obtain by good treaties, and the conſent of other great powers, ſuch conſiderable territories as may be yielded to him by the Crown of Sweden, than to expoſe the fruits of his ſucceſſes to the events of a war, which he will be obliged to ſupport alone. Sweden neither ought nor can give up to him Revel. If the Czar, after ſuch offers, perſiſts in his unwillingneſs to reſtore Revel, he will only alarm all the other powers, and unite the moſt of them againſt him.

The ſincere deſire the King has to reſtore a general peace, and his zeal to be reconciled with the Czar for that purpoſe, incline his Majeſty to give him, on this occaſion, the advice of a friend, and to exhort him ſeriouſly to conſider it.

But if, contrary to all expectation, the King's good intentions ſhould prove fruitleſs by the Czar's refuſal; and if his Majeſty, by virtue of his engagements with Sweden (which he is fully reſolved to maintain) ſhould be obliged to take meaſures diſagreeable to Ruſſia, he will, however, have the conſolation of having neglected nothing to prevent the fatal conſequences, which may reſult from it.

Theſe memorials and anſwers produced no reconciliation between the two Princes. The anſwers, however, made an impreſſion upon the Nation in favour of the King. And, indeed, it muſt be confeſſed, that it was found policy to join with Sweden againſt the Czar, and by that means make amends for uniting with that Prince to ſtrip a Crown, which Religion and Commerce ought always to endear to Great-Britain.

During the Seſſion of Parliament, the reconciliation of the Royal Family was effected chiefly by the endeavours of the Duke of Devonſhire and Mr. Walpole. They had ſeveral Conferences, for that purpoſe, with the Miniſters, with ſuch ſucceſs, that, on the 23d of April, the Lord Lumley, Gentleman of the Prince of Wales's Bed-Chamber, waited on the King, to know his pleaſure, when the Prince ſhould attend him. He was anſwered, immediately; and Mr. Secretary Craggs having accompanied the Lord Lumley to Leiceſter-Fields, to acquaint the Prince with it, he immediately went to St. James's Houſe, and was half an hour in private Conference with the King. Having made his ſubmiſſion in the manner agreed on, he went to ſee his eldeſt Daughter, the Princeſs Anne, who, five days before, was taken ill of the ſmall-pox. The Prince, at his return to Leiceſter-Houſe, was, by the King's command, attended by a party of the Yeomen of the Guard, and of the Horſe-guards, and the Foot-guards began alſo to mount the guard at his houſe. In the evening, the Princeſs of Wales had an interview with the King; and, the next morning, the Duke of Devonſhire, Earl Cowper, the Lord Townſhend, Mr. Walpole, Mr. Methuen, and Mr. Pulteney were admitted to kiſs the King's hand; and the Duke of Devonſhire carried the Sword of State before the King to the Royal Chapel, the Prince of Wales accompanying them thither; and, at their return, the Officers and Retainers to the two Courts congratulated each other upon this reconciliation. The next day, the Great Officers and Miniſters of State, and of the Houſehold, and other perſons of diſtinction, waited on the Prince of Wales, who, in the evening, went with his whole Court to the apartments at St. James's, and had a long Conference with the King. Moſt of the foreign Miniſters had alſo, on this occaſion, a private audience of the Prince of Wales. 1720.

Upon the riſing of the Parliament, the King held a great Council, in which he declared his deſign of viſiting his Dominions in Germany, and named the Lords Juſtices during his abſence. They were the ſame with thoſe of the laſt year; to whom were added the Lord Townſhend (who was declared likewiſe Lord Preſident of the Council) and the Duke of Devonſhire. The King, in the ſame Council, conferred alſo ſeveral honours and preferments: The Earl of Dorſet was created Duke of Dorſet; the Earl of Bridgewater, Duke of Bridgewater; the Lord Viſcount Caſtleton, Earl Caſtleton in the County of York; Hugh Boſcawen, Baron Boſcawen, and Viſcount Falmouth in the County of Cornwall; John Wallop, Baron Wallop of Wallop, and Viſcount Lymington in the County of Southampton (1).

The King goes to Hanover.

On the 15th of June, the King imbarked at Greenwich on board the Carolina Yatcht, and landed, the next morning, at Helvoet-Sluice, from whence he proceeded to Hanover. At his arrival in Germany, he found the peace concluded between Sweden and Denmark. This peace was of great importance; for the Czar was left alone, and had reaſon to fear (as he had been threatened) that all his Allies, who had been drawn off from him one after another, would unite againſt him, to reduce him within his antient bounds.

Negotiations with Denmark.

The treaty was ſigned at Frederickſtadt, on the 22d of June. The Preamble did great honour to King George; ſetting forth, that it was reſolved to put an end to the cruel war, which had laſted ten years, by the preſſing inſtances of the King of Great-Britain, who has taken all imagi-

(1) The reſt of the honours and preferments were: Matthew Ducie Morton, Baron Ducie de Morton, in the County of Stafford; John Barrington of Becket, in the County of Berks, Baron Barrington of Newcaſtle, and Viſcount Barrington of Ardglaſs, in the Kingdom of Ireland; Thomas Gage, Baron Caſtelbarr, and Viſcount Gage of Caſtle-Iſland, in the Kingdom of Ireland; William Vane, Baron Vane of Dungannon in the County of Tyrone, and Viſcount Vane; Sir Marcus Beresford, Baron Beresford of Beresford in the County of Cavan, and Viſcount Tyrone in the Kingdom of Ireland; John Blunt of the City of London, Sir William Chapman, and Thomas Coleby of Kenſington were created Baronets. The Duke of Kingſton was appointed Lord Privy-Seal; the Duke of Grafton, Lord Lieutenant of Ireland; Mr. Robert Walpole, Paymaſter General of the King's forces; Mr. Methuen, Comptroller of the Houſhold; the Duke of Queensberry and the Earl of Harold, Gentlemen of the Bed-Chamber; the Earl of Sunderland, John Aiſlabie, George Baillie, Sir Charles Turner, and Richard Edgecombe, Commiſſioners of the Treaſury; the Earl of Weſtmorland, John Chetwynd, Sir Charles Cook, Paul Docminique, Martin Bladen, and John Aſhe, Commiſſioners of Trade and Plantations; Sir Wilfred Lawſon, Groom of his Majeſty's Bed-Chamber; Sir David Dalrymple, Auditor of the Exchequer in Scotland; Edward Elliot, Commiſſioner of the Exciſe; Henry Cartwright, Commiſſioner of the Victualling-Office; Charles Withers, Surveyor General of his Majeſty's Woods; Colonel Charles Churchill, Governor of Chelſea-Hoſpital; the Lord Glenorchy, Ambaſſador to the King of Denmark; and Mr. Moleſworth, Envoy to the Court of Turin.

1720. imaginable pains to reconcile the parties, and has engaged them to conſent to a ſuſpenſion of arms, the more eaſily to come at a peace, for which his Majeſty has offered them his mediation, which they have accepted. By this treaty, every thing, that had paſſed during the war, was to be buried in eternal oblivion; liberty of commerce was intirely reſtored; both ſides renounced, in the ſtrongeſt manner, all Treaties, Agreements, and Alliances made with other powers, as far as they ſhould be contrary to the preſent treaty of peace, and, for the future, neither party ſhould enter into any Treaty or Alliance, which might be prejudicial or inconvenient to the other.

As the Czar and his pretenſions were chiefly aimed at in theſe Negotiations, it was required of the King of Denmark, that he ſhould, in the moſt expreſs terms, oblige himſelf not to aſſiſt the Czar, during the war, under any pretence whatever, either with advice or forces: 'And becauſe (added the Treaty) it is the intereſt, not only of the King and Crown of Denmark, but alſo of other Nations, that this war ſhould end in ſuch a manner, that the liberty of commerce ſhould be reſtored in the Baltic, his Daniſh Majeſty promiſes not to ſuffer any Muſcovite ſhips in any of his ports in the ſea of Denmark or Norway; nor will permit them to bring in thither prizes of any Nation whatever; and if it ſhall happen, that theſe prizes ſhould enter into his ports, he will reſtore them to the Owners.'

The King of Denmark was put in poſſeſſion of Sleſwick, and reſolved to keep it. It was neceſſary likewiſe, in order to engage him to peace, that the King of Great-Britain ſhould guaranty to him the peaceable poſſeſſion of it, which had been done the 30th of October the laſt year. On the other hand, Sweden, indiſpenſably engaged as ſhe was with the Duke of Holſtein, could not, with any decency, give up that Duchy to the King of Denmark. But the following expedient was made uſe of to ſurmount theſe difficulties: 'Foraſmuch (ſays the Treaty) as the Duke of Sleſwick-Holſtein has been concerned in the war of the North; and as the ſtrict Alliance, between that Prince and the Crown of Sweden, might be an obſtacle to peace with regard to the Duchy of Sleſwick; his Swediſh Majeſty declares for Himſelf and the Crown of Sweden, and promiſes not to oppoſe, either directly or indirectly, what may have been ſtipulated concerning that Duchy, in favour of the King of Denmark, by the mediating powers, which have co-operated in the preſent treaty; and Sweden will not give any aſſiſtance to the Duke of Holſtein againſt Denmark, which may be prejudicial to this ſtipulation.'

The King of Pruſſia, in making peace with Sweden, had been enjoined by the Mediators to purchaſe the Countries, he had taken from that Crown. The King of Denmark, on the contrary, was obliged to ſell his conqueſts to Sweden, or, what amounted to the ſame, to give them up for an equivalent.

Thus the King of Denmark conſented to reſtore Upper Pomerania, the Iſle of Rugen, the towns and fortreſſes of Marſtrand and Stralſundt, and all the other Iſlands and Dependences without any exception, which had been taken from Sweden, in the ſtate they were in at the publication of the ſuſpenſion of arms, with the artillery and magazines, which were there, when Denmark ſeized them. He likewiſe gave 172 up the City of Wiſmar, with its territory and dependences.

In return for theſe reſtitutions, Sweden conſented, that, for the future, and from the day of the ratification of the treaty, there ſhould be no longer any difference of Nation in the Sound and the two Belts; ſo that the Kingdom of Sweden renounced the exemption from toll in thoſe parts, and conſented, that her ſubjects ſhould pay them to Denmark for their ſhips and cargoes, upon the ſame foot, as the ſubjects of Great-Britain and the United-Provinces paid them.

Moreover, Sweden, to give a ſtill more ſenſible proof of her deſire for peace, bound herſelf to pay to the King of Denmark ſix hundred thouſand Rix-dollars at one payment. This ſum was to be put into the hands of the Mediators, not to be delivered till after the ſtipulated ceſſions were executed by the Court of Denmark. It was added, in expreſs terms, that all the pretenſions of Denmark upon Sweden ſhould be extinct, by the obligation to the payment of toll in the Sound and Belts, and by the payment of the ſix hundred thouſand Rix-dollars. The other articles contained various regulations, all proper to ſtrengthen the peace, and prevent, as far as poſſible, all occaſions of complaint.

The Mediators took great pains to prevail with the King of Denmark to grant Sweden ſuch moderate terms. Beſides the antient and natural antipathy between the two Nations, which was to be ſurmounted, the conqueſts, which had coſt him ſo much, and were ſo very convenient for him, were to be renounced. Undoubtedly, the apprehenſion of ſeeing the forces of all the Allies of King George united againſt him made a greater impreſſion upon him, than the hopes of aſſiſtance from the Czar, who would not hear either of peace or any mediation from the King of Great-Britain.

Admiral Norris had ſailed in April with a ſquadron ſtrong enough to give weight to the King's mediation. When he arrived at Copenhagen, he wrote to Prince Dolgorouki, the Czar's Ambaſſador at the Court of Denmark, to notify to him, 'That the King, his Maſter, had ordered him to come into thoſe ſeas with a ſquadron of his ſhips, to procure a juſt and reaſonable peace between the Crowns of Sweden and Ruſſia; and that his Majeſty having at heart the welfare of his ſubjects, as alſo the concerns of ſuch Nations, as live in amity with him, ardently wiſhes, that this affair may be accompliſhed in a Chriſtian, effectual, and ſpeedy manner: That, for this end, he was commanded to notify to the Miniſters, Generals, and Admirals of the Czar, the repeated offers of his Britannic Majeſty's mediation of peace between the two Crowns; and that his Czarian Majeſty, duly conſidering the preſent ſtate of affairs, would liſten to reaſonable conditions for an accommodation; and leſt, for want of full powers, this affair ſhould be obſtructed, the ſame were ſent to his Envoy at Stockholm, and likewiſe to himſelf as his Admiral, to the end, jointly or ſeparately, they may act in the quality of his Majeſty's Plenipotentiaries, in order to effect a peace between the two Crowns, by way of mediation.' Prince Dolgorouki returned for anſwer, 'That the Czar had nothing more at heart than peace and tranquillity, of which he had given clear proofs during

20. during the war; but, becauſe Sweden had never expreſſed the like ſentiments, the continuation of the war could be imputed only to that Crown. That, as for the expreſſions in the Admiral's letter about the means of a peace, he could return no anſwer to that; and, in caſe his Britannic Majeſty had any propoſals to make to the Czar, he hoped the Admiral would excuſe him from doing it, ſince it could be done a more compendious way.'

Upon this anſwer the Engliſh fleet joined that of Sweden, but however as auxiliaries only. The Ruſſian fleet had prevented them, and landed near Uma five thouſand men, who met with no reſiſtance; they ſet fire to that town, and to all the villages in the neighbourhood. As the inhabitants did not expect ſuch an attack, all their effects were ſeized by the Muſcovites, who without any loſs returned to their ſhips. The combined fleets did not arrive till the enemy had reached the port of Revel, where it was not judged proper to attack them, but rather to make a diverſion in Finland. Nothing material was done, and ſome Swediſh ſhips, having imprudently engaged a ſuperior force without being timely ſupported, were very near being deſtroyed.

The Czar was not ſo eaſy to be reduced as Spain had been. Poland, the only Country contiguous to his Dominions, did not think fit to attack him: And it was a great point gained, that King Auguſtus, notwithſtanding his obligations to the Czar, had conſented to a ſeparate peace with Sweden.

Though King George could not at this time ſucceed in making peace between Ruſſia and Sweden, he had however at the end of the campaign ſome hopes of it. Ulrica, who had been placed on the Throne of Sweden in the room of her brother Charles XII, and had married the head of the family of Heſſe, was extremely deſirous he ſhould be joined with her in the Adminiſtration of the regal power. To this end ſhe writ with her own hand a letter to each of the four orders of the States, repreſenting how neceſſary in the preſent difficult juncture, and how conducive to the public welfare, would be the aſſiſtance of his Royal Highneſs in the Adminiſtration of the Government, and therefore hoped the States would gratify her in conferring on him the regal dignity.

As the propoſal of placing the Prince of Heſſe on the Throne, jointly with the Queen, met with great oppoſition from the Nobles, ſhe writ a ſecond letter to the States, offering to reſign her ſhare of the regal power, and to be content that it ſhould be executed by her Royal conſort alone. Upon this the States unanimouſly elected him King (1).

The advancement of Frederick to the Throne of Sweden gave him occaſion to ſend one of his principal Officers to notify it to the Czar, who in return ſent one of his Generals to congratulate the new King. Upon this were grounded the hopes of a reconciliation. But the Ruſſian Envoy was commiſſioned only to demand ſome paſſports, and propoſe an exchange of priſoners, and a ſuſpenſion of arms during the winter. He added however, and doubtleſs with a view to King George, that the Czar was not ſo averſe to peace as might be thought, and only wanted reaſonable terms to be made him, for which there was no need of a Mediator. 1720.

Theſe things, relating to the affairs of Sweden and Ruſſia, had for the moſt part paſſed before the King's arrival in his German Dominions. All the foreign Miniſters followed him to Hanover, where he did not want buſineſs or matter to exerciſe his talents for Negotiation, which after all are the true talents of a Sovereign. Miniſters indeed generally ſupply what may be wanting in a Prince; but the caſe was otherwiſe with King George. He looked into every thing himſelf: His Miniſters did nothing without him, whilſt he did many things without them.

The treaties of peace to which ſeveral States had been led, and in ſome meaſure compelled, were for the moſt part tranſacted in haſte. It was impoſſible to ſettle the particular intereſts of the contracting Powers and their Allies. Theſe treaties, properly ſpeaking, were only a ceſſation from hoſtilities, and an ingagement to more exact and regular Negotiations. To fix and aſcertain ſo many complicated intereſts, and prevent the flames of war from kindling afreſh, King George and the Regent of France joined their endeavours to eſtabliſh two Congreſſes, one at Brunſwick for the affairs of the North, and the other at Cambray for the reſt of Europe.

Progreſs of the South-Sea affairs.

Whilſt the King was employed abroad in hearing and ſettling the grievances and intereſts of the Nations and their Sovereigns, particularly thoſe of the Proteſtants of Germany, the Regency were no leſs employed at home in curbing the exceſſive deſire of gain, which the progreſs of the South-Sea Company had raiſed, and in cureing the deſpair which attended its fall. As theſe are the moſt conſiderable events of this reign, and ſuch as will never be forgot by Great-Britain, they deſerve to be related at large.

Account of Mr. Law and the Miſſiſſippi Company.

The South-Sea ſcheme ſeems to be taken from that of the Miſſiſſippi Company in France, formed by Mr. Law the laſt year. Mr. Law was born at Edinburgh, and had propoſed to the Parliament of Scotland, in 1705, a ſcheme for ſupplying the Nation with money, which, though favoured by the Duke of Argyle, then High-Commiſſioner, and ſeveral Members of Parliament, was however rejected. Upon this he applied himſelf

(1) The act of election, which was read to the King, was to this effect: That the King is elected according to the Laws and Conſtitutions of the Kingdom, not out of any duty, but by the free-will of all the Senators and the States, who do declare the Kingdom hereditary in the male-iſſue his Majeſty ſhall have by the Queen, and who, upon the deceaſe of their Father, ſhall take upon themſelves the Adminiſtration, without any farther election; but, in caſe both their Majeſties ſhall die without male-iſſue, that all the States ſhall proceed to a new election, without any previous ſummons, thirty days after the deceaſe of the Survivor. That they think themſelves well aſſured his Majeſty will never ſuffer the Sovereignty (or abſolute Power) which always proved ſo pernicious to the Kingdom, to be introduced again; but that he, as well as the heirs of his body, will govern the Kingdom according to the Laws and Conſtitutions, maintain it in the Chriſtian Evangelical Religion, and let the ſubjects have the unprejudiced enjoyment of all their privileges, according to the aſſurance given in writing by his Majeſty; in which caſe they will always behave themſelves as faithful and true liege ſubjects to his Majeſty. Hiſt. Reg.

(1) The

1720. himſelf to the Lord-Treaſurer Harley, and tranſmitted to him another propoſal for the increaſe of trade and credit, but meeting with no incouragement, and not being able to get his pardon, for having killed Beau Wilſon in a duel, he was compelled to live abroad, where, after undergoing great variety of perſecutions from his enemies, he ſettled in France. During his ſtay in England, he had informed himſelf fully of the management of the Bank and Eaſt-India Company, and, in order to ſettle the fluctuating manner of things in France, he propoſed to the Regent to lay the foundation of credit by erecting a Bank. The Regent approved of the ſcheme, the Bank was eſtabliſhed: The King began the ſubſcription, the Regent followed, with innumerable others. This project met with ſuch ſucceſs, that, in three ſubſcriptions, more than all the money in France was ſaid to be ſubſcribed to it: For, by the end of the year 1719, bills were given out for 640 millions of livres, which exceeds the value of the bills circulated by all the Banks in Europe. There was added a circulation of 360 millions, and the whole amounted to 1000 millions of livres, making above 38 millions of pounds ſterling at the Exchange then current (1).

Bank erected in France.

A Bank being thus erected, and credit eſtabliſhed, Mr. Law formed the project of the Miſſiſſippi or India Company, who were to have the ſole privilege of the trade to Louiſiana, or the Country of Miſſiſſippi, ſo called from a river of that name, which runs through it from North to South. Purſuant to this ſcheme, a ſubſcription of ſtock was opened, and all were admitted to ſubſcribe. The ſum firſt propoſed to be raiſed was only 60 millions of livres, to be ſubſcribed in State-bills. Theſe State-bills or public ſecurities were then very low, being from 57 to 63 per cent. diſcount; but, as they were received at par without any loſs in the Company's ſtock, the firſt ſubſcription of 60 millions was ſoon filled. The capital ſtock was then enlarged to 100 millions, and the Actions or Shares roſe to 120. After this, a new creation of Actions was made for 25 millions more, which were delivered out at 110, and ſoon roſe to 200. As people appeared very eager to lay out their money this way, an arret of the Council of State was publiſhed, for circulating Bank-bills to the value of 25 millions, in the Miſſiſſippi Company, upon which the Actions, about Midſummer 1719, run up 560. The Company, finding their credit ſo well eſtabliſhed, propoſed to lend the King 50 millions, for which there was a new creation of Actions for 25 millions, upon the foot of 200 per Action. About the end of Auguſt, the Company propoſed to the King another loan of 1200 millions, at three per cent. As the Actions were now advanced to 1200, the Company, in order to raiſe the loan, opened their books for 500 millions, by the ſale of 50 millions of Actions, at the rate of a 1000 per Action. The ſubſcriptions were filled in a few hours; and, in leſs than three weeks, two ſubſcriptions more, for the like ſum of 500 millions each, were opened with the ſame ſucceſs. The firſt payment of theſe three ſubſcriptions roſe ſo conſiderably, as to be ſold at 300 per cent. profit. From that time the Actions roſe to 2050 (2).

The Miſſiſſippi ſtock was in its greateſt proſperity during the months of November and December 1719; and, in the January following, Mr. Law, who was become the greateſt ſubject in Europe, was made Comptroller-General of the Finances of France. From that time the ſtock began to decline, and, by the end of May, all things fell into confuſion at Paris, occaſioned by an arret to reduce Bank notes and Actions of the Company. Mr. Law reſigned his place, and had two Swiſs Officers given him for his guard. By this project the State indeed gained immenſely, 1500 millions of the King's debts being tranſpoſed from him to the people, who were content to diſcharge the public, and owe the money to one another. Conſequently, when the fall came (except a few great fortunes that were made) there was almoſt a general ruin through all France.

This revolution of the Miſſiſſippi ſtock at Paris was not regarded in England, where the like infatuation univerſally prevailed, and was followed by the like conſequences.

When the bill paſſed in favour of the South-Sea Company, it was expected, the ſtock would have greatly advanced, but the contrary happened; for, the day after, it fell from 310 to 290. In order to raiſe it, a rumour was ſpread, that Earl Stanhope had received overtures in France to exchange Gibraltar and Port-Mahon for ſome places in Peru, for the ſecurity and enlargement of the Engliſh trade in the South-Sea; which had its effect in Exchange-Alley. For, on the 12th of April, five days after the Royal aſſent was given to the bill, the Directors opened their books for a ſubſcription of a million, at the rate of 300 l. for every 100 l. capital. Such was the concourſe of perſons of all ranks, that this firſt ſubſcription was found to amount to above two millions of original ſtock. It was to be paid at five payments of 60 l. each, for one ſhare of 100 l. In a few days the ſtock advanced to 340, and the ſubſcriptions were ſold for double the price of the firſt payment. To raiſe the ſtock ſtill higher, on the 21ſt of April it was declared in a General Court, That the Midſummer dividend ſhould be ten per cent. and all ſubſcriptions ſhould be entitled to the ſame. Thoſe reſolutions anſwering the end deſigned, the Directors, to improve the infatuation of the monied men, opened their books for a ſecond ſubſcription of one million, at 400 l. per cent. In a few hours, no leſs than a million and half was ſubſcribed at that rate; and ſo great was

Projects of the South-Sea Company.

(1) The French crown, of five livres and two fifths, was worth 4 s. and 1 d. $\frac{1}{2}$ Engliſh money.

(2) Thus the capital ſtock conſiſted of theſe ſeven ſubſcriptions:

60 millions of the firſt ſubſcription.
40 of the ſecond.
25 of the third.
25 of the fourth.
50 of the fifth.
50 of the ſixth.
50 of the ſeventh.

300 millions.

The total of the Actions, which, when they ſold at 2050, the total amounted to above 6000 millions of livres, or 228 millions ſterling.

(1) How

20. was the confidence which was placed in the Directors, that many depoſited in their hands their annuities, without knowing what price the Company would allow for them.

On the 19th of May, the Directors thought fit to ſettle the terms and prices for the long and ſhort annuities, which had been ſubſcribed; and, the ſtock being that day 375 l. per cent, it was reſolved to allow, for every 100 l. per annum of the long annuities, 700 l. in the capital ſtock (which at 375 l. per cent. amounted to 2625 l.) and 575 l. in bonds and money: So the total for each 100 l. per annum amounted to 3200 l. or thirty-two years purchaſe. For every 90 l. per annum of the ſhort annuities, they agreed to allow 350 l. in the capital ſtock, which, at 375 l. per cent, amounted to 1312 l. 10 s. and in bonds and money 217 l. 10 s which together made 1530 l. or ſeventeen years purchaſe.

Theſe offers occaſioned at firſt great murmurings among the Annuitants, who, having expected ten years, found they were to have but eight years and a quarter's purchaſe. Upon which ſome withdrew their orders, and others reſolved not to ſubſcribe. But, the South-Sea Managers having found means to raiſe their ſtock to 500 l. per cent, moſt of the Annuitants appeared eaſy; ſo that it was computed, that, by the 29th of May, almoſt two thirds of the annuities were ſubſcribed.

The arts of the Stock-Jobbers drew a great concourſe of perſons of all ranks into Exchange-Alley, by whoſe unexampled eagerneſs of laying out their money in a fund, that promiſed ſo plentiful a return of gain, that ſtock, which about the latter end of May, was at about 550, roſe on a ſudden ſo prodigiouſly, that on Thurſday, the 2d of June, it came up to 890. Many cautious perſons being willing to take this opportunity to ſecure their great profits, there appeared the next day ſo many Sellers in the Alley, that, by two or three o'clock in the afternoon, the ſtock fell to 640; at which the chief Directors of the South-Sea Company being alarmed, ſet their agents to work, by whoſe artful management the ſtock was the ſame evening advanced to 750; about which price, with ſome ſmall fluctuation, it continued till the cloſing of the Company's books on the 22d of June. In the mean time, the South-Sea ſtock ſuffered a conſiderable ſhock. For many perſons, who were to follow the King to Hanover, and others, who found a difficulty of making their ſecond payment to the firſt ſubſcription, were both equally deſirous to turn their ſtock into money; ſo that, for ſome days, the number of Sellers exceeded that of Buyers. Wherefore the Managers of the Company formed two expedients: The firſt was their lending out money, or notes, to the Proprietors of their capital ſtock, to the ſum of 400 l. upon 100 l. original ſtock (which ſhewed it to be worth above that ſum) at the rate of 4 l. per cent. per ann. The ſecond was their giving public notice, 'That all perſons poſſeſſed of any of the Company's bonds, which fell due on the 25th of June, might then have their money for the ſame of the Company's Caſhier: And that the Bonds would be taken in on the ſecond payment for the 2,250,000 l. South-Sea ſtock, ſold by ſubſcription after the rate of 300 l. for each 100 l. original ſtock.' By theſe means money being plenty, and the Stock-Jobbers in good humour, the South-Sea Company opened their books for a third ſubſcription, at the rate of 1000 l. for each 100 l. capital ſtock, to be paid in ten equal payments, one in hand, and the other nine half-yearly. But, ſome men in power having taken this opportunity to oblige their friends, their liſts were ſo full, that the Directors inlarged it to four millions capital ſtock, which at that price amounted to forty millions ſterling. And, what is more ſtrange, theſe laſt ſubſcriptions were, before the end of June, ſold at above 200 l. per cent. advance, and, after the cloſing of the transfer-books, the original ſtock roſe to above 1000 l. per cent. At the ſame time the firſt ſubſcriptions were at 560, and the ſecond at 610 per cent. advance, the Bank at 260, and Eaſt-India at 440. 1720.

The Bubbles.

The whole Nation was become Stock-Jobbers. The South-Sea was like an infectious diſtemper, which ſpread itſelf in an aſtoniſhing manner. Every evening produced new projects, which were juſtly called Bubbles, and new Companies appeared every day. Theſe were countenanced by the greateſt of the Nobility. The Prince of Wales was Governor of the Welſh Copper; the Duke of Chandois, of York-Buildings; the Duke of Bridgewater formed a Company for building houſes in London and Weſtminſter. There were near a hundred different kinds of projects or bubbles; and it was computed, that above a million and a half was won and loſt by theſe unwarrantable practices, by which many unwary perſons were defrauded and impoveriſhed, and a few crafty men enriched, to the great detriment of domeſtic trade. The King had, the ſame day the Parliament roſe, publiſhed a proclamation, declaring all theſe unlawful projects ſhould be deemed as common nuſances, and proſecuted as ſuch; with the penalty of 500 l. for any Broker to buy or ſell any ſhares in them. Notwithſtanding this proclamation, ſeveral of the illegal projects were ſtill carried on; upon which the Lords Juſtices, on the 12th of July, to put a ſtop to all farther proceedings, ordered all the petitions, that had been preſented for patents and charters, to be diſmiſſed.

Proclamation againſt them, June 11.

The ſeveral ſums, intended to be raiſed by theſe projects, amounted to no leſs than three hundred millions ſterling, a ſum ſo immenſe, that it exceeds the value of all the lands in England, at the rate of twenty years purchaſe. However, the eagerneſs of getting riches, by quick and eaſy methods, had, at that time, ſo intoxicated the minds of moſt people of all degrees, that the moſt extravagant bubbles found many Subſcribers: Some of whom ſold their firſt ſubſcriptions at a great profit, whereby the laſt Buyers were conſiderable loſers (1).

The transfer-books of the South-Sea Company were ſhut up the whole month of July. During that time, there was no great variation, except only that the price of the capital ſtock decreaſed gradually,

(1) How great the general infatuation or thirſt of gain was, appears from the following inſtance: A propoſal was offered, 'For carrying on an undertaking of great advantage, but nobody to know what it is.' The Projector formed a ſcheme for half a million, by which every Subſcriber, paying down two guineas for ſubſcribing,

1720. gradually, from above 1000 to 930, in proportion as the third ſubſcription at a 1000 roſe to 330 advance or clear profit. In the mean time, the Directors, at a meeting on the 8th of July, reſolved to open their books for taking in ſubſcriptions of the lottery tickets, and other ſhort annuities, to the amount of ſix millions ſterling: But, though they did not then think fit to declare at what rate they deſigned to take thoſe effects, yet the Proprietors entirely truſted to their integrity, and readily ſubſcribed the ſame on the 14th and 15th of that month. After which the books were ſhut up. From that time to the end of July, the ſtock fell gradually from about 1000 to 900, including the Midſummer dividend. In the mean time, it being confidently reported, that the capital ſtock was to be inlarged by a fourth ſubſcription in money, ſome perſons in eminent ſtations deſired the principal Managers to put off the ſubſcription, till the Proprietors of the remaining part of the long annuities had ſubſcribed, ſince the taking in of thoſe public debts, in order to make them redeemable, was the main view, upon which the Miniſtry and the Parliament thought fit to encourage the South Sea project. Some pretend, that the men in power made this ſtep, not only to free themſelves from the importunity of many, who ſued to be ſet down in their liſts, for a ſhare in the next ſubſcription; but alſo, in order to reſerve part of the to be increaſed capital ſtock, till a new ſet of Directors were choſen, who ſhould have a ſhare in the profits of future ſubſcriptions, in caſe the humour of buying up the ſame at an advanced price ſhould laſt ſo long. However that be, in a Committee of the Directors the 27th of July, it being conſidered, that ſeveral perſons, admitted as Subſcribers to the third ſubſcription in money, had not yet made their firſt payment, it was reſolved, that none but the Proprietors of their capital and increaſed ſtock ſhould be admitted into the next ſubſcription in money, at the rate of 20 per cent; ſo that a Proprietor of 1000 l. capital ſtock ſhould be intitled to ſubſcribe 200 l. In this reſolution, they, who hitherto had carried on this great project with equal ſkill and ſucceſs, had undoubtedly two things in view; firſt, to allay the murmurings of many of the old Proprietors, who complained, that the Directors and Great Men at Court had ingroſſed for themſelves and their dependants moſt of the profits of the three firſt ſubſcriptions. And, ſecondly, That, in caſe the eagerneſs of Buyers ſhould abate, which was to be apprehended from the daily ſinking of the price of South-Sea ſtock, the Company might be aſſured, that the new Subſcribers would make the ſeveral payments, to which they ſhould ſubmit themſelves, and for which their capital ſtock would be a ſufficient ſecurity. On the other hand, many of the old Proprietors were ſo far from looking upon this reſolution as a favour, that, on the contrary, they did not ſtick to ſay, 'That the Directors, having had the cream for themſelves, would now give the Proprietors the ſowre milk.' This complaint ſeemed to be the better grounded, becauſe it was well known, that thoſe, who had got moſt by the South Sea, daily endeavoured to ſell out, and ſecure their vaſt profits; and, in particular, that the principal Projector of this ſcheme had bought conſiderable eſtates in Norfolk and other Counties.

Purſuant to what had been deſired, it was reſolved on the 3d of Auguſt, at a Court of Directors, to receive ſubſcriptions of all the remaining long and ſhort annuities, lottery tickets, and other public ſecurities, both redeemable and irredeemable. For which purpoſe the books were opened the next day at the South-Sea Houſe, and continued ſo till the 11th of Auguſt. The day after the Directors publiſhed the terms they intended to allow to the Proprietors. For every 100 l. a year of the long annuities, they offered 400 l. in the capital ſtock, which at 800 l. per cent. (the price then of ſtock, excluſive of the Midſummer dividend) amounted to 3200, and in bonds or money 400 l. making in all 3600 l. or 36 years purchaſe. For every 90 l. a year of the ſhort annuities they allowed 200 l. ſtock, which at 800 l. per cent. amounted to 1600 l. or 17 years purchaſe, and 7 ninths. The redeemable annuities and debts (as well thoſe at 4 per cent. as thoſe at 5 per cent.) were to be taken in at 105 per cent. and allowed for the ſame in capital ſtock at the rate of 800 l. per cent. excluſive of the Midſummer dividend.

Many of the Annuitants were not ſatisfied with theſe offers, which, they ſaid, put ſo great a diſparity (no leſs than near half by half) between them and the former Subſcribers; for, by the reſolution of the Directors of the 19th of May, there was allowed, for every 100 l. a year of the long annuities, 700 l. in the capital ſtock, beſides 10 l. per cent. for the Midſummer dividend, and, in bonds or money, 575 l. all which (computing the ſtock at 800 l. per cent. as it was given to the preſent Subſcribers of the like annuities) amounted to 6735 l. whereas, by theſe laſt reſolutions, there was allowed, for the ſame annuity, only 3600 l. For this reaſon ſome of the laſt Subſcribers went to the South-Sea Houſe, in order to withdraw their effects; but they were told by the Clerks, that there was no order from the Directors for delivering them back; ſo the affair reſted, for ſome time, undetermined.

The uneaſineſs of the Annuitants put a freſh damp upon the South-Sea ſtock; but what affected it more was the boldneſs of many perſons concerned in the illegal projects, who, in open defiance to the late Acts of Parliament, to the King's Proclamation, and to the Orders and Prohibitions of the Lords Juſtices, carried them on. Some of theſe Companies, authoriſed either by Charters or Acts of Parliament, did conſiderable prejudice to the South-Sea, by endeavouring to procure ſubſcriptions. Upon this, the principal Directors of the South-Sea applied to thoſe at the Helm, and obtained an order againſt them from the Lords Juſtices, which was firſt publiſhed in the London Gazette of Auguſt the 20th, and which greatly affected the ſtocks of the York-Buildings Company, the Luſtring Company, the Engliſh ſcribing, was to have 100 l. a year for every 100 l. ſo ſubſcribed. But how this was to be done did not appear in the propoſals, where it was alſo ſaid, that in a month the particulars of the project ſhould be laid open, and the money ſubſcribed was then to be paid in. As extravagant as this ſcheme was, the Projector in a forenoon received 1000 ſubſcriptions, with which, amounting to 2000 guineas, he went off in the afternoon.

Engliſh Copper, and the Welſh Copper and Lead, and of other illegal projects. This very much alarmed the perſons concerned in theſe Companies, ſome of whom ſuſtained conſiderable loſſes, and all of them ſaw their extravagant hopes and expectations entirely vaniſh. Upon the murmurings occaſioned by their diſappointment, the Lords Juſtices ordered the Directors of theſe Companies to attend them at a General Council, the 23d of Auguſt, where they condeſcended to tell them the reaſons, that had obliged them to order a proſecution againſt them. The Directors, both of the Royal Exchange, and of the London Aſſurance, attended likewiſe, and were cautioned to keep ſtrictly to the limitation of their Charters, that no complaint might lie againſt them.

The Companies ordered to be proſecuted having recovered their fright, and conſulted able Lawyers, ſeemed reſolved to ſtand trial, and aſſert their rights of managing their own affairs as they pleaſed. The Welſh Copper Miners were yet more bold and refractory, for that very day (Auguſt 23.) they opened their books, and made transfers of their ſtock.

Before the Lords Juſtices had cauſed their order to be publiſhed, they ſent a compliment to the Prince of Wales, to acquaint him, that, the Company of Engliſh Copper, of which he had been pleaſed to be choſen Governor, being illegal, they were obliged to involve it in the order; upon which the Prince ſent a meſſage to the Company, deſiring them to chooſe another Governor.

All this while the South-Sea ſtock continued ſinking; ſo that on the 17th of Auguſt, it fell to 830, including the Midſummer dividend; which having given the Directors no ſmall uneaſineſs, ſome of their agents were immediately detached into Exchange-Alley, to buy a conſiderable quantity of ſtock, which thereupon roſe to 880. But, the humour of ſelling out continuing the two following days, the ſtocks fell again to about 820, at which price the tranſfer-books were opened on the 22d of Auguſt. That day, and the next morning, there was a great croud at the South-Sea Houſe; and the Directors obſerving, that great quantities of ſtock had been bought at a thouſand, and even at higher rates, for the opening of the books, and that many perſons would be obliged to ſell out, in order to pay the difference, which could not fail ſinking the ſtock yet lower; they came to a ſudden and unexpected reſolution to ſhut the tranſfer-books; and the next day to open other books, for taking in a money ſubſcription of one million, to the capital ſtock, at the rate of 1000 l. for every 100 l. capital ſtock, to be paid in five payments, 20 l. per cent. in hand, and the reſt in four equal payments. Accordingly the ſubſcription books were opened the 24th of Auguſt; and there was ſuch a croud of Subſcribers, and amongſt them not a few of the prime Nobility, that, in leſs than three hours, more than the intended ſum was ſubſcribed; and that very afternoon this fourth ſubſcription was ſold in Exchange-Alley at 30 or 40 per cent. advance. The next day the principal Directors, having conſulted together about their future management, came to ſeveral reſolutions, of which, that very evening, they informed the Public by the following advertiſement:

1720.

South-Sea Houſe, Auguſt the 25th, 1720.

'The Court of Directors of the South-Sea Company give notice, that the tranſfer-books of the Company will be ſhut from the 31ſt day of Auguſt to the 21ſt of September, in order to the admitting as well the Proprietors of the original capital ſtock, and of the ſtock for the laſt Midſummer dividend, as the Proprietors of the ſtock for all the long annuities, 9 per cents, and tickets of lottery 1710, and of the ſeveral redeemable debts, which have been ſubſcribed or depoſited, or authorized to be ſubſcribed into the capital ſtock, and alſo the Proprietors of the firſt, ſecond, third, and fourth money ſubſcriptions of the Company into a ſubſcription of 20 per cent. of the capital ſtock, upon the terms agreed upon by the Court of Directors. The Company will lend the firſt payment for the intended ſubſcription to all the Proprietors of the original and dividend ſtock, and of the ſubſcription in the long annuities, 9 per cents, and tickets of lottery 1710, and in the redeemable debts; and of the firſt and ſecond money ſubſcriptions, without transferring their ſtock, or depoſiting the ſubſcription receipts; which ſubſcription books will be opened on the 12th of September; and ſuch of the Proprietors, as do not ſubſcribe within that time, will be excluded the benefit of the ſubſcription.'

The next day (Auguſt the 26th) the tranſfer-books were opened again; but, the South-Sea ſtock, inſtead of advancing, being by this time fallen under 800, the Directors, who had now large ſums of money in their hands, thought fit to lend to their Proprietors 4000 l. upon every 1000 l. ſtock for ſix months, at the rate of 4 per cent. which enabled ſome of thoſe, who had bought ſtock at a higher price than the preſent, to ſatisfy their creditors. What ſtill embarraſſed the Directors was the caſe of the Annuitants, and others, who had lately ſubſcribed their public ſecurities, and who thought it a great hardſhip to have the ſtock given them at 800 l. per cent. when it was now little above 700, excluſive of the Midſummer dividend. In order to ſilence theſe and the like murmurings, after a long conſultation, on the 30th of Auguſt, the Directors came to a reſolution, 'That 30 per cent. in money ſhould be the half-year's dividend due at Chriſtmas next; and from thence for twelve years, not leſs than 50 per cent. in money ſhould be the yearly dividend on their ſtock.' What effect this reſolution had, was ſoon after manifeſt; for, though it raiſed the ſtock to about 800 for the opening of the books, yet it ſoon ſunk again, and in about three weeks fell gradually below 400.

The Directors, having reſolved the future dividends, thought it time to procure the ſanction of the whole Corporation; for which purpoſe they appointed (Sept. 8.) a General Court to be held at Merchant-Taylors-Hall, declaring, That this Aſſembly would be one of the half-yearly General Courts appointed by the Charter; and to chuſe a Committee of ſeven, to inſpect the by-laws.

On the appointed day, the friends of the Directors took care to repair betimes to Merchant-Taylors-Hall, which, by nine o'clock in the morning, was filled; and many Proprietors and Annuitants, who endeavoured to get in, could not 1720. not gain admittance. The Directors having taken their ſeats between eleven and twelve of the Clock, Sir John Fellows, Sub-Governor, acquainted the Aſſembly with the occaſion of their meeting; read to them the ſeveral reſolutions of the Court of Directors; and gave them an account of their proceedings; of the taking in both the redeemable and unredeemable funds, and of the ſubſcriptions in money. This done, Mr. Craggs ſenior made a ſhort ſpeech, wherein he commended the conduct of the Directors; and urged, that nothing could more effectually contribute to the bringing this ſcheme to perfection than union among themſelves; and concluded with a motion, for thanking the Court of Directors for their prudent and ſkilful management, and for deſiring them to proceed in ſuch methods, as they ſhould think moſt proper for the intereſt and advantage of the Corporation.

Mr. Craggs was ſeconded by Mr. Hungerford, who ſaid, 'That he had ſeen the riſe and fall, the decay and reſurrection of many Communities of this nature; but that, in his opinion, none ever performed ſuch wonderful things in ſo ſhort a time, as the South-Sea Managers had brought about: That they had done more than the Crown, the Pulpit, and the Magiſtrate could do: For they had reconciled all parties in one common intereſt, and thereby laid aſleep, if not wholly extinguiſhed, our domeſtic jars and animoſities: That by the riſe of their ſtocks the Monied-men had vaſtly increaſed their fortunes; the Country Gentlemen had ſeen the value of their lands doubled and trebled in their hands; and they had, at the ſame time, done good to the Church, not a few of the Reverend Clergy having got great ſums by this project: That, in ſhort, they had inriched the whole Nation; and he hoped they had not forgot themſelves.' One or two Members of the Aſſembly having offered to ſpeak in favour of the Annuitants, and to cenſure the conduct of the Directors, they were preſently hiſſed to ſilence; and Mr. Hungerford, reſuming his ſpeech, continued juſtifying and applauding the Directors, and concluded with ſupporting Mr. Craggs's motion. The Duke of Portland ſpoke on the ſame ſide, and ſaid, 'That he did not know what reaſons any body had to be diſſatisfied;' and gave in a draught of the motion for returning thanks to the Directors; which being read by the Clerk, it was unanimouſly approved. It was likewiſe agreed, that, according to the reſolution of the Directors, 'the next Chriſtmas dividend on the ſtock and ſubſcriptions in money ſhould be 30 per cent; and that a dividend of not leſs than 50 per cent. per annum be made from Chriſtmas next, in half-yearly payments, for not leſs than twelve years, upon the whole ſtock and ſubſcriptions.' They likewiſe agreed with the Court of Directors to omit the 20 per cent. ſubſcription in money, which had been intended for the Proprietors of the original ſtock and former ſubſcriptions. After which a motion was made, 'That the laſt Subſcribers, both of the redeemable and unredeemable funds, ſhould have the alternative, either to withdraw their orders, or to accept the terms offered them by the Court of Directors.' But, the queſtion being put, it was carried in the negative, three or four voices excepted. Then, upon the Earl of Orkney's motion, the General Court was adjourned. 17

But, though the Directors carried their main point in the General Court, yet the negative put upon the motion, in the behalf of the laſt Subſcribers, highly increaſed the public diſcontent, and raiſed ſuch a diſtruſt of the honeſty of the Managers, that the ſame day (Sept. 8.) the ſtock fell to 640, and, on the morrow, to 550. Upon this, the Directors reſolved to open the transfer-books the Monday following, which having thrown ſome damp upon the ſtock-jobbing in the Alley, the South-Sea roſe that day (Sept. 9.) to 640. On the other hand, ſeveral of the laſt Subſcribers of annuities went with a public Notary to the South-Sea-Houſe, to demand their orders; and, upon the refuſal of the Officers to deliver them, the Proprietors made their proteſts in due form, and reſolved to ſeek their remedy at law. In the mean time, they loudly complained of the unfair manner, in which they were drawn in to ſubſcribe their annuities; for, it ſeems, at the top of every page of the ſubſcription-book, there was a ſhort letter of Attorney, whereby the Subſcribers impowered three perſons, therein named, to accept ſuch terms, as the Company ſhould think fit to give them for their effects; which they alledged to be a mere trick, not one in a hundred of the Subſcribers having read the inſnaring preamble.

On the 10th of September, the Directors cauſed the following advertiſement to be publiſhed, 'The Court of Directors give notice, that the dividends for Chriſtmas next, and afterwards, voted by the General Court on the 8th of September, which ſhall become due on the four money ſubſcriptions already taken for ſale of the ſtock of the Company, will be allowed in part of the payments, which ſhall become due on the ſubſcriptions; and that the 10 per cent. ſtock for the laſt Midſummer dividend, on the firſt, ſecond, and third of the money ſubſcriptions, will be intitled to the like dividends, and be allowed in further part of the payment on thoſe ſubſcriptions. And whereas the transfer-books of the Company were advertiſed to be ſhut from the 31ſt of Auguſt laſt to the 21ſt of September, in order to the making the ſubſcriptions of 20 per cent. intended for the Proprietors; and the General Court having ſince agreed, that this ſubſcription be omitted, the Court of Directors give notice, that the transfer-books will be opened on the 12th inſtant, and will continue open as uſual.'

Some of the Managers vainly expected, that this advertiſement would have contributed to the keeping up the ſtock; but, as it continued ſinking, they were obliged to have recourſe to more effectual methods. They made ſome ſecret advances towards an union with the Eaſt-India Company; but, a ſecret Committee of that Company, appointed to conſider of their offers, not having thought proper to accept them, they were forced to court the aſſiſtance of their rival, the Bank of England. At the earneſt deſire, and by the zealous interpoſition of Mr. Secretary Craggs, ſeveral Conferences were held between a ſelect number of the Directors of thoſe two Corporations; which raiſed ſo great an expectation, that on the 12th of September, in the morning, upon a report, that they had come to an agreement for circulating ſix millions of the South-

South-Sea Company's bonds, the ſtock roſe immediately to 670; but in the afternoon, as ſoon as that report was known to be groundleſs, the ſtock fell again to 580; the next day to 570, and ſo gradually to 400; which increaſed the murmurings and complaints of the laſt Subſcribers, and expoſed ſeveral of the Directors to public inſults. 1720.

Mr. Walpole (who was Paymaſter of the Army, and lived the greateſt part of that ſummer in the Country, to avoid giving offence to thoſe that had, with the Directors, the management of the South-Sea affairs) being then thought to have great credit and influence with the Bank, was ſent for out of the Country, and importuned to uſe his intereſt to induce the Bank to agree to a propoſal made by the South-Sea Company, for circulating a number of their bonds.

It is to be obſerved that nothing of this kind aroſe from the Bank, or was at their motion: And, as far as it appears, nothing but an apprehenſion of the people's reſentment, with which they were loudly threatened, could have prevailed with the Bank to have treated at all with the South-Sea Company, and involve themſelves in their calamities. But the clamour was irreſiſtible, and the Bank, out of neceſſity, hearkened to the propoſals of the South-Sea Company; for from them every ſtep and motion proceeded.

The firſt expedient was for the Bank to circulate bonds of the South-Sea Company to a certain value for a time to be agreed upon, and a propoſal to that effect was, on the 16th of September, ſent to the Bank by the Sub and Deputy Governors of the South-Sea Company.

This not being reliſhed immediately, it was propoſed, that there ſhould be a meeting of a Committee conſiſting of five of each Company at the Poſt-Maſter's houſe, where were likewiſe preſent, Lord Preſident, Mr. Secretary Craggs, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and Mr. Craggs, Poſt-Maſter-General (1). The meeting was on the 19th of September, three days after the propoſal.

This Conference laſted many hours with great reluctance on the part of the Bank, but was preſſed with ſo much eagerneſs and authority on the other ſide, that the Bank was prevailed upon to yield.

It was thought proper before they parted, that ſomething ſhould be reduced into writing, as a minute of the ſubſtance of what had been under conſideration, and to ſerve as a foundation of a future agreement or contract between the two Companies.

There was ſome little diſpute who ſhould draw the minute, but it being the general deſire of the Company, that Mr. Walpole ſhould do it, in the preſence of the whole meeting, he put down in writing what has ever ſince been called, The Bank Contract, and which was in the following words: 'That the Bank of England ſhall undertake to circulate three millions of South-Sea bonds for one year, at a premium to be agreed upon by the two Companies; a ſubſcription to be taken, for enabling the Bank to carry on the circulation, —— per cent. to be paid down by every Subſcriber, and —— per cent. upon every call at a fortnight's notice; the contract with the Subſcribers to be made in the nature and form with former Contracts for circulating Exchequer bills, and the charges of circulation to be borne by the South-Sea Company. That, in conſideration of this undertaking, the South-Sea Company ſhall pay the 3,700,000 l. to be paid to the Bank by notice of Parliament, in South-Sea ſtock, at a price to be agreed on between the two Companies.

This paper (which was all that Mr. Walpole ever wrote relating to the affair; for at the other meetings he was never once preſent) had no title or preamble, ſignifying what it imported: The premium for circulating, and what was to be paid down for the circulation, was left blank, and the moſt material part of the whole, at what price the Bank was to take the South-Sea ſtock for 3,700,000 l. was referred to a ſubſequent agreement. So it could not with any propriety be called a contract, but rather a rough draught of an agreement void of all form or any manner of obligation.

The next day after this meeting (Sept. 20.) there was a General Court of the South-Sea Company at Merchant-Taylors-Hall, where Sir John Fellows, the Sub-Governor, acquainted them, 'That, ſince their laſt meeting, their ſtock having taken an unexpected turn to the diſadvantage of the Company, the Directors had been conſulting what might be moſt for the benefit of the Corporation; and conſidering the great credit the Bank of England had juſtly gained, both at home and abroad, they had thought it for their intereſt to treat with that Company, for the circulating their bonds, and to grant them ſtock at a moderate price, in lieu of the 3,700,000 l. which the South-Sea Company was to pay them at Lady-Day, and Michaelmas, 1721. And that from the reſult of the meeting they had the night before with ſome Gentlemen of the Bank, and ſome perſons of the firſt rank, they doubted not but ſuch an agreement might ſoon be perfected.' Hereupon Mr. Dawſon moved, 'That the Directors be impowered to agree with the Bank of England, or any other perſons, to circulate the Company's bonds, or make any other agreement with the Bank, which they ſhould judge proper:' And he was ſeconded by Sir John Eyles. Hereupon Mr. Hungerford moved for amending the latter part of the queſtion, by making expreſs mention of that other agreement. But Mr. Pulteney ſpoke for the queſtion, and thought it beſt to uſe a latitude of expreſſion, and ſo leave the Directors at liberty to act as they ſhould think proper for the intereſt of the Company. He added, 'That it was a matter of ſurprize to ſee what a panic had ſeized upon the minds of the people, at a time when the Nation was in profound peace, and had

(1) The five Directors of the South-Sea were:

Sir John Fellows, Sub-Governor,
Charles Joye, Deputy-Governor,
Sir Theodore Janſen,
Mr. Gore,
Mr. Cheſter.

The five Bank Directors were:

Mr. Hanger, Governor,
Sir John Ward,
Sir Gilbert Heathcote,
Sir Peter Delmé,
Sir Nathaniel Gould.

1720. had nothing to fear, either at home or from abroad. That, indeed, a rumour had been univerſally ſpread, as if the armament of the Spaniards was deſigned either againſt Port-Mahon or Gibraltar; but that he took that report to be altogether falſe and groundleſs, and only intended to ſcandalize that Potentate, and to terrify the people here; for he himſelf had ſeen and peruſed a copy of a letter, written by the expreſs command of the King of Spain by his Secretary of State, to the Britiſh Miniſter at Madrid, abſolutely denying, in the ſtrongeſt terms, any deſigns of the Spaniſh forces againſt any of his Britannic Majeſty's Dominions. That he was as much concerned in the Company as moſt people; but that, notwithſtanding this general and terrible alarm, he had not diſpoſed of any part of his ſtock; for he would think it a ſcandal to be rich, if the Nation were ruined. That, however, he hoped the caſe would be quite otherwiſe; and he doubted not but the Company would ſoon be reſtored to its former flouriſhing condition, ſince it was like to be ſupported by the Bank of England, a Corporation, who by wiſe, though ſlow and cautious meaſures, had eſtabliſhed its credit, not only at home, but even among foreigners.' Upon this the queſtion was unanimouſly agreed to. Sir John Fellows then farther acquainted the Aſſembly, 'That, the Proprietors of the ſeveral annuities lately ſubſcribed, as well as thoſe intereſted in the two laſt money-ſubſcriptions, being very much diſſatisfied, fearing thereby to be great loſers, the Directors had thought it proper, that the terms ſhould be lowered to make them eaſy.' Whereupon Sir Matthew Decker moved, 'That power be given to the Directors, to relieve the Annuitants, who came in upon the laſt ſubſcription; as likewiſe the Proprietors of the third and fourth money-ſubſcriptions.' He was ſeconded by Mr. Craggs ſenior, who, among other things, ſaid, 'That nothing could be more reaſonable and juſt, than to give ſatisfaction to people, who had truſted their fortunes and eſtates with the Company, and that it would be a notorious robbery to take any advantage of their confidence in the honour and integrity of the Directors.' This gave occaſion to Mr. Budgel to reflect, in a ſpeech, on the prodigious leap from a ſubſcription of 400 l. to one of a 1000 l. which left ſuch a gap in the building, as would at laſt bring it to the ground. He then obſerved, that the fall of the ſtock was owing to the malicious rumour, that two or three of the very Directors had baſely betrayed the truſt repoſed in them. When he had done ſpeaking, Mr. Cheſter, one of the Directors, ſpoke in vindication of his Brethren, and ſaid, 'That he knew of no proceedings among them, but what were intended for the good of the whole Company: That, for his own part, he had not ſold any of his ſtock, nor reſerved to himſelf any more of the ſubſcriptions, than what was allowed to each of the Directors; and that his fortune would have been as large, if he had not been a Director: That, as to the great gap between the ſecond and third ſubſcription in money, which was objected as a wrong ſtep in the management of the Company's affairs, he could aſſure them, that it was none of the Directors fault, ſince they deſigned to have made the third ſubſcription at five or ſix hundred; but, the humour and eagerneſs of the people having run up the South-Sea ſtock to ſeven or eight hundred, they could not in prudence open a ſubſcription at leſs than a thouſand.' The Aſſembly ſeemed to be very well pleaſed with Mr. Cheſter's ſpeech; but many wondered, that none of his Brethren took that opportunity to clear themſelves, as he had done. Upon the whole matter, the Court unanimouſly agreed to the queſtion for relieving the laſt Subſcribers, and then adjourned. 1720.

Two days after, Sept. 22, there was a General Court of the Bank of England, when the Governor acquainted them, that this was one of their quarterly and half-yearly meetings, and that their Directors had come to a reſolution to declare the laſt half-yearly dividend at four per cent; to which the Court having unanimouſly agreed, the Governor proceeded, ſaying, 'He preſumed, none could be ignorant there had of late been divers Meetings and Conferences between the Directors of this Company and the Directors of the South-Sea, under the influence and interpoſition of ſome perſons of the higheſt figure and ſtation: That they had made no agreement yet with the South-Sea; but that the Directors had thought fit to come to a reſolution upon the matter. Then the reſolution was read; and, without any perſon's ſpeaking to it, was immediately formed into a queſtion to this effect: 'That, for the better ſupport of the public credit, the Directors of the Bank of England be impowered to agree with the Directors of the South-Sea, to circulate their bonds to what ſum, and upon what terms, and for what time, they ſhall think proper; and to make what other agreements with the South-Sea, they ſhall judge to be for the intereſt of this Corporation.' Which queſtion was inſtantly agreed to with great unanimity. Then the Governor acquainted them, that he believed books would be ready for a ſubſcription to be taken in the next day, for the purpoſe aforeſaid, and that it would be on the uſual terms, 15 per cent. depoſit, 3 per cent. premium, and 5 per cent. intereſt; and then the Court adjourned.

The Directors of the two Companies being thus empowered, a Committee of both met on the 23d of September, and a propoſal was made by one of the Directors of the South-Sea Company, 'That the 3,700,000 l. which the South-Sea Company was to repay to the Bank at Lady-Day, and Michaelmas, 1721) ſhould be ſubſcribed by the Bank into the ſtock of the South-Sea Company, for which the Bank was to have ſuch ſhares as the funds would produce, the ſtock being valued at 400 l. per cent.'

This propoſal was the next day reported at a Court of Directors of the Bank; and, being agreed to, was the ſame day communicated, by a Director of the Bank, to the Court of Directors of the South-Sea Company.

This, in ſhort, is the Hiſtory of the famous Bank Contract which has made ſo much noiſe. The ſubſtance of all which is, that, in the day of diſtreſs, the Bank was thought the only reſource to ſupport the ſinking ſtate of the South-Sea Company. Every one that was thought capable of giving any aſſiſtance was called in: At the firſt Conference Mr. Walpole aſſiſted, and, the Bank was perſuaded to undertake what was propoſed to them: The firſt part of the propoſition, and, indeed, the original propoſal for circulating the bonds upon which the firſt Conference was held, was dropped by the South-Sea

Company; and the laſt article of taking South-Sea ſtock at 400 l. per cent. was carried on, and accepted by a Committee of the Bank: And this example, it was hoped, by the Managers of the South-Sea affairs, would fix the price of South-Sea ſtock at that rate: But they were ſoon convinced, by the daily fall of the ſtock, that this expedient would not anſwer: And the Bank quickly found, they had been prevailed upon to conſent to what they were not able to perform, as will preſently be ſeen. 1720.

When the books were opened at the Bank for taking in a ſubſcription for the ſupport of public credit, the concourſe of people, who readily brought in their money, was at firſt ſo very great, that it was judged, the whole ſubſcription (which was intended for three millions) would have been filled that very day: But it happened, that the fall of the South-Sea ſtock, and the diſcredit of that Company's bonds, occaſioned a run upon the moſt eminent Goldſmiths and Bankers, ſome of whom having lent out great ſums upon South-Sea ſtock, and other public ſecurities, were obliged to ſhut up their ſhops, and abſcond. The Sword-Blade Company (who hitherto had been the chief Caſh-keepers of the South-Sea Company) being almoſt drained of their ready money, were forced to ſtop payment, and ſet up at their Office written bills, giving notice, 'That they would pay any of their notes in South-Sea ſtock at four hundred per cent. or pay part in caſh on the Monday following, and give five per cent. intereſt on the reſt till paid; and that they would take their own notes in payment for the monies they had lent.' This, being looked upon as a kind of Bankruptcy, increaſed the public calamity, and occaſioned a great run upon the Bank, who were obliged to pay out money faſter than they received it upon the ſubſcription. But the feſtival of Michaelmas, on which the Bank was ſhut of courſe, gave it ſome breathing-time.

In the mean time, South-Sea ſtock continued ſinking till Michaelmas day, when it was about 150, at which price it was on the 2d of February, the day after the Houſe of Commons accepted the propoſals of the South-Sea Company; whoſe low credit appeared yet more plainly in that their bonds, payable on Michaelmas, 1721, were now at above 25 per cent. diſcount.

Purſuant to a former reſolution for relieving the laſt Subſcribers, a General Court was held the 30th of September, wherein, after the agreement with the Bank was ratified, it was reſolved that the Proprietors of the redeemable debts taken in on the laſt ſubſcriptions ſhould be allowed, for their ſeveral intereſts in the funds, the ſame terms, in all reſpects, as the Bank; and that the laſt ſubſcription of the long annuities ſhould be valued at 32 years purchaſe; and of the ſhort at 17 years purchaſe; to be paid for in ſtock at 400 per cent. and be intitled to the laſt Midſummer dividend: And that all the Annuitants ſhould be allowed the intereſt of their annuities to the 29th of September. It was alſo agreed, that the third ſubſcription, which was taken at 1000 per cent. ſhould be reduced to 400 per cent. and the ſubſcription receipts given out accordingly. That the 100 per cent. already paid ſhould be taken in part of the payment; and that the remaining 300 per cent. ſhould be paid in nine payments, whereof the three next payments to be at 40 per cent. each, and the other ſix payments at 30 per cent. at ſix months diſtance from each other; the firſt payment of 40 per cent. to be the 2d of July, 1721. It was alſo agreed, that the fourth ſubſcription, which was taken at 1000 per cent. whereof 200 per cent. was paid down, ſhould be alſo reduced to 400 per cent. and that the remaining 200 per cent. ſhould be paid in eight equal payments of 25 per cent. each, the firſt of which was to be the 26th of September, 1721, and the remaining payments, at ſix months diſtance from each other. That intereſt ſhould be allowed to the Company from Michaelmas, 1720, after the rate of 5 per cent. per ann. to the reſpective times of payment of the ſaid third and fourth ſubſcriptions: And that the 10 per cent. dividend at Midſummer ſhould be alſo allowed on the third and fourth ſubſcriptions. That the Proprietors of the receipts of all the money ſubſcriptions ſhould be allowed, in part of their payments, the ſeveral dividends, that ſhould be made on the ſtock of the Company, till their payments were compleated. That 5 per cent. intereſt be allowed on all the Company's bonds from the 29th inſtant till they ſhould become due; and that any of the Company's bonds ſhould be taken as money in the fourth payment of the firſt ſubſcription, which would become due on the 14th of October (1).

Theſe reſolutions gave no ſatisfaction to the Annuitants, nor put the leaſt ſtop to the fall of the South-Sea ſtock. The Bank finding they were not able to ſtem the tide, without expoſing the properties of their own Principals and Adventurers to be carried away and loſt in the common deluge, they wiſely kept themſelves out of the general inundation, and did not care to be drowned, with thoſe, they could not ſave. They reſolved to drop an agreement, which they were under no obligation to perform (had it been poſſible)

---

(1) It may not be improper to inſert here an account of the long and ſhort annuities ſubſcribed or unſubſcribed:

	l.	s.	d.
LONG ANNUITIES, per ann. —	666,821	3	3
Firſt Subſcription ——	427,340	18	9
Second Subſcription ——	125,392	17	6
Unſubſcribed —— ——	114,087	12	0
SHORT ANNUITIES, per ann. —	81,000
Firſt Subſcription —— —	48,132
Second Subſcription —— —	18,750
Unſubſcribed —— ——	14,118
LOTTERY ANNUITIES, 1710. —	46,260	6	1
Firſt Subſcription —— —	15,918	4	0
Second Subſcription —— —	14,906	6	0
Unſubſcribed —— ——	15,365	16	1
REDEEMABLES ——	16,546,482	7	1
Subſcribed —— —	14,391,781	8	0
Unſubſcribed —— —	2,152,694	7	1

1720. ſible) and to which the South-Sea Company had no power to compel them. On the 10th of November, the Governor of the Bank reported from the Committee appointed to treat with the South-Sea Company, that the tranſactions between the Bank and that Company had been laid before Council, on behalf of the Bank; and that, the South-Sea Company preſſing for an anſwer of what had been done therein, the Governor of the Bank had acquainted the Deputy-Governor of the South-Sea Company, that the Committee did not think fit, for the preſent, to proceed further in that affair, and had delivered to him in writing the following anſwer:

'When the propoſition was offered by the Lords, at the meeting of the Committees of both Companies, as a ſuitable expedient for the ſupport of public credit, the Court of Directors of the Bank ſhewed their readineſs to join in any meaſures, that might tend to the ſervice of the public.

'But, ſome difficulties appearing to the Committee of the Bank, they have conſulted with their Council, and they are adviſed, that, conſidering the nature of this tranſaction, it will not be ſafe for them to proceed upon the propoſition without conſent of Parliament.

'However, they think it reaſonable, that, in the mean time, the Committee of the South-Sea ſhould give the Committee of the Bank ſome account of their eſtate, for the ſatisfaction of their Principals.'

About a week after, the following paper was ſent to the Bank from the Lords of the Treaſury: 'My Lords deſire, that the difficulties which have ariſen (and upon which, they ſay, they have conſulted their own Council) concerning the late agreement between them and the South-Sea Company, may be put into writing, and delivered to their Lordſhips, as ſoon as poſſible, that their Lordſhips may receive the opinion of the King's Council.'

To this the following anſwer was given: 'The Court of Directors of the Bank have, with the utmoſt deference, conſidered the meſſage in writing, which your Lordſhips were pleaſed to ſend them, and they humbly apprehend, they cannot better explain themſelves, than they have already done, in the manner they have given to the South-Sea Company, a copy whereof was delivered to your Lordſhips, which contains the ſubſtance of what they conſulted with their Council thereupon.'

Thus ended the tranſactions between the two Companies, which (as it has been ſuggeſted) were carried on by the Authors and Promoters of them, with a deſign to take advantage of the firſt rumour of this ſuppoſed agreement, and draw in unwary perſons, who, deſirous to retrieve their loſſes, were induced to buy ſtock at the price, the Bank had agreed to take it. Thoſe who had countenanced and run into every part of the South-Sea ſcheme, and were conſequently deeply involved, were juſtly ſuſpected of having contrived and taken advantage of the contract; by which means great numbers of deluded people were undone.

Thus, in the ſpace of eight months, were ſeen the riſe, progreſs, and fall of that mighty fabric, which, being wound up by myſterious ſprings to a wonderful height, had fixed the eyes and expectations of all Europe, but whoſe foundation being fraud, illuſion, credulity and infatuation, fell to the ground, as ſoon as the artful management of the Projectors was diſcovered. The ebb of this ſwoln fluctuating credit returned with greater violence than it flowed, and carried every thing before it with that precipitation, that the application of the Miniſters of State, and the Directors of the great Companies, jointly and ſeparately to ſtop it, were ineffectual. Expreſs after expreſs was ſent to Hanover, to give the King information of the ſtate of affairs, which was ſo urgent, that the King ſet out for England ſooner than he intended, and arrived at London the 11th of November.

The South-Sea ſtock, which was 200 at the King's arrival, fell again upon the prorogation of the Parliament, from the 25th of November to the 8th of December, to 135; but, on a report that the Miniſtry had agreed with the principal Directors of the South-Sea, the Bank, and Eaſt-India Company, upon a project, which would very much conduce to the reſtoration of the public credit, it roſe again to 210. But whatever the Miniſters concerted, for that end, was fruſtrated by the Managers of the South-Sea Company, who publiſhed an advertiſement in the London Gazette, 'That the bonds of the South-Sea Company would be taken in repayment of the money on all loans made by the Company. That the bonds would be likewiſe taken in all future payments on the ſubſcription receipts: And that all perſons, who were willing to make their ſubſcription capital ſtock, might do the ſame, by making the remaining payments in the bonds of the Company. This advertiſement was generally looked upon as very extraordinary, ſince it was unreaſonable to expect, either the borrowers of 400 l. on 100 l. capital ſtock abſolutely transferred, or ſubſcribers at 400 l. ſhould make repayments and remaining payments at a time, when South-Sea ſtock was under 200.

The ſquadron, which had been ſent to the Baltic under the Command of Sir John Norris, returned to England, and arrived at Orford on the 20th of November, all but the Monk; a fifty gun ſhip, which ſtruck on the Colſton Sand near Yarmouth, and was loſt; but moſt of her crew was ſaved by boats from Colſton.

The Parliament being met, purſuant to their laſt prorogation, on the 8th of December, the King went to the Houſe of Peers, and, by the mouth of the Lord Chancellor, made the following ſpeech to both Houſes:

My Lords and Gentlemen,

"SINCE we laſt parted, the face of our affairs abroad is become more favourable. The peace in the South only wants the form of a Congreſs; and that of the North is brought much nearer to a concluſion. I ſhall, at a proper time, order the ſeveral treaties I have made, to be laid before you; by which you will perceive the ſucceſs of our endeavours to eſtabliſh a peace throughout Europe, and to ſecure and ſupport the Proteſtant Religion. At the ſame time I can never ſufficiently expreſs my concern for the unhappy turn of affairs, which has ſo much affected the public credit at home.

Gentlemen

720.

Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons,

" I do moſt earneſtly recommend it to you, " that you conſider of the moſt effectual and " ſpeedy methods to reſtore the national credit, " and fix it upon a laſting foundation. You " will, I doubt not, be aſſiſted in ſo commend- " able and neceſſary a work by every man, that " loves his Country, and eſpecially by the ſeve- " ral great Societies of this Kingdom. I hope " you will, on this occaſion, remember, that all " your prudence, your temper, and reſolution " are neceſſary to find out and apply the proper " remedies to our misfortunes; which will, if " you ſucceed, ſerve to increaſe that reputation " you have ſo juſtly acquired, particularly if you " ſhall be able, notwithſtanding theſe difficul- " ties, to diſcharge a part of the public debt. " I have ordered the ſeveral eſtimates to be laid " before you of the expence of the enſuing " year; and muſt deſire you to diſpatch the " Supplies neceſſary for them.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

" I am glad to obſerve to you, that our trade " does appear to have been more extended this " year than in the preceding one. We have " the moſt flouriſhing Navy of any Nation what- " ſoever to protect it. And I hope you will " turn your thoughts to the beſt methods for " the ſecuring and enlarging of our Commerce. " You may depend on my hearty concurrence to " all ſuch proviſions, as ſhall appear to you " neceſſary for the good of my people."

Addreſs of Lords.

The Lords, without any debate, unanimouſly agreed to congratulate the King in an addreſs, for the near proſpect of a general peace, and to thank him for his endeavours to ſecure and maintain the Proteſtant Religion. To this were added aſſurances of their utmoſt aſſiſtance towards attaining thoſe great ends, and of their zealous concurrence in all meaſures for reſtoring public credit, and enlarging the commerce of theſe Kingdoms.

Debate on the addreſs in the Commons.

The Commons, who were more concerned than the Peers in the fall of the South-Sea Company, and in the ſubſequent calamities, were not ſo peaceable. Mr. Pulteney made a motion for an addreſs, ' to thank the King for the near proſpect of peace, and for his tender concern for the misfortunes of his people, occaſioned by the unhappy turn of affairs; and to aſſure him, that the Houſe would proceed with all poſſible care, prudence, and temper, to inquire into the cauſes of theſe misfortunes, and apply the proper remedies for reſtoring and fixing public credit upon ſolid and laſting foundations.' This motion being ſeconded by Mr. Pelham and ſome others, Mr. Shippen propoſed, after the words for reſtoring public credit, to add, as far as it is conſiſtent with the honour of Parliaments, the intereſt of the Nation, and the principles of Juſtice. Mr. Shippen gave his reaſons for this addition, urging, ' That, in order effectually to remedy the preſent misfortunes, it was abſolutely neceſſary to maintain the honour and faith of parliamentary engagements, and to ſhew the higheſt reſentment againſt thoſe, who, abuſing the truſt repoſed in them, had given ſo fatal a wound to public credit, and inriched themſelves by the plunder of the Nation. That, in his opinion, the Managers of the South-Sea project were not the moſt criminal, ſince there were thoſe above them, whoſe duty it was to overlook and direct their proceedings, and who ought to have given a ſeaſonable check to that extremity of folly, by which the South-Sea ſtock and the ſubſcriptions were advanced to an extravagant rate: Adding, that, had thoſe at the helm interpoſed in the affair of the South-Sea, as they did in the caſe of the two aſſurances and other projects, they would have prevented that diſmal calamity, which has ſince befallen the Nation.' The Lord Moleſworth, who ſpoke with great vehemence on the ſame ſide, examined the King's ſpeech, and made remarks upon it: He ſaid, ' He was glad they were told, That the peace in the South only wanted the form of a Congreſs, which gave him hopes, that the difficulties ſtarted by Spain, in relation to Gibraltar, were at laſt ſurmounted, and that we were like to preſerve that important conqueſt of the preceding war, together with Port-Mahon, which would make us ſome amends for the great expence of blood and treaſure we had lately been at, to conquer Sicily for the Houſe of Auſtria.' When he came to ſpeak of the South-Sea calamity, he ſaid, ' That, before they conſidered of proper remedies, they ought to inquire into the cauſe and nature of the diſtemper: That it is with the body politic, as with the body natural; and therefore they ought to imitate ſkilful Surgeons, who, in order to cure a wound, begin with probing it; and, when they find it neceſſary, make inciſions before they apply healing plaiſters; and that they, who followed a contrary method, are but mere emperics, who by uſing palliatives make the ſore feſter, and endanger the life of the patient. He owned it had by ſome been ſuggeſted, that there was no law to puniſh the Directors of the South-Sea Company, who were juſtly looked upon as the immediate authors of the preſent misfortunes: But that, in his opinion, they ought, on this occaſion, to follow the example of the antient Romans, who having no law againſt parricide, becauſe their legiſlators ſuppoſed no ſon could be ſo unnaturally wicked, as to imbrue his hands in his father's blood, made one to puniſh ſo heinous a crime, as ſoon as it happened to be committed; and adjudged the guilty wretch to be thrown alive, ſewn up in a ſack, into the Tyber. That, as he looked upon the contrivers and executors of the villainous South-Sea ſcheme as the parricides of their Country, he ſhould be ſatisfied to ſee them undergo the ſame puniſhment.'

Sir Joſeph Jekyll ſpoke on the ſame ſide; and obſerved, ' That as he doubted not, but among the South-Sea Directors ſome might be innocent, and others criminal, ſo he was of opinion, there were thoſe, who were not Directors, no leſs, if not more criminal, than the Directors themſelves, and who therefore deſerved an equal, if not a ſeverer puniſhment: Adding, that upon extraordinary emergencies, where the laws are deficient, the legiſlative authority may, and ought to exert itſelf, and he hoped a Britiſh Parliament would never want a vindictive power to puniſh National crimes.' Mr. Grey Nevill, Mr. Pitt, and ſome others ſpoke alſo for the clauſe offered by Mr. Shippen. But it was repreſented by Mr. Secretary Craggs, Mr. Yorke the Solliciter-General, and Mr. Walpole, That ſuch a reſtriction did but ill ſuit with an addreſs of thanks, 1720. which, in their opinion, ought to run in the usual form, and answer in general terms the several heads of the speech from the Throne. That, as to the main drift of the clause, they thought it inconsistent with the rules of prudence, to begin this Session with irritating inquiries: That, if the City of London were on fire, they did not doubt but all wise men would be for extinguishing the flames, and preventing the spreading of the conflagration, before they inquired into the incendiaries. That in like manner, public credit having received a most dangerous wound, and being still in a bleeding condition, they ought to apply a speedy remedy to it; and that afterwards they might inquire into the cause of the present calamity.' Mr. Walpole, in particular, declared, 'That, for his own part, he had never approved the South-Sea scheme, and was sensible it had done a great deal of mischief. But, since it could not be undone, he thought it the duty of all good men to give their helping hand towards retrieving it: And, that with this view, he had already bestowed some thoughts on a proposal to restore public credit, which, in a proper time, he would submit to the wisdom of the House.' The majority acquiesced in these last reasons; so that, the question being put for inserting Mr. Shippen's clause, it passed in the negative by two hundred and sixty-one against one hundred and three. However, the next day a motion being made by Mr. Milner for inserting the words, And for punishing the authors of them (our present misfortunes) the same was carried without dividing.

By these first proceedings, it was easy to see that this Session would not be so favourable to the Ministry as the former ones had been, and that the Whigs would hardly be distinguished from the Tories by their votes: These partialities were suspended, and, as it were, annihilated by various other passions, which produced numberless intrigues. Many of the Commons were sincerely touched with the public calamities, or moved by their own private losses: Others, dissatisfied with the Ministry and Court, were pleased to have an opportunity of covering their revenge, with the specious pretence of justice and the public good: Some had in view, by their loud and bitter complaints, to make themselves considerable to the Court, or draw the attention of the opposite party: Others, engaged in the secret practices of the South Sea Company, had a mind, by an affected severity, to prevent their being suspected: A few there were, who politicly concealed, under the appearance of zeal and indignation, their devotion to some of the principal Managers, and sought to be in the Committees of inquiry into those odious affairs, in order to screen the Authors thereof.

Proceedings of the Commons in the South-Sea affair.

However different these views might be, all seemed at first to agree. On the 12th of December, the Commons ordered, that the Directors of the South-Sea should forthwith lay before them an account of all their proceedings; of all the orders they had received from the Treasury; of what money and Exchequer bills they had received since the 25th of December, 1719; of what public debts had been subscribed or discharged, and of what sums of money had been borrowed on account of the Company, since the same time. Nor did the Commons rest here. A few days after, Sir Joseph Jekyll moved, That a select Committee should be appointed, to inquire into all the proceedings relating to the execution of the South-Sea act; but, upon Mr. Walpole's representing, that such a method would take up a great deal of time, and that the public credit being in a bleeding condition, a remedy ought to be applied to the wound with not insisted on. After this, Mr. Walpole acquainted the House, That (as he had hinted a few days before) he had spent some time upon a scheme for restoring public credit; but that the execution of it depending upon a position, which had been laid as a fundamental, he thought it proper, before he opened the scheme, to be informed, whether he might rely on that main foundation, Whether the subscriptions of public debts and incumbrances, money-subscriptions, and other contracts made with the South-Sea Company, should remain in the present state? This question being stated, occasioned a warm debate, particularly in relation to the validity of the second subscription of the redeemable and irredeemable public debts. Sir Joseph Jekyll, and some others, urged in favour of the Subscribers, 'That most of them having been drawn in to set their names to a sort of letter of Attorney, which was never read to them; and not having had afterwards the option of the terms offered, as the former Subscribers had, the subscription was surreptitious, and therefore not binding.' But they were answered by Mr. Walpole, Mr. Secretary Craggs, Mr. Attorney and Mr. Solicitor-General, and some others, 'That, the letter of Attorney, by virtue of which the contract of the second subscription was made, having been placed at the top of every page of the book, all the Subscribers might have read it, as many of them did; and so might have chosen, whether they would set their names to it, or not. But that, it seems, some persons thought the subscription valid while they got, and not binding when they were like to lose by it. However, if any thing were defective in the subscription, they thought it adviseable to leave it to the determination either of a General Court of the South-Sea, or of the Common Law.' These reasons being approved by most of the landed Gentlemen, after a debate of several hours, it was at last resolved by two hundred and fifty-nine against one hundred and seventeen, 'That all the subscriptions of public debts and incumbrances, money-subscriptions, and other contracts made with the South-Sea Company, by virtue of an act made the last Session of Parliament, remain in the present state, unless altered for the ease and relief of the Proprietors, by a General Court of the South-Sea Company, or set aside by due course of Law.'

There are few instances which prove so strongly as this, that there is no cause so bad as to want an advocate in Assemblies, where a man may freely speak his opinion, without any other danger but that of being rejected. This pretended Contract, which was deemed valid, had not been read, nor could have been read, without being universally disapproved. Was it probable, that such multitudes should leave their most valuable interests to the discretion of two or three Attornies? They were not, indeed, forbid to subscribe, but they believed they had done it, with a liberty to consent to or reject the conditions that should be offered. Was not this sufficient to declare the subscription void, and to restore the Proprietors to their former state?

In the Poſſeſſion of the Right Hon.r William Lord Talbot. Impenſis I. & P. Knapton Londini. 1740. J. Houbraken ſculps. Amst. 1739.

BRITISH MUSEUM

ſtate? However, the Commons did not think ſo, for the reſolution of the Committee was confirmed, the next day, by the Houſe (1).

The day after this reſolution was agreed to, Mr. Walpole laid before the Commons his ſcheme to reſtore public credit, the ſubſtance of which was, to ingraft nine millions of South-Sea ſtock into the Bank of England, and the like ſum into the Eaſt-India Company, upon certain conditions (2). Mr. Hutchinſon and other Members made ſome exceptions to the ſcheme; but, none offering a better, it was ordered, 'That propoſals ſhould be received from the Bank of England, the South-Sea Company, and the Eaſt-India Company, towards reſtoring public credit.'

Though the plainneſs of Mr. Walpole's ſcheme recommended it above all others, yet it met with ſome oppoſition in the general Courts of the three great Companies, who met to give powers to their Directors to bring the matter to perfection: But at laſt the Directors were impowered to make a propoſal to the Houſe of Commons.

Accordingly propoſals agreeable to the new ſcheme were afterwards preſented to the Houſe of Commons by the ſeveral Companies, and it was reſolved (Jan. 5.) 'That an ingroſſment of nine millions of the capital ſtock of the South-Sea Company into the Capitals of the Bank and Eaſt-India Company, as propoſed by theſe Companies, will contribute very much to the reſtoring public credit.' A bill upon this reſolution was after ſome debate ordered to be brought in, which paſſed the Houſe, and was ſent up to the Lords, and afterwards received the Royal aſſent.

Purſuant to the order of the Houſe, the Sub and Deputy Governors of the South-Sea Company having preſented to the Commons their books and papers, Mr. Shippen made a long ſpeech, repreſenting, 'That beſides the papers, which had already been laid before them, it was neceſſary to have others, in order to diſcover the frauds and deceitful management of the South-Sea Directors and their Accomplices. That, in his opinion, the moſt villainous contrivance, whereby they inſnared unwary people, was their taking in money ſubſcriptions at 1000 per cent. and their declaring a dividend of 30 l. per cent. at Chriſtmas, and of not leſs than 50 l. per cent. per ann. for twelve years after; which had impoſed upon the underſtanding of all ſuch, as depended upon the wiſdom and integrity of the Directors, and occaſioned the ruin of many thouſands of families.' He therefore moved, That the Directors of the South-Sea Company ſhould lay before the Houſe the calculations or inducements, on which they took in the third and fourth money ſubſcriptions, and grounded the reſolutions of making ſuch dividends. This motion, not being oppoſed, was agreed to; as was likewiſe a ſecond motion for laying before the Houſe a liſt of the Directors of the South-Sea Company, with the names of the Treaſurer, Secretary, and Accountant, and alſo the original books of the minutes of the Committee of Treaſury of the Company, ſince the 25th of December, 1719, with a copy of the by-laws. After which the Commons adjourned to the 4th of January, as the Lords did to the 9th of the ſame month. 1720.

The Houſe of Commons divided in their opinions.

By theſe proceedings of the Parliament it is evident, the Commons were divided in their opinions, one party being for applying a remedy to the calamity occaſioned by the miſmanagement of the South-Sea ſcheme: And the other party, for inquiring into the cauſes of the preſent misfortunes, and for puniſhing the Authors as the moſt effectual and only means to redreſs them. The firſt party, which was favoured by the Court, prevailed for a time; but, when the Commons met after the Holidays, it appeared that the other party had gained conſiderable ſtrength, and that the artful introduction of other affairs, inſtead of diverting, only ſerved to inflame their reſentment againſt the Authors of the late proceedings.

Their farther proceedings. 1720-21.

On the 4th of January, Mr. Trevor, Secretary of war, ſeconded by the Lord Carpenter, moved for a bill to prevent mutiny and deſertion: But Sir Joſeph Jekyll expreſſed his ſurprize, 'that a bill ſhould be moved for ſo early, which ſeldom uſed to be brought in but towards the end of a Seſſion: That ſuch a hurry ſeemed to be intended to ſtop the proſecution of the Authors of the preſent misfortunes. That they very well knew, their days were numbered, and that, as ſoon as they had diſpatched the money bills, and the bill now moved for, they ſhould immediately be diſpatched home. That therefore he was for ſtaying thoſe bills, until they had done juſtice to the Nation, who called aloud for

---

(1) In the next day's debate, Mr. Walpole, who ſpoke for the reſolution, ſet forth the views, with which the South-Sea act was made, viz. 'To conſult the landed and trading intereſt of the Nation, by leſſening its incumbrances and public debts, and putting them in a method of being paid off in a few years; which could not have been done, unleſs a way had been found to make the annuities for long terms redeemable; which had been happily effected by the South-Sea ſcheme, without a breach of parliamentary faith: And, if they ſhould now unravel what had been done, they ſhould not only ruin the South-Sea Company, but, inſtead of alleviating, aggravate the preſent misfortunes.' In anſwer to this, Sir Joſeph Jekyll urged, 'That, in order to remedy the preſent diſtemper, and reſtore public credit, they ought, in the firſt place, to reſolve and aſſert public faith, equity, and juſtice, which the South-Sea Managers had notoriouſly violated, with reſpect to the firſt and ſecond Subſcribers of annuities and other public debts: For the former had not the ſtock, to which they were intitled, delivered to them, till ſix months after they had ſubſcribed their effects, and when the ſtock was fallen above half its price, and the latter had not the option either to accept or reject the terms, that were offered them.' Mr. Walpole having, among other things, replied, 'That, if any injuſtice was done to the Subſcribers, they were, by the reſolution in queſtion, left at liberty to ſeek their relief by law;' Mr. Lechmere, Chancellor of the Duchy, inſiſted, 'That, if the South-Sea Company, whom the Parliament had appointed Truſtees for the public debts, had not duly executed that truſt, in relation to the Annuitants, the latter could ſeek for relief no where but in Parliament; and that it was a duty incumbent upon the Legiſlature to relieve them.' Serjeant Pengelly, Mr. Hutchinſon, and ſome other Gentlemen, ſpoke on the ſame ſide; but were anſwered by Mr. Secretary Craggs, Sir William Thompſon, and Mr. Hungerford; and, after ſome other ſpeeches, it was moved to adjourn the debate; but, the queſtion put thereupon being carried in the negative by two hundred and thirty-two voices againſt eighty-eight, the Houſe agreed, without dividing, to the reſolution of the day before.

(2) The ſubſtance of what was opened in the Houſe of

1720-21. for it.' Mr. Secretary Craggs ſaid, 'He wondered to ſee any oppoſition made to a bill ſo neceſſary for the ſafety of the Government, eſpecially by a perſon, who had received ſignal favours from the Crown.' Upon this the Lord Moleſworth ſtood up, and ſaid, 'Mr. Speaker, is it come to this, that every man, who has a place, muſt do all the drudgery, that is injoined him? This may be true of ſome underlings; but I do not believe it: I am ſure it is falſe of King George; he commands his ſervants nothing, but what is according to laws, and for the good of his ſubjects.' Then Sir Joſeph Jekyll added, 'That he was as zealous as any man for the ſervice of the King and his Government; but he was of opinion, that the doing juſtice to the Nation, and puniſhing them, who had brought it into the preſent calamitous condition, was the moſt effectual way both to ſerve the King, and at the ſame time to diſcharge their duty to their injured Country: Concluding, however, that he did not oppoſe the bringing in of the bill;' which was agreed to. After this, the Houſe reſolving itſelf into a Grand Committee, Sir Joſeph repreſented, That, before they proceeded any farther, they ought to ſecure the perſons and eſtates of thoſe they had reaſon to look upon as the Authors of the public misfortunes; and therefore he moved for a bill to reſtrain the Sub-Governor, Deputy-Governor, Directors, Treaſurer, Under-Treaſurer, Caſhier, Secretary, and Accountants of the South-Sea Company, from going out of this Kingdom for the ſpace of one year, and till the end of the next Seſſion of Parliament; and, for diſcovering their eſtates and effects, and preventing the tranſporting or alienating the ſame.' This motion met with no oppoſition, and Sir Joſeph, with the Attorney and Sollicitor-General, and ſome others were ordered 1720-2 to prepare and bring in the bill (1), which having paſſed both Houſes received the Royal aſſent (2).

A ſelect Committee for the South-Sea affair.

As ſoon as this was over, the Houſe debated in what manner they ſhould proceed in the intended inquiry, whether in a Grand or Select Committee. After ſeveral ſpeeches on both ſides, it was reſolved that a Committee ſhould be appointed to inquire into all the proceedings relating to the execution of the South-Sea act; and that the numbers ſhould be thirteen, and choſen by ballot. Purſuant to this reſolution, Thomas Broderick, Archibald Hutchinſon, Sir Joſeph Jekyll, Edward Wortley, Sir Thomas Pengelly, William Clayton, Edward Jeffreys, Lord Moleſworth, Thomas Strangways, William Sloper, Nicholas Lechmere, General Roſſe, and Dixie Windſor were choſen, to whom the ſeveral books and papers, which had been laid before the Houſe by the South-Sea Company, were referred; and they were afterwards voted a Committee of Secrecy.

In the debate the Lord Hinchinbroke repreſented, that it was to be feared that, before the bill againſt the Directors, &c. was gone through both Houſes, the moſt criminal might withdraw out of the Kingdom, and therefore he moved, that they might be immediately taken into cuſtody. But, Mr. Lechmere, and others, having ſhewed the inconveniences of ſuch a proceeding, the motion was dropped.

In vain did the Directors preſent a petition to be heard by their Council againſt the bill, which was now brought in, and having paſſed the Commons was ſent up to the Lords.

Proceedings of the Lords upon the South-Sea affair.

By this time the Houſe of Lords were entered upon the South-Sea affair. Some of the Lords in the Miniſtry were the firſt, who complained of of Commons was told to the General Court of the South-Sea Directors two days after, by Sir John Fellows, to the following effect:

'That the 1ſt money-ſubſcription be continued, allowing longer time for the future payments; and that what has been paid be made ſtock at 400 l. per cent.

'That the money, paid upon the 2d, 3d, and 4th money-ſubſcriptions, be alſo made ſtock at 400 l. per cent. the Subſcribers to have the Midſummer dividend at 10 l. per cent, and their future payments to be diſcharged.

'The ſtock then undiſpoſed of will be 11,600,000 l. which, to be divided among the Proprietors, will be 45 l. per cent, to be diſpoſed of by ſubſcription or otherwiſe, as a General Court ſhall order, which was to this effect:

'That a ſum not exceeding nine millions be ingrafted into the Bank, on terms to be agreed on with that Company.

'The like as to the Eaſt-India Company.

'That, for the ſtock ſo to be ingrafted, thoſe Companies to have an annuity of 5 l. per cent. per annum.

'That one fourth part of the preſent ſtock of this Company be wrote into the Bank, and one other fourth part into the Eaſt-India Company, the Proprietors to be allowed ſtock in each of thoſe Companies, at 120 l. per cent.

'That there will be in all ſeven millions and a half of Bank ſtock, and the ſame of India ſtock, for the Proprietors of this Company.

'That all the profits of this Company, by their ſubſcriptions or otherwiſe, ſhall be for the ſole benefit of this Company.'

(1) This done, Mr. Shippen expreſſed his great ſatisfaction to ſee a Britiſh Houſe of Commons reſume their antient vigour and ſpirit, and act with ſo great unanimity for the public good. He owned 'the neceſſity of ſecuring the perſons and eſtates of the South-Sea Directors and their Officers; but ſaid, that, in his opinion, there were ſome men in great ſtations, whom, in time, he would not be afraid to name, who were no leſs guilty than the Directors.' Mr. Secretary, Craggs being ſomewhat exaſperated at this, ſaid, 'That he was ready to give ſatisfaction to any man, who ſhould queſtion him, either in that Houſe, or out of it.' This expreſſion gave no ſmall offence; and thereupon the Lord Moleſworth ſaid, 'That he had had the honour to be a Member of that Houſe upwards of thirty years, and never before now knew any man bold enough to challenge the whole Houſe of Commons, and all England beſides: That, for his part, though paſt ſixty, he would anſwer whatever he had to ſay within the Houſe, and hoped there were young Members enough, who would not be afraid to look Mr. Secretary in the face out of the Houſe.' Upon this, Mr. Secretary, ſeeing the Houſe in a great ferment, got up, and ſaid, 'That, by giving ſatisfaction, he meant clearing his conduct.' Upon which the matter went no farther.

(2) By this bill, the Directors were each to enter into recognizances, in the penalty of 100,000 l. with two ſureties in the penalty each of 25,000 l. If they neglected to do ſo before the 8th of February, they were to be impriſoned; and, in caſe they went out of the Kingdom, were to be adjudged guilty of felony. They were alſo obliged to deliver in upon oath, before the 5th of March, exact particulars of all the effects they were poſſeſſed of by themſelves, or in truſt, on the 1ſt of June 1720, or any time after, with an account of what they had diſpoſed of ſince that time. They were likewiſe diſabled from conveying any lands or effects, for a year after the 5th of January 1720-21.

(1) The

BRITISH MUSEUM

Art. Pond. pinx.

J. Ha

Impensis J. & P. Knapton Londini. 1746.

the miſmanagement of the South-Sea Directors, which had occaſioned the preſent diſtreſs; and Earl Stanhope ſaid, 'That the eſtates of the criminals, whether Directors or not Directors, ought to be confiſcated, to make good the public loſſes.' The Lord Carteret ſpoke to the ſame effect, as did likewiſe the Earl of Sunderland, who owned, indeed, that he had been for the South-Sea ſcheme, becauſe he thought it calculated for the advantage of the Nation, in order to leſſen the public debt, and, in particular, to take off the heavy incumbrance of long annuities; and no man would imagine, that ſo good a deſign could have been ſo perverted in the execution, as to produce quite contrary effects: But that, in his opinion, no Act of Parliament had ever been ſo much abuſed as the South-Sea act; and therefore he would go as far as any body to puniſh the offenders. Several Lords were ſurprized to find themſelves prevented by thoſe, whom they were ready to oppoſe, upon a ſuppoſition, that they entertained more favourable thoughts towards the Directors, againſt whom the others had left them but little to ſay. However, the Duke of Wharton obſerved, 'That they ought to have no reſpect of perſons: That, for his part, he would give up the beſt friend he had: That the Nation had been plundered in a moſt flagrant and notorious manner; and therefore they ought to find out the Offenders, and then puniſh them with the utmoſt ſeverity.' The Lord North and Grey, the Earl of Abingdon, and ſome others, urged alſo the ill effects of the South-Sea project, which the Biſhop of Rocheſter compared to a peſtilence. Earl Cowper ſpoke likewiſe on the ſame ſide, and in particular 'blamed thoſe, who, by the act of Parliament, were appointed to overlook and check the South-Sea Directors, and who, in diſcharge of their truſt, ought to have prevented their jumping from a ſubſcription at 400 to 1000, which was the main cauſe of the misfortunes that enſued.' The Earl of Sunderland, finding himſelf and the other Lords of the Treaſury thus attacked, ſaid, 'That by the South-Sea act they were directed to appoint ſuch perſons, as they ſhould think fit to be Managers and Directors, on the part of the Treaſury, for the due execution of the act: That, as they had reaſon to look upon thoſe perſons, who had the principal ſhare in framing this ſcheme, as the moſt able and proper to execute it, they had accordingly appointed ſome of the South-Sea Directors to be Managers and Directors for the Treaſury: Concluding, that in this they had followed former precedents.' Upon this a queſtion was propoſed and ſtated, that the Commiſſion iſſued, out by the Lords Commiſſioners of the Treaſury, to three of the Directors of the South-Sea Company, was, according to former precedents, and legal. This occaſioned a great debate; but, after the reading of ſome papers, the Lord Harcourt's opinion for the affirmative prevailed, by a majority of ſixty-three againſt twenty-eight, moſt of whom entered their proteſt againſt that reſolution. Then ſome Lords moved for appointing a ſecret Committee, to inquire into all the proceedings relating to the execution of the South-Sea act; but this was oppoſed by others, who ſaid, they ought, in the moſt ſolemn manner, to examine the perſons concerned. Which being agreed to, the Sub and Deputy-Governors, Directors, and Officers of the South-Sea Company were ordered to attend on the 12th of January. 1720-21.

On that day, the Sub and Deputy-Governors, about twenty-four of the Directors, Mr. Knight Treaſurer, Mr. Surman his Deputy, and ſome other inferior Officers, attended the Houſe, and at the bar were ſworn to make true anſwers to ſuch queſtions, as ſhould be put to them. After this, the Governors and Treaſurer were examined ſeparately, and then the Directors. The examinations being ended, it was reſolved, 'That the Sub-Governor and Directors of the South-Sea Company had prevaricated with them, in giving falſe repreſentations of ſeveral matters of fact: That, by lending money on ſtock and ſubſcriptions, they were guilty of a notorious breach of truſt; and that they ought to make good the loſſes, which the Company had ſuſtained by their fraudulent management.' Some Lords were unwilling to involve all the Directors in this cenſure, and would diſtinguiſh the innocent from the guilty; but they were told, that the whole Court of Directors were guilty, either in acting or aſſenting; upon which they acquieſced in declaring them all criminal. The Directors being called in again, the Lord-Chancellor gave them a ſevere reprimand for giving the Houſe ſuch lame accounts, and for having ordered their Clerks to omit ſeveral material things in the copies, that had been laid before the Houſe; commanding them, at the ſame time, to produce either the originals themſelves of ſeveral accounts of their Treaſury, or authentic copies of them.

Soon after this, a bill paſſed the Houſe of Lords, to diſable the preſent Sub-Governor, Deputy-Governor, and Directors of the South-Sea Company, to enjoy any office in that Company, or in the Eaſt-India Company, or Bank of England, and from voting upon elections in the Company. Then the Lords examined ſeveral Brokers, as Stroude, Teſtard, Lacour a Jew, and his ſon. By the three laſt great diſcoveries were ſaid to be made. This done, the Houſe adjourned to the 24th of January.

In the mean time, Mr. Knight, Treaſurer of the South-Sea Company, who was intruſted with the principal ſecrets of the South-Sea affair, either of his own accord, or (as it was ſuſpected) at the ſuggeſtion of others, thought fit to retire out of the Kingdom (1). He abſented himſelf the 22d of January from his houſe, and imbarked the

(1) When Mr. Knight attended at the Houſe of Lords, a Peer ſpoke to the Earl of Sunderland, that a motion might be made to ſecure him immediately; for it was ſtrongly ſurmized that he would ſoon make off. The Earl agreed in that ſurmize, but ſaid, Earl Cowper ſhould be conſulted before any ſuch motion was made, for, without his joining in with it, there was no likelihood of its paſſing; and then Knight would be alarmed to no purpoſe. The other Lord applied to Earl Cowper, who ſeemed very averſe to the taking any ſuch ſtep, till, upon Knight's further examination, the Houſe ſhould come to a reſolution, particularly with relation to him: Upon which the motion dropped; and it was ſuſpected, that the Earl of Sunderland, knowing Earl Cowper's ſentiments, referred that other Peer to him, on purpoſe to prevent the motion's being then made.

1720-21. the next morning in the river, on board a veſſel, which carried him, the ſame day, to Calais. A letter, directed to the South-Sea Directors, was brought that morning, by a porter, to Mr. Surman (1), who delivered it to the Committee of Secrecy, then ſitting at the South-Sea-Houſe. They immediately repaired to the Houſe of Commons, and acquainted them with what had happened. Two addreſſes were voted and preſented for a proclamation to apprehend Mr. Knight, and for another to ſtop the Ports to prevent him, or any of the Directors, from eſcaping out of the Kingdom. Then General Roſs and other Members of the Secret Committee informed the Houſe, 'That they had already diſcovered a train of the deepeſt villany and fraud that hell ever contrived, to ruin a Nation, which, in due time, they would lay before the Houſe; and that, in the mean while, in order to a further diſcovery, they thought it highly neceſſary to ſecure the perſons of ſome of the Directors and principal South-Sea Officers, and to ſeize their papers.' Upon which the books and papers of Mr. Knight, Mr. Surman, Mr. Turner, Sir George Caſwal, and Mr. Grigſby, were ordered to be ſecured, and Surman and Grigſby to be taken into cuſtody; as were alſo Sir John Blunt, Sir John Lambert, two of the Directors, and Sir John Fellows, Sub-Governor of the South-Sea Company. Then, Mr. Sawbridge and Sir Theodore Janſen being come into the Houſe, a motion was made and carried, 'That they were guilty of a notorious breach of truſt, as Directors of the South-Sea Company, and had occaſioned very great loſs to numbers of his Majeſty's ſubjects, and highly prejudiced the public credit:' They were both expelled the Houſe, and taken into cuſtody, with Sir Robert Chaplin and Francis Eyles, two other Directors, and Members of Parliament. 1720-21.

The ſame evening a Council was held, in which Mr. Aiſlabie reſigned his places of Chancellor of the Exchequer and Lord of the Treaſury. Orders were alſo given for removing all South-Sea Directors from any place they had in the Government (2).

The Lords, on the 24th of January, examined Mr. Joye, Deputy-Governor of the South-Sea Company, who made a very frank confeſſion of ſeveral important matters, and communicated Mr. Knight's letter, which was read. After this, upon Earl Stanhope's motion, five Directors, Sir William Chapman, Mr. Holditch, Mr. Hawes, Mr. Gibbon, and Mr. Cheſter, were ordered to be taken into cuſtody, with their papers, and thoſe of Mr. Clark, the Company's Sollicitor. Of which notice was ſent to the Commons with a meſſage, that theſe perſons and their papers ſhould be produced in ſuch manner as they ſhould direct. This meſſage contributed very much to the preſerving a good underſtanding between the two Houſes.

Two days after, the Directors Mr. Aſtell and Sir Harcourt Maſters were examined by the Lords, and, among other diſcoveries, named ſeveral perſons both in the Adminiſtration and in the Houſe of Commons, to whom large ſums in

(1) The letter was as follows:

Gentlemen,

'I write this from a true ſenſe of the obligation I am under to make up my accounts with the Company, and to pay them their full demand: And, though ſelf-preſervation has obliged me to withdraw myſelf from the reſentment againſt the Directors and myſelf, yet I am not conſcious to myſelf of having done any one thing that I can reproach myſelf for, ſo far as relates to an honeſt ſincere intention and zeal for the Company; but I can and do charge myſelf with a great many indiſcretions, and am (beſides the concern I muſt be under for leaving my own family, friends, &c.) very ſenſibly touched with what you are like to ſuffer on this account; and it will be the more, I am afraid, from your want of unanimity, which I heartily recommend to you for the future, and, I am ſure, wiſh you all well as you wiſh yourſelves.

I write this at a diſtance from home, and under a great deal of concern, ſo cannot be ſo particular, as otherwiſe I would have been. I have herewith ſent Mr. Surman the key of my deſks, who knows ſo much of the ſtate of the caſh, as to be able to make it up. There are a good many bills of exchange, and other payments, to write off, and the weekly receipts to write on. There is caſh in the Bank, in the Company's book, which, together with the notes taken on the third and fourth ſubſcriptions, and the Company's bonds, will make up the balance, as I do believe: But, if it fall ſhort, I have 3000 Equivalent ſtock, 1600 Bank ſtock, 2000 India and South-Sea ſtock, over and above what I owe the Company on the loan, as will be ſufficient to make it up with money owing on ſecurities on my particular account. The Company need not deliver or be anſwerable for the ſubſcription-receipts or ſtock on the third and fourth ſubſcriptions, unleſs theſe notes are paid; ſo the loſs can only be the difference between the ſubſcriptions and money in value; and I think, it would be hard for me to bear the loſs, becauſe the Clerks took by far the greateſt part of them, as thinking them better than none; and moſt of them would have been non-payments, if they had been refuſed: However, I ſubmit this to the Company. I have taken with me but little more than a ſufficiency to maintain myſelf, and the effects left will more than anſwer for all deficiencies. I have bought no land in truſt for me, nor have I ever conveyed or ſettled any part of that I had formerly, or have bought lately; it remains to anſwer any demands on me from the Company or the Legiſlature. I have withdrawn myſelf only to avoid the weight of the enquiry, which I found too heavy for me; and I am ſenſible that it would have been impoſſible for me to have avoided the appearance and charge of prevarication and perjury, not from my own intention to do ſo, but from the largeneſs and extent of the enquiry, and the nature and largeneſs of the tranſactions. I am ſure I am a great deal concerned to add to your preſent difficulties; though I muſt ſay, that I have deſerved better uſage than I have had from the Court the laſt week: But this I ſay without any reſentment, otherwiſe than that it has been an addition to the weight I had before upon me.

I am preſſed for time, ſo can only aſſure you that I am, with all reſpect, in inclination though not in power,

GENTLEMEN,

Your moſt obedient,

Sunday Evening,
Jan. 22. 1720.

humble Servant,

ROBERT KNIGHT.'

(2) Accordingly, Francis Hawes, Receiver-General of the Cuſtoms; Sir Harcourt Maſters, Receiver-General of the City of London; Mr. Reynolds, Commiſſioner of the Victualling Office; Mr. Holditch, Treaſurer of the Stamp-Office; and Arthur Ingram, Treaſurer of the duty on ſalt, were all removed from their employments.

(1) Three

20-21. in South-Sea ſtock had been given, for procuring the paſſing the South-Sea act. After this, upon the motion of Earl Stanhope, ſeconded by the Lord Townſhend and Earl Cowper, it was unanimouſly reſolved, 'That the taking in of ſtock, the transferring of ſtock belonging to the South-Sea Company, or giving credit for the ſame, without a valuable conſideration actually paid, or ſufficiently ſecured; or the purchaſing ſtock by any Director or Agent of the South-Sea Company, for the uſe or benefit of any perſon in the Adminiſtration, or any Member of either Houſe of Parliament, during ſuch time, as the late bill relating to the South-Sea Company, was depending laſt year in Parliament, was a notorious and moſt dangerous corruption.' This reſolution was ſoon followed by another, after the examination of Mr. Waller (ſon-in-law to Mr. Aiſlabie) and Mr. Aſtell, relating to a great quantity of South-Sea ſtock, transferred to, and negotiated by Mr. Waller, who pretended not to have kept minutes of what he had done in Exchange-Alley. This being looked upon as prevarication, it was reſolved, 'That the Directors of the South-Sea Company having ordered great quantities of their ſtock to be bought for the ſervice of the Company, when ſtock was at a very high price, and on pretence of keeping up the price of the ſtock; and, at the ſame time, ſeveral of the Directors, and other Officers belonging to the Company, having, in a clandeſtine manner, ſold their own ſtocks to the Company; ſuch Directors and Officers are guilty of a notorious fraud and breach of truſt; and their ſo doing was one great cauſe of the unhappy turn of affairs, that has ſo much affected public credit (1).

On the 4th of February, the Lords deſigned to have examined Sir John Blunt, the chief Projector of the South-Sea ſcheme, and it was expected, he would make great diſcoveries: But, inſtead of that, he would not ſo much as be ſworn to anſwer to ſuch interrogatories, as ſhould be put to him, alledging, that he had already been examined before the Secret Committee of the Houſe of Commons, and to ſuch extent of affairs, that, unleſs he had a copy of his examination, he could not remember every particular; and, as no man is obliged to accuſe himſelf, he would not run the hazard of prevaricating. The Lords were ſurprized at this proceeding; but, upon a ſurmiſe, that Sir John Blunt might deſign to break the harmony, which had hitherto been preſerved in this affair between the two Houſes, they thought fit not to ſhew immediately their indignation againſt his obſtinacy. In the debate how they ſhould proceed in this unprecedented caſe, ſome reflections were made againſt the Miniſtry by a noble Duke, who obſerved, that the Government of the beſt of Princes was ſometimes made intolerable to their ſubjects by ill Miniſters; and alledged the example of Sejanus, who had made a diviſion in the Imperial Family, and rendered the Reign of the Emperor Claudius odious to the Romans. This reflection was highly reſented by Earl Stanhope, who undertook to vindicate the Miniſtry. He ſpoke with ſuch vehemence, that, finding himſelf taken ſuddenly with a violent head-ach, he went home, and was cupped, which eaſed him a little. The next morning he was let blood, and continued pretty well till about ſix o'clock in the evening, when he fell into a drowzineſs, and then into a ſuffocation, in which he inſtantly expired. The King was ſo ſenſibly touched with the news of his death, that he retired for ſeveral hours into his cloſet, to lament the loſs of a faithful and able Miniſter, whoſe ſervice he ſo much wanted at that time. The Lord Townſhend was appointed Secretary of State in his room. 1720-21.

Death of Earl Stanhope,

Two days after, Mr. Secretary Craggs was taken ill of the ſmall-pox, of which he died the ninth day, on the 16th of February. Thus, in the ſpace of eleven days, England loſt two Secretaries of State.

and of Mr. Secretary Craggs.

Mr. Knight, after his eſcape into France, went to Bruſſels, from whence (not thinking himſelf ſafe there) he intended to retire to Liege. As the King had ſent orders to his Miniſters in foreign Courts, to make application for the ſeizing Mr. Knight, in caſe he ſhould ſhelter himſelf in the Dominions of any State in Alliance with him, Mr. Gaudot, Secretary to Mr. Leathes, the Britiſh Reſident at Bruſſels, having information, that Mr. Knight was going towards Louvain, applied to the Marquiſs de Prié, Governor of the Auſtrian Netherlands, who ordered a Major and ſixteen Dragoons to attend him, and follow his directions. With theſe Gaudot ſets out for Louvain, where he was informed, that two Engliſh Gentlemen had, that morning, taken the road to Tirlemont. Upon this Gaudot, with the Major and four Dragoons, haſted to Tirlemont, and, by means of a Poſtillion ſent before to make inquiry, they put up at the ſame Inn where the Gentlemen had ſtopped. Gaudot, entering the Inn, met Mr. Knight and his Companion, who inſtantly yielded themſelves priſoners. Soon after Mr. Knight's ſon, who had followed his father from Bruſſels, arrived at Tirlemont, and was alſo ſeized. They were all carried back to Bruſſels, and, by a warrant from the Marquiſs de Prié, the Major conducted Mr. Knight to the Citadel of Antwerp, where he was kept in ſafe cuſtody by an Officer who lay in the room with him, and four ſentinals without the Proceedings about Mr. Knight.

---

(1) Three days after, Mr. Hawes, a Director, having been examined with ſome Brokers, the Lords came to the following reſolutions:

1. That the Directors, &c. buying the Midſummer dividend about the 4th of January 1719-20, and paying 5 s. down, and 3 l. after the receipt of the dividend, was a fraud to the perſons, with whom they contracted.

2. That the giving a premium, for the refuſal of ſtock, at higher prices than they knew the value was, was a fraudulent artifice to raiſe the price of ſtock.

3. That promoting the third ſubſcription at 1000 per cent, was to anſwer a particular end, and to cheat the public.

4. That the declaring 30 l. per cent dividend for the half year ending at Chriſtmas, and 50 l. per cent. per annum for no leſs than twelve years after, was a villainous artifice to delude and defraud his Majeſty's good ſubjects.

5. That the declaring the Midſummer dividend to be paid in ſtock, when they had money by them to anſwer the ſame, was a notorious fraud, and was one occaſion of the misfortunes that enſued.

1720-21. the houſe, and as many within, and was not allowed the uſe of pen, ink, and paper. His ſon went with him to the Citadel.

Great was the joy at the news of Mr. Knight's being in cuſtody. Addreſſes were preſented by both Houſes to thank the King for giving ſuch effectual directions for ſecuring Mr. Knight, and to deſire that orders might be given to his Miniſters at Vienna and Bruſſels, to make proper applications that Mr. Knight, with his papers and effects, might be delivered to ſuch perſons as ſhould be appointed to receive him. Purſuant to theſe addreſſes, the King ſent Colonel Charles Churchill to the Court of Vienna, to make inſtances for the delivering up Mr. Knight; who, on the other hand, made application to the States of Brabant, for the protection of their Conſtitution. By an article of the Charter, called the Joyful Entry (granted by the Emperor Charles V, and ſworn to by all his Succeſſors) no perſon charged with, or apprehended for any crime, can be removed to be tried out of Brabant. When therefore Mr. Leathes made preſſing inſtances with the Marquiſs de Prié to have Mr. Knight delivered up, the States of Brabant inſiſted upon their privilege, and the Marquiſs would proceed no farther in the affair, without particular inſtructions from Vienna; for which purpoſe, Colonel Churchill was ſent to that Court. In the beginning of March, the Colonel ſent word, that he was juſt arrived at Vienna, and would immediately apply to the Imperial Court, for the delivering up Mr. Knight, and did not doubt of ſucceſs, unleſs the privileges of the States of Brabant interfered. This letter being communicated to the Houſe of Commons, reflections were made (particularly by the Lord Moleſworth) upon the frivolous pretence, uſed to fruſtrate the King's endeavours to bring over Mr. Knight. But the Houſe came to no reſolution in the affair. About three weeks after, a letter from the Emperor to the King was laid before the Commons, wherein 'the Emperor expreſſes his inclination to comply with his Majeſty's deſires, but, the States of Brabant inſiſting on their privileges, it would be neceſſary to make application to them, which he would not fail to ſupport.' In a debate on account of this letter, Mr. Hutcheſon repreſented, 'How much, on the one hand, the Public was concerned in having the Authors of the preſent diſtreſs fully diſcovered, and brought to condign puniſhment; and how impracticable it was, on the other, to proceed in that important inquiry, ſo long as the principal Agent of the South-Sea Directors, and their Accomplices, was kept out of the way; that, in the mean time, the public calamity increaſing every day, the Nation called aloud for juſtice; and therefore, if the means already uſed for bringing over Mr. Knight proved abortive, it were adviſeable to have recourſe to more ſpeedy and effectual methods.' Sir Joſeph Jekyll alſo ſhewed, 'That it was incumbent on ſome perſons in the Adminiſtration to have Mr. Knight brought over, in order fully to clear their own innocence, otherwiſe, though acquitted, they would ſtill be looked upon as criminal: Urging, moreover, that it was matter of wonder, that ſo frivolous a pretence, as the privileges of the State of Brabant, ſhould be uſed, to put a ſtop to ſo important an inquiry, eſpecially conſidering how little thoſe privileges had been regarded in more material points, and what obligations the Houſe of Auſtria lay under to the Britiſh Nation.' On the other hand, Mr. Lechmere repreſented, 'That, in all probability, the Court of Vienna had not fully conſidered the importance of the inſtances made to them in his Majeſty's name, and at the deſire of the Commons of Great-Britain: But it was to be preſumed, when ſo wiſe a Prince as the Emperor ſhould be apprized, that the welfare and ſafety of England depended in ſome meaſure on the delivering up of Mr. Knight, he would readily comply with their deſires.' Then Mr. Lechmere moved for an addreſs to thank the King for the inſtances he had made, by a letter under his own hand to the Emperor about Mr. Knight, to expreſs their diſſatisfaction at the obſtacles raiſed againſt a compliance with his endeavours, and to deſire his moſt preſſing inſtances for the obtaining what was thought of ſuch importance to the juſtice due to his people. This addreſs was agreed to and preſented to the King, who aſſured them, he would continue to uſe his utmoſt endeavours for obtaining what they deſired, and hoped they would prove effectual. But, notwithſtanding all this, before the Emperor had ſent any inſtructions to the Marquiſs de Prié, Mr. Knight found means to make his eſcape out of the Citadel of Antwerp. 1720.

Proceedings of Secret Committees.

The Committee of Secrecy, appointed to look into all the proceedings relating to the execution of the South-Sea act, made their firſt report to the Houſe of Commons the 16th of February, the day Mr. Secretary Craggs died. At the entrance into their inquiry, they obſerved, the matters referred to them were of great variety and extent. Many perſons were intruſted with different parts in the execution of that act, and, in an unwarrantable manner, diſpoſed of the properties of many thouſands of perſons, amounting to many millions. In the progreſs of their inquiry they found it attended with many difficulties.

In ſome of the books, falſe and fictitious entries were made; in others, entries with blanks; in others, entries with razures and alterations; and in others, leaves torn out. They found, ſome books had been deſtroyed, others ſecreted: However, they were enabled to lay ſome matters of importance before the Houſe.

The firſt matter, that occurred to their conſideration, was a ſcene of iniquity and corruption, the diſcovery of which they conceived to be of the higheſt concern to the honour of Parliaments, and the ſecurity of the Government.

It appeared, that, before the paſſing the South-Sea act, and before any ſubſcription could be made, a fictitious ſtock of no leſs than 574,000 l. had been diſpoſed of by the Directors, in order to facilitate the paſſing the bill. This ſtock was ſet down as ſold at ſeveral days, and at ſeveral prices, from 150 l. per cent. to 325 l. per cent. (amounting in all to 1,259,325 l.) and was from thoſe times to be eſteemed as holden of the Company, for the benefit of the pretended Purchaſers, though no mutual agreement was then made for the delivery or acceptance of the ſtock at any certain time, and though no money was paid down, nor any ſecurity given for payment by the ſuppoſed Purchaſers. So, if the price of ſtock had fallen, no loſs could have been been ſuſtained by them; but, if it ſhould advance, the difference was to be made good to the pretended Purchaſers. As this fictitious ſtock was deſigned for promoting the bill, the Sub and Deputy-Governors, Sir John Blunt, Mr. Gibbon, Mr. Cheſter, Mr. Holditch, with the Caſhier Mr. Knight, had the diſpoſal of this ſtock, of which the following particulars were taken for ſeveral perſons:

		l.
For the Earl of Sunderland, at the requeſt of Mr. Craggs, ſenr.	}	50,000
For the Ducheſs of Kendal	——	10,000
For the Counteſs of Platen	——	10,000
For the Counteſs's two Nieces	——	10,000
For Mr. Craggs, ſenr.	——	30,000
For Charles Stanhope	——	10,000
For the Sword-blade	——	50,000

The difference of the laſt parcel amounting to 250,000 l. was ſuppoſed to be paid to Mr. Charles Stanhope by Sir George Caſwal and Company; but that Sir George ordered the name Stanhope to be partly eraſed out of the book, and made Stangape. It alſo appeared, that Mr. Aiſlabie, Chancellor of the Exchequer, had great quantities of South-Sea ſtock given him; but that his affairs were chiefly managed by Mr. Edmund Waller, his ſon-in-law, and Mr. Weymondſel, a Broker: That Mr. Aiſlabie's laſt account with Turner, Caſwal, and Company, was 794,451 l.: That 68,000 l. part thereof, was paid in caſh to Mr. Waller, as was alſo 44,600 l. more by a bond of Caſwal and Company; and 33,000 l. by another bond of Caſwal and Company, was paid to Mr. Weddal: That Mr. Aiſlabie, as a Commiſſioner of the Treaſury, had 4000 l. in the firſt money-ſubſcription; but that as ſoon as it came to bear an advance of about 40 per cent. he had 20,000 more: That no warrant was found for making the ſecond money-ſubſcription more than one million; but that afterwards ſome of the leading Directors, by the advice of Mr. Aiſlabie, made it 500,000 l. more: That the third money-ſubſcription at 1000 l. was promoted by Mr. Aiſlabie, whoſe liſt amounted to 70,000 l. the Earl of Sunderland's liſt to 160,000 l. Mr. Secretary Cragg's liſt to 659,000 l. and Mr. Charles Stanhope's to 47,000 l. That Mr. Aiſlabie likewiſe adviſed the lending money on ſtock; and that the Directors ſold part of the pawned ſtock at high prices; but that of 2,800,000 l. that ſhould have been transferred by Mr. Knight to four of the Directors, there appeared to be but 2,400,000 l. ſo that there was 400,000 l. ſtock wanting. The Committee obſerved, that, in the account of ſtock ſold, they found the names of ſeveral Members of Parliament, not concerned in the Adminiſtration, whoſe caſes they could not particularly examine, without the direction of the Houſe in what manner to proceed. The Report ended, with an account of the divers practices uſed to raiſe the nominal value of South-Sea ſtock, to the extravagant rate to which it was afterwards advanced above the real value (1). This Report was followed by ſix others, and, at the cloſe of the laſt, the Committee ſaid, they were under a neceſſity of ending their inquiry, by reaſon of the abſence of Mr. Knight, who appeared to have been principally and in many inſtances ſolely intruſted in the execution of the black and deſtructive South Sea ſcheme. 1720-21.

Soon after the firſt Report, the Commons having taken it into conſideration, came to theſe reſolutions:

1. That the late Sub-Governor, Deputy-Governor, and Directors of the South-Sea Company, and their Officers, and their Aiders and Abettors, in lending out the Company's money upon

(1) As this part of the report gives a brief hiſtory of all the contrivances for ſupporting the ſcheme, it will not be improper to inſert it at large:

Your Committee find, that, by computation made by their direction, it appears, that the Directors of the South-Sea Company might have raiſed the whole ſum ſtipulated for the Public, with a profit of near one million and an half for the benefit of the Proprietors of the old ſtock, without ſetting their ſtock to ſale at any higher price than 150 l. per cent.

That after the ſaid Directors had taken in the firſt money-ſubſcription at 300 l. per cent. and the ſecond money-ſubſcription at 400 l. per cent. and the firſt ſubſcription of the long and ſhort annuities at 375 l. per cent. the value of 100 l. South-Sea ſtock was but 120 l. or thereabouts, ſuppoſing the whole money of the ſaid firſt and ſecond ſubſcriptions (amounting to 12,750,000 l.) had been all paid in.

That the ſaid Court of Directors did afterwards proceed to take in a third and a fourth money-ſubſcription at the rate of 1000 l. per cent. and a ſecond ſubſcription of the long and ſhort annuities, and a ſubſcription of the redeemable debts at the rate of 800 l. per cent. after which the value of 100 l. South-Sea ſtock was but 332 l. or thereabouts, ſuppoſing the whole money of the ſaid four money ſubſcriptions (amounting to 68,750,000 l.) had been all paid in.

That, if all the remaining public debts had been taken in, and all the remaining ſtock of the Company ſold, on the terms which the ſaid Directors pretended to expect, 100 l. South-Sea ſtock would have been worth but 547 l. or thereabouts, ſuppoſing the money of the ſaid four ſubſcriptions, and the money for the remaining ſtock (which together would have amounted to 205,039,401 l.) had been all paid in.

That, on the 30th day of Auguſt laſt, the Court of Directors of the South-Sea Company came to a reſolution (which on the 8th day of September laſt was confirmed by a General Court) to declare a dividend of 30 l. per cent. to be made at Chriſtmas, 1720, and of not leſs than 50 l. per cent. per ann. for not leſs than twelve years to come from that time.

That ſoon after this reſolution (viz. at a General Court held the 20th day of September laſt) the Sub-Governor acquainted the General Court, that the affairs of the Company, in relation to the price of their ſtock, and ſubſcriptions, had taken an unexpected turn, and thereupon propoſed their giving a power to the Court of Directors to relieve the laſt Subſcribers of the public debts, and the Proprietors of the two laſt money-ſubſcriptions, which was accordingly granted; and, at a Court of Directors held the 29th day of September laſt, it was reſolved, That the ſaid Subſcribers ſhould have the ſame terms with the Bank, viz. That their ſubſcriptions ſhould be reduced from 1000 l. and 800 l. per cent. to 400 l. and that they ſhould alſo have the benefit of the Midſummer dividend of 10 l. per cent. which was accordingly confirmed by a General Court held the 30th day of the ſame month; upon which your Committee obſerves, That it appears to them very extraordinary, that the Directors on the 8th Day of September (when the ſaid high dividend was declared in a General Court) ſhould have had no foreſight of the turn which ſo ſoon after (viz. on the 20th day of the ſame month) happened in their affairs.

1720-21. upon ſtock and ſubſcriptions, without taking ſecurity for repayment thereof, have been guilty of a notorious breach of truſt, and have thereby occaſioned great loſs to the Company, for which they ought to make ſatisfaction out of their own eſtates.

2. That the ſelling or diſpoſing of ſtock or ſubſcriptions, transferred or depoſited as a ſecurity for the repayment of the money ſo lent, was a notorious breach of the truſt repoſed in the Sub-Governor, Deputy-Governor, Directors, and their Officers, and a fraud on the Proprietors, in order to inrich themſelves; for which they ought to make ſatisfaction out of their own eſtates.

3. That the taking in or holding of ſtock, by the South-Sea Company, for the benefit of any Member of either Houſe of Parliament, or perſon concerned in the Adminiſtration, during the time, that the Company's propoſals, or the bill thereto relating, were depending in Parliament, without any valuable conſideration paid, or ſufficient ſecurity given for the acceptance of, or payment for ſuch ſtock; and the Company's paying or allowing ſuch perſon the difference ariſing by the advanced price of the ſtocks, were corrupt, infamous, and dangerous practices, highly reflecting on the honour and juſtice of Parliaments, and deſtructive of the intereſts of his Majeſty's Government.

4. That any of the Directors of the South-Sea Company ſelling their own ſtock at high prices to the Company or others, at the ſame time, that they gave orders for buying ſtock upon account of the Company, under pretence of keeping up the nominal value of the ſtock, was a ſcandalous practice, tending to inrich themſelves, to the great loſs and detriment of the Company, and of others his Majeſty's ſubjects, for which they ought to make ſatisfaction out of their own eſtates. 1720.

5. That the declaring a dividend of 30 per cent. for Chriſtmas laſt, and not leſs than 50 per cent. per ann. for not leſs than twelve years after, was an infamous contrivance to give his Majeſty's ſubjects falſe notions of the value of the ſtock, that the Directors might more eaſily diſpoſe of their own ſtock at exorbitant prices.

6. That the ſetting the ſtock of the South-Sea Company to ſale by ſubſcriptions, at high prices, above the intrinſic value of the ſame, by the Sub-Governor, Deputy-Governor, and Directors of the Company, was a groſs and notorious fraud; and has been one great cauſe of the ſinking of the public credit, and bringing upon the Nation the diſtreſs it at preſent labours under.

7. That the adviſing the Sub-Governor, Deputy-Governor, and Directors of the South-Sea Company, to ſet the ſtock of the Company to ſale by ſubſcriptions at high and extravagant prices, or to declare the high and extravagant dividends for Chriſtmas laſt, and twelve years after, by any perſons in the Adminiſtration, was a notorious

---

That, on the ſaid 8th day of September, the Sub-Governor acquainted the General Court, that their Directors had been unanimous in all their proceedings, which, amongſt other things, includes the before-mentioned ſeveral ſubſcriptions by them taken in, except the firſt; and upon the examination of the Directors it doth not appear to your Committee, that any one of them proteſted againſt, or declared any public diſſent from any of the ſaid proceedings; and it appears, that all of them took their ſhares and proportions of the ſubſcriptions, which were allotted for the reſpective Directors to diſpoſe of.

And your Committee have been informed by Sir Theodore Janſſen, that there was a meeting at the houſe of Sir John Fellows, betwixt ſixteen of the Court of Directors, Mr. Secretary Craggs and Mr. Aiſlabie, at which time it was propoſed, that a ſubſcription ſhould be taken in at 300 l. per Cent. which was approved of by Mr. Secretary Craggs, and Mr. Aiſlabie; and that, when the ſaid Company broke up, it was agreed, that every perſon ſhould uſe their beſt endeavours to promote it; which is alſo confirmed by the information of Sir Lambert Blackwell.

And, at a Court of Directors held the 13th day of April laſt, it was reſolved, to take in a ſubſcription for two millions, at the rate of 300 l. per cent. but the ſame was afterwards increaſed, without any previous reſolution to that purpoſe, to 2,250,000 l. and your Committee obſerve, that the imaginary value of the ſaid ſubſcriptions roſe very faſt; and that thoſe who had the benefit of the ſaid additional ſubſcription, if they ſold, and diſpoſed of the ſame, made very great gains thereby.

That, at a Court of Directors held the 28th day of April laſt, it was reſolved to take in a ſecond money-ſubſcription, at the rate of 400 l. per cent. for 1,000,000 l. but, by the accounts delivered into this Houſe, it appears, that the ſaid ſubſcription was for 1,500,000 l. yet it does not appear that there was any previous reſolution of the Court of Directors for the addition of 500,000 l. nor was the ſaid addition declared till the 8th of September laſt, at which time the Sub-Governor acquainted the General Court therewith; upon which your Committee cannot but obſerve the great diſtance of time between the taking in of the ſecond ſubſcription at 1,000,000 l. and the 8th of September, when the ſame was reported to the General Court at 1,500,000 l. during which interval the imaginary value of that ſubſcription was exceſſively increaſed, whereby the perſons, who had the ſame, had the advantage of that extraordinary riſe.

That, at a Court of Directors held the 15th day of June laſt, it was reſolved to take in a third money-ſubſcription at the rate of 1000 l. per cent. one tenth part whereof was to be paid down at the time of ſubſcribeing; and, at a Court of Directors held the 23d day of the ſame month, the Sub-Governor acquainted the Court, That the ſaid third money-ſubſcription was compleated, without mentioning to what ſum; but at the before-mentioned General Court, held the 8th day of September laſt, he declared the ſame to be for five millions; and Mr. Knight, late Caſhier of the South-Sea Company, by an article dated the 20th day of June laſt, in the caſh-book, fol. 125, charges the ſaid ſum of five millions as received; which account was paſſed, and allowed by the Company's Committee of Treaſury, on, or ſome time after the 4th day of Auguſt laſt; and yet, in the account of the third money-ſubſcription delivered in to this Houſe, it is ſtated at 4,400,000 l. only the remaining ſum of 600,000 l. being entered on the credit ſide of the ſaid caſh-book on the 19th of December, 1720, as a ſuppoſed deficiency of the payment on this ſubſcription; although it appears to your Committee upon the evidence of Mr. Lockyer, and others, that not only the whole ſum of five millions, but even a conſiderable exceeding thereon was paid in; that a great deal of money was repaid back to reduce the ſubſcription to five millions; and that they had money enough paid in for near eight millions.

That, at a Court of Directors held the 12th day of Auguſt laſt, it was reſolved to take in a fourth money-ſubſcription for one million, at the rate of 1000 l. per cent. And, at a Court of Directors held the 25th of the ſame month, it was declared, That, upon caſting up the books, it was found the ſaid fourth money-ſubſcription, notorious breach of the truſt repoſed in them, to the prejudice of his Majeſty's Government, and the intereſt of the Kingdom. 1720-21.

8. That the entry in the caſh-book of the South-Sea Company of 574,500 l. ſtock, pretended to be ſold for 1,213,575 l. between the 4th of February, 1719, and the 12th of April following, was contrived with a deſign to conceal the names of perſons, for whoſe benefit ſtock was taken in by the Company.

9. That every perſon, for whom ſtock was taken in or held, ſuch ſtock being part of the 574,500 l. pretended to be ſold by the South-Sea Company, from the 4th of February, 1719, to the 12th of April, without money paid, or ſufficient ſecurity given for the acceptance of, and payment for ſuch ſtock, be obliged to pay to the Company all ſuch ſums of money, as have been received by way of difference, or otherwiſe, for ſuch ſtock.

10. That the addition of 250,000 l. to the firſt money-ſubſcription, after it had been declared to have been opened for two millions, and the addition of 500,000 l. to the ſecond money-ſubſcription, after it had been declared to be opened for one million, were fraudulently contrived to give corrupt advantages to particular perſons, and were injurious to public credit.

Upon theſe reſolutions, a bill was brought in, for the relief of the unhappy Sufferers in the South-Sea Company. 1720-21.

Mr. Stanhope, one of the Secretaries of the Treaſury, having been charged, in the Report of the Secret Committee, for having large quantities of ſtock and ſubſcriptions held for him, preſſed the Houſe, that a ſhort day might be appointed to examine the matter, that he might have an opportunity to clear himſelf. A day being appointed, ſeveral of the Directors and others were ordered to attend, who were examined concerning the charge againſt him, conſiſting of two articles: 1. That 10,000 l. South-Sea ſtock was taken in for his benefit by Mr. Knight, without any valuable conſideration; and that the difference, ariſing by the advanced price thereof, had been paid him out of the caſh of the South Sea Company. 2. That Turner and Company had bought 50,000 l. ſtock at a low price of the South Sea Company, in the name, and for the benefit of Mr. Stanhope, the difference of the advanced price whereof, amounting to 250,000 l. had been paid him by Sir George Caſwal and Company. To prove theſe articles, the Secret Committee cauſed the examinations of Sir John Blunt, Mr. Holditch, Mr. Sawbridge, Mr. Henry Blunt, and others, to be read, and thoſe Mr. Stanhope's caſe.

ſubſcription, inſtead of one million, was increaſed to 1,250,000 l. which was occaſioned by taking the ſaid ſubſcription in ſeveral books; and at the before-mentioned General Court, held the 8th day of September laſt, the Sub-Governor declared the fourth money-ſubſcription was compleated to 1,250,000 l. And Mr. Knight the Caſhier hath, in an article dated the 30th day of Auguſt laſt, and entered in the caſh-book, fol. 128, given the Company credit for the firſt payment made on the 4th ſubſcription, viz. for 2,500,000 l. which account was paſſed, and allowed by the Committee of Treaſury on the 4th day of October laſt; and yet, in the account of the ſaid fourth money-ſubſcription delivered into this Houſe, it is ſtated at 1,200,000 l. only: That upon the examination of Mr. Knight, and ſeveral of the Directors, in relation to the deficiency of the ſaid third and fourth money-ſubſcriptions, their anſwers were very unſatisfactory: And your Committee cannot but obſerve, That as, by the before-mentioned additions to the firſt two money-ſubſcriptions, ſome perſons made great gains, whilſt the price of the ſaid ſubſcriptions continued high; ſo, when the price of the ſubſcriptions fell, many other perſons were favoured, by having their ſubſcriptions withdrawn, which was the cauſe of the deficiency.

That on the ſecond money-ſubſcription each Director was allowed, for himſelf and friends, 26,000 l. and that the remainder of the million, at firſt reſolved to be taken in, was at the diſpoſal of the Sub and Deputy-Governors; but, for whoſe benefit the additional ſubſcription of 500,000 l. was intended, your Committee have not yet been able to diſcover.

That on the third money-ſubſcription each Director was allowed 54,000 l. for himſelf and friends; and that ſeveral large liſts of the names of perſons were ſent to the Sub-Governor, to be admitted into the ſaid third ſubſcription; viz. by the Earl of Sunderland, firſt Lord Commiſſioner of the Treaſury, a liſt amounting to 167,000 l. by John Aiſlabie, Eſq; late Chancellor of the Exchequer, another of the Lords of the Treaſury, a liſt amounting to 75,300 l. by James Craggs, Eſq; one of his Majeſty's principal Secretaries of State, two liſts, amounting to 695,000 l. and by Charles Stanhope, Eſq; one of the Secretaries of the Treaſury, a liſt amounting to 49,700 l. Which four laſt mentioned liſts amount to 987,000 l.

That, upon examination, it appears, that other liſts have been given in, as well on the third as on the ſecond ſubſcription; but, the ſame being loſt or miſlaid, as your Committee have been informed, they are thereby diſabled, at preſent, from making any report thereon.

They find 25,000 l. of the ſecond ſubſcription hath been given unto John Aiſlabie, Eſq; about eight or ten days after the opening of that ſubſcription, at which time the ſubſcriptions were at an advanced price, of about 40 l. per cent. and ſoon after roſe vaſtly higher.

That it doth not appear to your Committee that any of the perſons, who had the honour to ſerve his Majeſty in the Treaſury, or in any other part of the Adminiſtration, uſed any endeavours to prevent the Directors of the South-Sea Company from taking in ſubſcriptions at the aforeſaid extravagant prices; but on the contrary it doth appear, that ſome of them, by the liſts they gave in as aforeſaid, did not only encourage and promote the ſaid ſubſcriptions, but did greatly enlarge the ſame.

Your Committee obſerving that Sir John Fellows, late Sub-Governor of the South-Sea Company, did at a General Court of the ſaid Company, held the 21ſt of April, 1720, acquaint that Court, that the deſign of the Government's million of Exchequer-bills to be lent to the Company, by virtue of the late Act of Parliament for iſſuing Exchequer-bills to be circulated at or near the Exchequer, was to enable the Company to lend money upon their ſtock; and finding that by order of the Court of Directors of the ſaid Company the ſame had been ſo lent out, your Committee proceeded to enquire into this affair.

And on the examination of Mr. Robert Knight, late Caſhier of the ſaid Company, he declared, that he did not remember that any application was made by the Directors to have thoſe bills iſſued; but that the firſt diſcourſe of this matter was by John Aiſlabie, Eſq; then Chancellor of the Exchequer, a week before the propoſals of the South-Sea Company were offered to this Houſe; that Mr. Aiſlabie ſaid, it would be more acceptable to have thoſe bills circulated at the Exchequer, than to ſend them to the Bank or elſewhere, and that the Company might afford to circulate them for nothing, they being to be lent to the Company to enable them to execute their ſcheme. That the Examinant believed, the intention of lending the ſaid bills upon ſtock had been communicated to Mr. Aiſlabie, and that he (the Examinant) on his attending at the Treaſury to ſollicit the iſſuing of theſe bills, did mention 1720-21. those persons themselves to be examined; but some of them rather weakened than confirmed their former depositions. Sir John Blunt, in particular, owned, as to the first article, that Mr. Knight had shewn him a letter, which he told him was signed by Mr. Stanhope, desiring him to take 10,000 l. stock for him; but that he did not know whether that letter was genuine, nor what was become of it: And, as for the 50,000 l. stock transferred to the Sword-blade Company in Mr. Stanhope's name, Mr. Sawbridge and Mr. Turner owned they had made use of Mr. Stanhope's name without his privity or consent. After the examinations, and the animadversions of the Members of the Secret Committee, Mr. Stanhope said, 'That, for some years past, he had lodged all the money he was master of in Mr. Knight's hands, and whatever stock Mr. Knight had taken in for him, he had paid a valuable consideration for it. And as for the 50,000 l. he could not answer for what had been done without his consent.' When the question was put, whether he was concerned in the manner represented by the two articles, he was cleared, though by three voices only, 180 against 177.

A few days after, Sir George Caswal having been heard in his place, it was resolved by the Commons, 'That it appeared to the House, that Sir George Caswal, one of the Copartners of Turner and Company, and a Member of the House, did, on the 14th of December 1720, after the House had begun to inquire into the conduct of the Directors of the South-Sea Company, order Daniel Watkins, one of the Book-keepers of Turner and Company, to erase, in several places of the books, the name of Stanhope, and to make the same Stangape, which was accordingly done.' After this and some other resolutions concerning him, a bill was ordered to be brought in, to make the estates real and personal of Sir George Caswal, Jacob Sawbridge, and Elias Turner answerable for 250,000 l. to the South-Sea Company, the advanced price of the forementioned 50,000 l. South-Sea stock.

The case of the Earl of Sunderland was also taken into consideration. By the report of the Secret Committee it appeared, that 50,000 l. stock had been taken by Mr. Knight for the Earl's use, without any thing paid, or security given for payment for the same. The House seemed to be intent upon the inquiry: A warm dispute arose, and much was said for and against him: But, upon the question, the vote passed in his favour, by a majority of 233 against 132.

Not-

---

tion that design, and never heard that the Treasury disapproved of it.

That Sir John Blunt declared it would be better to employ those bills in the lending upon stock, than in paying of the redeemables, which would take up more time.

Hereupon your Committee examining Sir John Fellows, he said, that he and others of the Directors treated with Mr. Aislabie and others at the Treasury about the issuing the said Exchequer-bills; but that it was first proposed to Mr. Aislabie, and the Examinant believed, it was at first mentioned by Sir John Blunt, in a Committee of the Directors, and that it was the general opinion of the Directors.

Your Committee examining Sir John Blunt upon this transaction, he declared, that he spoke to Mr. Aislabie to hasten the issuing of the said bills; and that himself, or some other of the Directors, acquainted Mr. Aislabie (as he believes at the Treasury) with the Company's design to lend them upon stock; that it did not at first arise from the Directors, but that it was intimated to them before, or very soon after the Company's proposals were laid before the House, by some of the Treasury, and on recollection, the Examinant said, it was by Mr. Aislabie, to enable the Company to carry on their scheme, and thereby to raise the price of their stock, the borrowers being enabled to buy stock.

That, by the book of loans delivered in to this House, it appears that the sum of 9,039,936 l. 11 s. was lent to several persons on the security of 2,563,117 l. 17 s. 5 d. stock: And that the further sum of 2,219,089 l. was lent on the security of 773,600 l. subscription-receipts; the money so lent, and still remaining due, amounting in the whole to the sum of 11,259,025 l. 11 s.

That by several resolutions of the Court of Directors of the 21st of April, the 20th of May, and the 9th of June last, for three several loans, it appears, that the sum, resolved by them to be lent on stock from the 21st of April to the 21st of May, was limited to 500,000 l. in the whole, and that not more than 5000 l. should be lent to any one person, and such loan to be only at the rate of 250 l. on 100 l. stock; that, from the 20th of May to the 9th of June, the rule of lending was at the rate of 300 l. on 100 l. stock; and that not more than 3000 l. should be lent to any one person; and, from the 9th of June, the rule of lending was at 400 l. on 100 l. stock, and that not more than 4000 l. should be lent to any one person.

That, on examination of the book of loans, it appears, that on the first loan the rules of lending were greatly exceeded, viz. That there was lent in the whole 943,631 l. more than the sum of 500,000 l. to which the said loan was confined. That the excess above 250 l. on 100 l. stock amounts to 316,740 l and the excess above 5000 l. to one person amounts in the whole to 779,231 l. That on the second loan the excess above the rate of 300 l. on 100 l. stock amounts to 30,750 l. and the excess above 3000 l. to one person amounts in the whole to 169,025 l. And that on the third loan the excess above 400 l. on 100 l. stock amounts to 59,413 l. and the excess above the rate of 4000 l. to one person amounts in the whole to 1,447,677 l. For the particulars of all which your Committee refer to the book marked N°. IV. in which the same are distinctly expressed, and the resolutions of the General Court, and Court of Directors, in relation to loans, are transcribed.

That your Committee do not find any resolution, either of a General Court, or a Court of Directors, for lending money on subscription-receipts; but, by the examinations which they have taken, it appears, That Mr. Knight, the late Cashier of the South-Sea Company, and his Under-Cashier and Clerks, by his directions, did lend money on the subscription-receipts, by verbal orders from the Directors of the said Company, and under colour of an order of a General Court, made the 21st of April, 1720, to impower the Court of Directors from time to time, as they shall see for the interest of the Company, to lend any sum or sums of the Company's money, on the Company's present and to be increased capital stock; and to do all such matters and things, as they should judge most for the good of the Company.

But your Committee find, that by the second by-law of the said Company, relating to the keeping the cash of the Company, it was ordained, That the cash of the Corporation should from time to time be kept under three several locks, with different wards, the keys of which to be kept, one by the Cashier, and the other two by such of the Governor, Sub-Governor, Deputy-Governor or Directors, as the said Court should from time to time appoint, except such sum or sums as the Court of Directors should think necessary to let remain in the custody of the Cashier; and no money relating to the trade or affairs of the said Company should be disposed of, without an order of the said Court of Directors;

I

21. Notwithſtanding this, it was generally thought, the Secret Committee would not have accuſed the Prime Miniſter, if the charge had not been at leaſt probable. The Earl did not loſe the confidence of his Maſter, though he reſigned his poſt of firſt Commiſſioner of the Treaſury, which was given to Mr. Walpole, as one of the moſt capable to hold it in ſuch critical circumſtances.

Mr. Aiſlabie did not eſcape ſo well as the Earl of Sunderland. When that part of the Report of the Secret Committee, which related to Mr. Aiſlabie, came to be conſidered, Mr. Hawes's depoſition againſt him, 'That he had cauſed the book of accounts between them to be burnt, and given him a diſcharge for the balance, amounting to 842,000*l.*' appeared ſo ſtrong, that the Commons came to ſeveral reſolutions againſt him, particularly, that he had promoted the deſtructive execution of the South-Sea ſcheme, with a view to his own exorbitant profit, and combined with the Directors in their pernicious practices, to the ruin of the public credit; and therefore he was expelled the Houſe, and ordered to be committed to the Tower.

Mr. Craggs would have been called to an account on the 17th of March, but he happened to die the day before of a lethargic fit, leaving behind him an immenſe eſtate to be divided among his three daughters, who were married to three Members of Parliament, Mr. Treſuſis, Mr. Newſham, and Mr. Elliot. About ſix weeks after his death, the Commons having taken Mr. Craggs's affair into conſideration, it was reſolved, that a large quantity of South-Sea ſtock had been held by the Company for his uſe, and that he was a notorious accomplice with Robert Knight, and ſome of the Directors, in carrying on their ſcandalous practices; and therefore that all the eſtate, he was poſſeſſed of from the 1ſt of December 1719, ſhould be applied towards the relief of the unhappy Sufferers in the South-Sea Company. 1720-21.

Allowances to the South-Sea Directors out of their eſtates.

The Directors having delivered in the inventories of their eſtates, it was debated what allowance ſhould be given them. Mr. Lowndes propoſed an eighth part: But it was objected, ſuch an allowance would be too much for ſome who had the largeſt eſtates, and conſequently had been deepeſt in the guilt; and too little for others who had but ſmall eſtates, and were only paſſively criminal, by not entering their diſſent to the fraudulent management of the reſt. It was at laſt agreed, that the affair of each Director ſhould be particularly conſidered, and more or leſs favour ſhewn, according as they ſhould appear more or leſs guilty. The Commons began with the Sub and Deputy-Governors, and proceeded alphabetically to the reſt. The value of their eſtates, as given in upon oath, amounted rectors; and that the intereſt of all other advantages, ariſing and growing upon the caſh of the ſaid Company, ſhould be brought to the account of the ſaid Company. However, it appears that the ſaid loans on ſubſcriptions were generally known, and never objected againſt, by any of the Directors in a General Court, or in any Court of Directors.

---

That, on the ſaid loans on ſtock, the ſtock was tranſferred to perſons for that purpoſe nominated, in the ſame manner as if the ſame had been abſolutely ſold, without any defeazance on the part of the Company, or of the perſons to whom the ſtock was transferred, for re-tranſferring the ſame, on repayment of the money; nor was any covenant or other ſecurity taken, for repayment from the Borrowers, except the ſtock ſo transferred; nor doth there appear any diſtinction between the ſaid transfers on loans, and the other transfers, which were made of ſtock abſolutely purchaſed, on account of the Company: Upon which your Committee obſerve, that it was in the power of the perſons, to whom the ſaid pawned ſtock was transferred, to diſpoſe thereof at any time, as they thought fit, when the price of ſtock was high, and to replace the ſame when it fell.

And your Committee do find, that, on the 19th day of October laſt, the ſaid Mr. Knight, to whom the ſaid pawned ſtock was transferred, did, purſuant to an order of the Court of Directors, transfer ſtock to the amount of 2,141,867*l.* 17*s.* 5*d.* to Sir Harcourt Maſters, Colonel Hugh Raymond, Edward Gibbon, and John Gore, Truſtees, for that purpoſe nominated by the Court of Directors, in whoſe names the ſame now remains; but the ſum is 421,250*l.* ſhort of the aforeſaid ſum of 2,563,117*l.* 17*s.* 5*d.* which is mentioned in the ſaid book of loans to have been pledged for the ſecurity of the repayment of the aforeſaid ſum of 9,939,936*l.* 11*s.* from which it is evident, that the ſaid ſum of 421,250*l.* of the ſtock mortgaged or pawned on loans, as aforeſaid, has been ſold, or otherwiſe diſpoſed of, by the Truſtees, or Agents of the South-Sea Company; and, till replaced, cannot be re-tranſferred to thoſe, by whom the ſame was pawned or mortgaged: Upon which your Committee obſerve how eaſy it was for the Truſtees of the Company to have ſold the ſaid ſtock, when it was at high prices, and to have replaced the ſame again when it fell; for on examination it appears, that there was no diſtinct and ſeparate account kept of the ſaid mortgaged and pawned ſtock, nor was the ſame any ways diſtinguiſhed from the other ſtock of thoſe perſons, to whom it was at firſt transferred.

That, as to the ſaid ſum of 2,219,087*l.* lent on 773,600*l.* ſubſcription-receipts, it appears by the aforeſaid book of loans, that the general rule of lending was at the rate of 300*l.* on 100*l.* ſubſcription-receipts; but, excluding from the ſaid loans on ſubſcriptions the two great loans, the one to the million-bank, and the other to Turner and Company, the loans to the other Borrowers will at an average come out above 300*l. per cent.* It appears that on the firſt ſubſcription-receipts, at the time of the ſaid lending, there was paid in only from 90*l.* to 120*l. per cent.* and on the ſecond ſubſcription-receipts generally 40*l.* and on ſome few 80*l. per cent.* but how much more there hath been paid in ſince, or whether all the ſaid ſubſcription-receipts on which money was lent be now remaining in the cuſtody of any perſon for the ſecurity of the Company, your Committee cannot at preſent diſcover, the receipts not having been as yet produced to them.

That it appears that Turner and Company were employed by the Directors, to lend out 500,000*l.* on ſubſcription-receipts, and that they accordingly lent 150,000*l.* on ſuch receipts, after the rate of 190*l. per cent.* on the firſt ſubſcription, and 40*l. per cent.* on the ſecond. But, ſuch rates being by the ſaid Directors thought two low, the ſaid Turner and Company were ordered to proceed no farther in diſpoſing of the remaining part of the ſaid 500,000*l.* and were told at the ſame time, that by lending at ſuch low rates on ſubſcriptions, they were ruining the ſtock. And it alſo appears, that Mr. Knight did iſſue a conſiderable ſum to be diſpoſed of by Brokers, for the refuſal of South-Sea ſtock at certain times, at very high prices; and likewiſe, that, on the declenſion of the price of the ſtock, large ſums were iſſued to purchaſe ſtock, on account of the Company, at very high prices; and part of the ſtock then bought appears to have belonged to ſome of the Directors of the ſaid Company. And, although your Committee are not yet prepared to ſet this matter in a full light, they cannot but obſerve, that the ſaid Directors, in all their proceedings in the 1721. ed to about 2,014,000 l. of which 334,000 l. was left to the Proprietors (1).

Mr. Aiſlabie's affair occaſioned debates proportionable to his great riches, and the multitude of his friends. He was allowed all the eſtate he was poſſeſſed of, on the 20th of October 1718. His country-houſe, gardens, and park, with his wife's jewels, and houſhold-goods, were alſo excepted from the forfeiture.

Soon after, an act paſſed for raiſing money upon the eſtates of the Sub and Deputy-Governors, Directors, Caſhier, Deputy-Caſhier, and Accountant of the South-Sea Company, and of Mr. Aiſlabie and Mr. Craggs, towards making good the damages ſuſtained by the Company, and for diſabling ſuch of theſe perſons, as were living, to hold any place, or ſit in Parliament, for the future.

When the motion was made in the Houſe of Commons, for joining Mr. Aiſlabie in the ſame bill with the Directors, his friends repreſented the hardſhip of putting a man of his eminence on the ſame level with them, and the danger of ſuch a precedent: But it was to no purpoſe, for the motion was approved. Mr. Aiſlabie, when the bill was depending in the Houſe of Lords, petitioned to be heard by his Council. He was himſelf heard at their bar, and made two very long and eloquent ſpeeches in his defence, but they met with more applauſe than ſucceſs, for the bill paſſed as ſent up by the Commons.

After theſe proceedings againſt the Mana- 1721.
gers of the South-Sea ſcheme, the Commons, Reſolutions in favour of the South-Sea Sufferers.
with the ſame moderation and wiſdom, applied themſelves to repair the miſchiefs, that ſcheme had produced, and at ſeveral times came to the following reſolutions:

I. That, for the re-eſtabliſhing of public credit, relief be given to the South-Sea Company, with regard to the payment of the 4,156,306 l. and the four years and a half's purchaſe on the annuities and other national debts, the Company giving ſuch conſideration to the Proprietors, as the Houſe ſhall think proper.

II. That, in order to put an end to all diſputes between the Company and the Proprietors of the redeemable funds, and of the ſecond, third and fourth money-ſubſcriptions, who have ſtock allowed them at 400 l. per cent. with the Midſummer dividend, an addition of 33 l. 6 s. 8 d. be given to the Proprietors by the Company.

III. That the ſeven millions, payable to the Public by the Company, be remitted ſo, as, from the 24th of June 1722, two millions of the ſtock be annihilated, and a proportionable part of their annuity or yearly fund, from that time, ceaſe.

IV. That the ſecond ſubſcription of the irredeemables be made equal to the firſt, by an addition of ſtock at 150 l. per cent.

V. That all the ſtock belonging to the Company, which, after the propoſed diſtribution, ſhall execution of their ſcheme, appear to have had chiefly in view the raiſing and ſupporting the imaginary value of the ſtock, at an extravagant and high price, for the benefit of themſelves, and thoſe who were in the ſecret with them.

---

That, as to the aforeſaid loans on ſubſcription-receipts, it appears, there were no defeazances executed by thoſe with whom the receipts were depoſited, for a re-delivery of the ſame, on repayment of the money, nor any ſecurity given by the Borrowers, beſides the receipts by them ſo delivered; nor doth any thing elſe appear to diſtinguiſh the receipts ſo pledged from ſuch receipts as were, or might have been, abſolutely ſold to the Company; for all the ſaid receipts were made out in one name, viz. Joſeph Safford, and by his indorſement the bearer became intituled to the property thereof: Upon which your Committee obſerve, the ſecurity of the Company, as to the money lent on the ſaid ſubſcription-receipts, is more precarious than the loans on ſtock; for by the transfer-book it might appear by whom ſuch ſtock was transferred; but it hath not yet appeared to your Committee that any books have been kept, or entries made, of the names of the perſons to whom ſuch loans have been made on ſubſcription-receipts: And your Committee do farther obſerve, That it was in the power of the perſons, with whom ſuch ſubſcription-receipts were depoſited, to ſell the ſame at high prices, and to replace them again when the price fell. And upon the whole it doth appear to your Committee, that the ſaid loans on ſtock, and on ſubſcriptions, have been managed with the utmoſt negligence, with reſpect to the intereſt of the Company, and were contrived for the raiſing and keeping up the price of ſtock at an extravagant height.

Before your Committee concludes this report, they think it proper to obſerve, That it has appeared to them throughout their examination, that Mr. Knight, Caſhier of the South-Sea Company, was principally concerned in their moſt ſecret tranſactions. And your Committee have been informed by Sir Theodore Janſſen, ſoon after Mr. Knight's withdrawing himſelf, That upon his preſſing Mr. Knight, two or three days before he went away, to make a diſcovery of whatſoever he knew relating to the whole proceedings; Mr. Knight anſwered, that, if he ſhould diſcloſe all he knew, it would open ſuch a ſcene as the world would be ſurprized at.

(1) The debates in the Grand Committee about ſettling the allowances were as follows:

They began with Sir John Fellows, the Sub-Governor, in whoſe behalf Mr. Sloper moved, 'That, ſince it did not appear, that he had been ſo active in the late vile and pernicious practice, as ſome others, he might be allowed 20,000 l. out of his eſtate.' Mr. Hungerford reduced it to 15,000 l. others to 12,000 l. and Mr. Walpole having at laſt propoſed 10,000 l. it was agreed to without any diviſion. Mr. Joye, the Deputy-Governor, appearing to have been deeply concerned in the guilt, it was agreed to allow him only 5,000 l. The ſame ſum was allowed Mr. Aſtell: And the queſtion being put to allow Sir Lambert Blackwell 10,000 l. ſome propoſing only 5,000 l. it was carried for the former by a majority of four voices, one hundred and twelve againſt one hundred and eight. The allowance to Sir John Blunt occaſioned a long debate. Mr. Laurence Carter moved to allow him one ſhilling only; the Lord James Cavendiſh, 1,000 l. Mr. Plummer, 5,000 l. Sir Joſeph Jekyll, 10,000 l. which was ſeconded by General Roſſe, the Lord Moleſworth, Mr. Jeffreys, and Mr. Windſor: But Mr. Sloper, Mr. John Smith, Mr. Horace Walpole, and Mr. Milner, were of opinion, that he ought to be moſt ſeverely puniſhed. Mr. Sloper ſaid, That he was grown to that height of pride and inſolence, that he could not give a civil anſwer to perſons far above him; inſtancing in his behaviour one day at the Treaſury, when, a relation of a great man aſking Sir John, in his (Mr. Sloper's) hearing for a ſubſcription, Sir John, with a great deal of contempt, bid him go to his couſin Walpole, and deſire him to ſell his ſtock in the Bank, and by that means he might be ſupplied.' Mr. Walpole entered fully into Sir John Blunt's life and character, and ſhewed, that he had been a projector of many years ſtanding, and had been the Author of ſeveral fallacious ſchemes, by which unwary people had been drawn in to their utter ruin, particularly shall remain undiſpoſed of, ſhall be divided among the Proprietors.

VI. That ſuch perſons as have borrowed money of the Company upon South-Sea ſtock, or upon ſubſcription-receipts, ſhall, upon payment of 10 l. per. cent, be diſcharged from all future demands.

VII. That all contracts for the ſale or purchaſe of ſubſcriptions or ſtock of the South-Sea Company, or any other, which ſhall be unperformed before the 29th of September next, be entered in books before the 1ſt of November next, or elſe be void.

VIII. That no ſpecial bail be required for any action brought upon any contract, ſince the 1ſt of December 1719, for the ſale or purchaſe of any ſubſcription or ſtock.

IX. That no execution be awarded, or any judgment obtained in any ſuch action, till the end of the Seſſion of Parliament, which ſhall be next after the 29th of September enſuing.

X. That all contracts for the ſale, or purchaſe of any ſubſcription or ſtock, unperformed before the 29th of September next, where the Seller, or the perſon on whoſe behalf ſuch contract was made, was not, at the time of ſuch contract, or within a time to be limited, actually poſſeſſed of or intitled to ſuch ſubſcription or ſtock, ſhall be declared null and void.

With theſe reſolutions, the Commons preſented to the King an addreſs, demonſtrating both the neceſſity and wiſdom of their proceedings, and which deſerves to be inſerted at large:

'We your Majeſty's moſt dutiful and loyal ſubjects, the Commons of Great-Britain in Parliament aſſembled, being ſenſibly affected with the miſery and calamities, that have befallen great numbers of your Majeſty's faithful ſubjects, occaſioned by the heavy loſſes they have ſuſtained, from the fatal execution of the South-Sea ſcheme; and taking into our ſerious conſideration the low ſtate of public and private credit, which it ſeems impoſſible to us ſhould ever revive under the preſent uncertain and unſettled poſture of affairs, have come to ſeveral reſolutions, which we humbly beg leave to lay before your Majeſty.

1721.

When we firſt entered upon the conſideration of this extenſive and perplexed affair, we thought it moſt adviſable to leave every man's property to be determined by due courſe of law, and were of opinion, that no relief or abatement could properly be preſcribed or given, but from the South-Company. But, the diſcontents of the people daily increaſing, and the uncertain and doubtful events, that threatened very great and valuable properties, creating ſuch infinite anxieties and diſſatisfaction, as had a moſt fatal and general influence upon all public and private credit, the interpoſition of Parliament became unavoidable, and we found ourſelves under a neceſſity of reſuming the conſideration of this nice and intricate matter, and to endeavour to remove, as far as poſſible, the chief and greateſt inconveniencies.

The great difficulty in remedying theſe miſchiefs ſeemed to ariſe from the ſeveral contending intereſts engaged in the South-Sea Company, which made it impoſſible to give relief to ſome but at the expence of others: And as all the new Proprietors, as well thoſe concerned in the public funds, as the other Adventurers, were equally impoſed upon by the artifices of the late Directors, and equally drawn in by their own too great credulity and deſire of gain; to have diſcharged any particular ſett had been not only an injuſtice to the reſt, but, by diſſolving the whole ſyſtem, had involved them in utter ruin, which made a diſtribution of loſſes, and ſome abatement to all, abſolutely neceſſary. It was indeed very much to be wiſhed, that ſuch eaſe could have been given to the Proprietors of the public debts, as would have made their property as valuable to them, as they had enjoyed it for many years: But, as they had voluntarily conſented to take ſtock at ſome rate or other, even at particularly in a project for the linnen manufacture. To this Mr. Horace Walpole added, 'That was not the firſt; for there was a Gentleman, who ſate next to him, meaning Mr. Jeſſop, whom Sir John Blunt had drawn into a project for bringing water to London from a great diſtance, which was to out-do the New River water; by which the Subſcribers loſt all their money, though Sir John himſelf got ſome thouſands by it:' This Mr. Jeſſop confirmed. However, the Lord Hinchingbroke moved for allowing Sir John Blunt 10,000 l. but the queſtion being put for allowing him 1,000 l. it was carried in the affirmative by a majority of one hundred thirty-eight againſt ninety-four.

---

The next allowance in debate was for Sir Robert Chaplin, for whom the Lord Moleſworth, Sir John Eyles, and other Members ſpoke; and it was agreed, without dividing, to allow him 10,000 l. The ſame allowance was given to Sir William Chapman, Mr. Cheſter, and Mr. Child. A motion being made to give Mr. De la Porte the like ſum, the Lord Moleſworth was for reducing it to 7,000 l. but upon the queſtion it was carried for 10,000 l. by a majority of one hundred and fifty againſt ſixty-nine. The caſe of Mr. Francis Eyles appeared in ſo favourable a light, that he was allowed 20,000 l. without dividing. Mr. Edmondſon's eſtate amounting to little more than 5,000 l. it was moved to allow him the whole, and leave him out of the bill; but, after ſome debate, it was agreed to allow him only 3,000 l. The queſtion being put to allow Mr. Gibbon 15,000 or 10,000 l. it was carried for the latter without dividing. It appearing, that Sir William Hammond and Mr. Gore had little or no ſhare in the fraudulent contrivances of the leading Directors, Mr. Gore was allowed 20,000 l. and Sir William Hammond 10,000 l. It was propoſed to give Mr. Hawes, late Receiver-General of the Cuſtoms, 1,000 l. But, Sir Nathaniel Gould and ſome other Members having obſerved, that he was very active in the late vile practices, and had occaſioned the ruin of many people, Mr. Docminique moved, and it was agreed to allow him only 31 l. the odd money of his inventory. Several Members ſpoke in favour of Mr. Horſey, particularly the Lord Hinchingbroke and Sir Robert Rich, who moved for allowing him 10,000 l. which was carried without a diviſion. It was then debated, whether to allow Mr. Holditch 500 l. 1,000 l. or 5000 l. The voices were equally divided, eighty-ſix and eighty-ſix; upon which Mr. Clayton, the Chairman, gave the caſting vote for 5,000 l. which met with general approbation. Mr. Horace Walpole and Sir Richard Steele ſpoke in favour of Sir Theodore Janſſen, and were anſwered by General Roſſe and the Maſter of the Rolls. But, after a ſmall debate, Mr. Trenchard moved for allowing him 50,000 l. which was carried by a majority of one hundred and thirty-four voices againſt one hundred and eighteen. Sir Jacob Jacobſon's caſe coming next under conſideration, Mr. Hungerford moved for allowing him 11,000 l. which was all his eſtate, except 481 l.

1721. at the time when they ſaw the ſtock raiſed to the higheſt pitch, the giving ſtock at one and the ſame price to them and all others, that were moſt immediately concerned, make the proviſion as juſt and equitable, as the nature of the thing will admit; it being impracticable, ſo far to reconcile the different intereſts in this general concern, as to make the conditions of thoſe equal, that had engaged themſelves at different rates, and upon unequal terms.

The great and principal miſchiefs aroſe from ſeveral concurring circumſtances; from the hard terms of moſt of the Proprietors, occaſioned by the high prices, at which they had purchaſed ſtock, or the exceſſive rates, at which, as well the Proprietors of Public debts, as the Money-ſubſcribers, had obliged themſelves to take ſtock; from the demand of above ſeven millions, payable to the public, which could only be raiſed out of the properties of thoſe, that were already too great Sufferers, and which rendered the Company incapable of giving them any farther eaſe or relief; from the diſputes and conteſts at law, which were preparing to be carried on, not only between the Company and the Subſcribers of the redeemable funds, but between infinite numbers of private perſons engaged in contracts for the ſale and purchaſe of ſtock and ſubſcriptions; from the impoſſibility of the Money-ſubſcribers making any farther payments; from the great loſs the Company had ſuſtained by the late Directors, having lent out above eleven millions of the Company's money, without any, or without ſufficient ſecurity; and from the very little proſpect of recovering any conſiderable part thereof; without which it was impoſſible for the Company to comply with the demand of the Public, but at the infinite expence and inſupportable loſs of all their Adventurers, which muſt have proved deſtructive to the trade and credit of the Kingdom. 17

Theſe conſiderations induced us to come to the foregoing reſolutions; being, as we conceive, the moſt proper means to enable the Company to give relief to ſuch of their Proprietors, as moſt wanted and deſerved it; to put an end to all diſputes at law; and to fix, ſettle, and aſcertain the ſeveral properties and intereſts of all perſons concerned with the South-Sea Company; to deliver infinite numbers of your Majeſty's good ſubjects from the apprehenſion of vexatious law-ſuits and proſecutions, and from the farther demand of ſuch exceſſive ſums of money, as muſt ſink and depreſs all public and private credit.

And as the greateſt miſchiefs, which we now ſo

---

481 l. and it was agreed to without a negative. Mr. Ingram's caſe being much the ſame, Mr. Pulteney moved for allowing him 12,000 l. near three parts in four of his eſtate; and, being ſeconded by the Lord Hinchinbroke, it was carried without dividing. Sir John Lambert was allowed 5,000 l. without a diviſion, as was Sir Harcourt Maſters; and Mr. Morley 1,800 l. near his whole eſtate. Mr. Page had an allowance of 10,000 l. without dividing. Mr. Heyſham moved for allowing Colonel Raymond 30,000 l. and, being ſeconded by Mr. Tufnel, the Attorney-General, and Mr. Hungerford, no oppoſition was made to that motion. Mr. Sloper moved for allowing Mr. Read 10,000 l. He was ſeconded by Sir John Ward and Mr. Docminicque; and the motion carried without a debate; as was the allowance of 14,000 l. to Mr. Reynolds, Mr. Hungerford moved for allowing Mr. Sawbridge 10,000 l. and was oppoſed by Mr. Lowndes, the Lord Moleſworth, Sir Adolphus Oughton, and Mr. Horace Walpole. But another Member moving for 5,000 l. it was agreed to without a diviſion. Mr. Tillard had in like manner an allowance of 15,000 l. and Mr. Turner 800 l. which was near his whole eſtate. The caſe of Mr. Surman, the Deputy-Caſhier, occaſioned a debate of about an hour and a half. He had not the beſt character amongſt the offenders; but, acting only as a ſervant, and by the command of Mr. Knight, or the Directors, ſeveral Members thought there ſhould be a mitigation in his puniſhment, as there was in his crime. Mr. Grey Nevill ſtrenuouſly inſiſted, that he might be left out of the bill. Another Member moved to allow him 30,000 l. Mr. Hungerford would have reduced it to 20,000 l. Mr. Lechmere to 12,000 l. and two other Members to 10,000, and 5,000 l. All theſe were oppoſed by Sir Joſeph Jekyll, Serjeant Pengelly, and Mr. Horace Walpole, who would not have allowed him above 20 or 30 l. but at laſt the queſtion being put for allowing him 5,000 l. it was agreed to without dividing. Mr. Arthur Moore moved for allowing John Grigsby, Accountant to the South-Sea Company, 10,000 l. But another Member ſaid, 'That, ſince that upſtart was once ſo prodigally vain, as to bid his coachman feed his horſes with gold, no doubt but he could feed on it himſelf: And therefore he moved he might be allowed as much gold, as he could eat; and that the reſt of the eſtate might go towards the relief of the Sufferers.' However a motion being made for allowing him 2,000 l. it was carried without dividing.

The particulars of the eſtates and allowances were as follows:

	Inventories. l.	s.	d. q.	Allowances. l.	s.	d.
Sir John Fellows, Sub-Governor	243,096	00	06	10,000	00	0
Mr. Charles Joye, Deputy-Governor	40,105	02	00	5,000	00	0
Mr. Aſtell	27,750	19	08¾	5,000	00	0
Sir John Blunt	183,349	10	08¾	1,000	00	0
Sir Lambert Blackwell	83,529	17	11	10,000	00	0
Sir Robert Chaplin	45,875	14	05	10,000	00	0
Sir William Chapman	39,161	06	08½	10,000	00	0
Mr. Cheſter	140,372	15	06	10,000	00	0
Mr. Child	52,437	19	01	10,000	00	0
Mr. Delaport	17,151	04	06	10,000	00	0
Mr. Eyles	34,329	16	07	20,000	00	0
Mr. Edmondſon	5,365	00	00	3,000	00	0
Mr. Gibbon	106,543	05	06	10,000	00	0
Mr. Gore	38,936	15	05	20,000	00	0
Mr. Hawes	40,031	00	02½	31	00	2
Sir William Hammond	22,707	04	02	10,000	00	0
Mr. Horſey	19,962	05	03	10,000	00	0
M. Holditch	39,527	10	04	5,000	00	0
Sir Theodore Janſſen	243,244	03	11	50,000	00	0
Sir Jacob Jacobſon	11,481	04	00	11,000	00	0
Mr. Ingram	16,795	00	00	12,000	00	0
Sir John Lambert	72,508	01	05	5,000	00	0
Sir Harcourt Maſters	11,814	12	03½	5,000	00	0
Mr. Morley	1,869	10	03	1,800	00	0
Mr. Page	34,817	12	03	10,000	00	0
Mr. Raymond	64,373	06	03	30,000	00	0
Mr. Read	117,297	16	00	10,000	00	0
Mr. Reynolds	18,368	13	02	14,000	00	0
Mr. Sawbridge	77,254	01	08	5,000	00	0
Mr. Tillard	19,175	14	04	15,000	00	0
Mr. Turner	881	17	06	800	00	0
Mr. Surman, Deputy-Caſhier	121,321	10	00	5,000	00	0
Mr. Grigsby	31,687	06	00	2,000	00	0

Some alterations were afterwards made in theſe allowances. Mr. Aſtell had 10,000 l. inſtead of 5,000 l. Sir John Blunt 5,000 l. inſtead of 1,000 l. Sir Lambert Blackwell 15,000 l. inſtead of 10,000 l. and Mr. Hawes 5,000 l. inſtead of 31 l. A motion was made, to reduce Sir Theodore Janſſen's allowance to 30,000 l. but it was rejected.

1721. ſo juſtly complain of, have ariſen from the unwarrantable methods uſed by the late Directors of the South-Sea Company, in ſelling and diſpoſing of ſuch part of their increaſed capital ſtock, as belonged to the Company; to remove ſuch a foundation of ſtock-jobbing, and to prevent the like fatal conſequences for the future, we thought it neceſſary to take care, that all the increaſed capital ſtock belonging to the Company, which, after the propoſed diſtribution is made, ſhall remain undiſpoſed of, be divided among all the Proprietors of the Company, in proportion to their ſeveral and reſpective intereſts.

Theſe reſolutions, if paſſed into a law, and duly put in execution, we humbly hope will tend very much to the re-eſtabliſhing of public credit, to the quieting of the minds of your Majeſty's ſubjects, and contribute to the eaſe and relief of great numbers, though not ſufficient to give ſatisfaction to, or repair the loſſes of all that are unhappily involved in the preſent calamity.

But, as the antient uſage and eſtabliſhed rules of Parliament make it impracticable for us to prepare bills for the Royal aſſent, during the preſent Seſſion of Parliament, for ſome of the purpoſes contained in our reſolutions, we have humbly preſumed to lay the ſame before your Majeſty for your Royal conſideration; not doubting but that your Majeſty will, out of your great wiſdom and accuſtomed grace and goodneſs to your people, as ſoon as the public and private bills, now depending in Parliament, ſhall be diſpatched, give us an early opportunity of perfecting this great and neceſſary work.'

The King returned for anſwer, 'That he had ſuch an intire confidence in the Parliament's duty and affection to him, and their zeal for the public ſervice, that he ſhould very readily comply with what they deſired, and would ſoon give them opportunity of doing what they propoſed for ſettling and eſtabliſhing the credit of the Kingdom.'

Prorogation of two days only. The next day being the 29th of July, the King came to the Houſe of Peers, and, paſſing the bills that were ready, the Lord Chancellor prorogued the Parliament for two days only to the laſt of July, when the King came again to the Houſe of Lords, and made the following ſpeech:

The Parliament meets again.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

"THE occaſion of my calling you together
"again, ſo ſuddenly, is to give you an op"portunity of reſuming the conſideration of the
"ſtate of public credit.

Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons,

"The progreſs, that you made in this affair
"during the laſt Seſſion, laid ſuch a foundation
"of this neceſſary work, that the world is fully
"appriſed of what is reaſonably to be hoped for
"at this preſent conjuncture.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

"I muſt recommend to you all poſſible diſ-
"patch, and am perſuaded, that at this ſeaſon
"of the year your deliberation will be confined 1721.
"to what is abſolutely neceſſary upon this ex-
"traordinary occaſion."

An act in favour of the South-Sea Sufferers. Purſuant to this ſhort ſpeech, the Commons came again to their former reſolution, and ordered a bill to be brought in under the title of, 'a bill for making proviſions to reſtore public credit, which ſuffered by the frauds and miſmanagements of the late South-Sea Directors and others.'

Remarks on the act. This bill was formed upon the forementioned reſolutions, and it may here be obſerved, that the whole capital ſtock, at the end of the year 1720, amounted to above 37,800,000 l. and the ſtock, allotted to all the Proprietors in their ſeveral ſhapes, did not amount to 24,500,000 l. The remaining capital ſtock, being about 13,300,000 l. belonged to the Company in their corporate capacity, and was the profit ariſing from the execution of the South-Sea ſcheme, and out of which the ſeven millions was to be paid to the Public.

When this ſcheme was blown up, and the calamities and ruin attending numberleſs families appeared, the Parliament, in favour of the unhappy Sufferers, by the preſent act directed ſeveral additions to be made to the ſtock of the Proprietors out of the ſtock poſſeſſed by the Company, in their own right, and made a particular diſtribution of ſtock, which amounted to above 2,200,000 l. and upon remitting five millions of the ſeven, that was to be paid to the Public, annihilated two millions of their capital, which was inſiſting upon the payment of two millions: Then they enacted, that, after theſe diſtributions, the remaining capital ſtock ſhould be divided among all the Proprietors which came to 33 l. 6 s. 8 d. per cent. and this took from the Company above 8,900,000 l.

There was then due, and owing to the Company, above eleven millions for money lent by them on ſtock unredeemed, and of this the Parliament diſcharged all the Debtors to the Company upon paying 10 l. per cent. (which ſome did comply with, and others refuſed) and the loſs to the Company was upon this article above 6,900,000 l.

This act gave ſome relief to the Sufferers, and the cries and lamentations of undone multitudes were leſs heard, but the Proprietors of the ſtock loudly complained of the two millions taken from them: Upon which (as will hereafter be related) the Parliament, in 1723, revived the two millions that had been annihilated, and directed it to be diſtributed among the Proprietors, which made an addition of 6 l. 5 s. to every man's capital.

Petitions and Pamphlets againſt the South-Sea Directors and others. Whilſt the affair of the South-Sea was depending in Parliament, petitions from Counties, Cities, and Burroughs were ſent up, crying for juſtice, and pamphlets were daily publiſhed, exaſperating the minds of the people againſt the South-Sea Directors and their Abettors. But the loudeſt cries for juſtice were contained in letters directed to the Author of the London Journal, and ſuppoſed to have been moſtly penned by Mr. Gordon, under the borrowed name of Cato (1.)

The

(1) A Committee was appointed to inquire into the Authors, Printers, and Publiſhers of ſeditious libels.

1721. General Court of the South-Sea, Sept. 1.

The affairs of the South-Sea being thus ſettled, the Company were ſoon in condition to ſatisfy their engagements with the Public. On the 1ſt of September a General Court was held, which Sir John Eyles, the Sub-Governor, opened with a ſpeech, ſetting forth the regulations of the Parliament, without which the Directors would have been involved in difficulties inſuperable, and confuſions without end. He enlarged upon his Majeſty's care of their intereſts in the late treaties with Spain, and upon the advantages that might be gained by the Aſſiento contract, to which end the Directors were fitting out the Royal George, whoſe cargo amounting to 280,000 l. was provided. He acquainted them with the intention of carrying on a trade hitherto not meddled with by the Company, the Greenland trade, ſo beneficial to Holland and Hamburgh. He then told them, that the forfeited eſtates of the late Directors, and the 10 l. per cent. on the borrowed ſtock, with ſome other particulars, were abundantly ſufficient for diſcharging the debts of the Company, and maintaining the credit of their bonds: That therefore the Directors had diſcharged part of the bonds due at Chriſtmas, and hoped to give a ſpeedy determination to the reſt, that ſo their credit might be eſtabliſhed upon a ſolid foot: That the Court of Directors had alſo reſolved to divide (if thought fit) 3 l. 6 s. 8 d. in ſtock upon the preſent capital. That, as all the remaining ſtock was, by act of Parliament, to be divided equally among the Proprietors, the Directors had, in great meaſure, executed that appointment, amounting, upon a calculation, to 33 l. 6 s. 8 d. upon every 100 l. capital. After this, he mentioned the Company's being empowered, by a late act, to ingraft part of their ſtock into the capitals of the Bank and Eaſt-India; but, as the act for reſtoring public credit had adjuſted the concerns of the Company upon a new foot, he only barely mentioned the ingraftment.

This ſpeech met with applauſe, not only in the Court, but from the Public; and the matters contained in it were agreed to, except the affair of the ingraftment, which was let reſt. At this Court it was unanimouſly reſolved, that the Directors ſhould take the moſt effectual meaſures to oblige the Bank to ſtand to their contract, for taking ſtock at 400 l. per cent. in lieu of the 3,775,000 l. the Company was to have paid them; and the contract was ordered to be regiſtered. 1721

During theſe proceedings concerning the affairs of the South-Sea Company, the following tranſactions paſſed in the Parliament.

Hell-Fire Club. There was formed (at leaſt, it was pretended ſo) a ſcandalous Society at London, with the ſhocking name of the Hell-Fire-Club. The Members whereof were guilty of the like extravagancies with the Mohocks, formerly mentioned. Several perſons of Quality, particularly the Duke of Wharton, were marked out as belonging to this Club. The King, being informed of their wicked proceedings, publiſhed a proclamation (April 29) againſt blaſphemous and ſcandalous Clubs, declaring, he was determined to ſhew all marks of diſpleaſure to any, who even lay under the ſuſpicion of ſuch deſtructive practices. He gave orders alſo to the Officers of his Houſhold, to make ſtrict inquiry, whether any of his ſervants were guilty of ſuch horrid impieties. The ſame day this order was given, the Earl of Nottingham, who had lately anſwered Mr. Whiſton's tenets about the Trinity (1), took this occaſion to complain, in the Houſe of Lords, of the growth of atheiſm, profaneneſs, and immorality. Upon this, Dr. Verney, Lord Willoughby of Brooke, Dean of Windſor, brought in a bill for ſuppreſſing of blaſphemy and profaneneſs. It contained ſeveral articles, which had little relation to the practices complained of, and was chiefly deſigned to ſecure the belief of the thirty-nine articles of the Church of England, and reſtrain the liberty granted by the laws of the former Seſſion to the Non-conformiſts. The ſubſtance of it was: A bill againſt blaſphemy and profaneneſs.

I. If any one ſpoke or writ againſt the Being of God, the Divinity of Jeſus Chriſt, or the Holy Ghoſt, or the Doctrine of the Trinity, as ſet forth in the thirty-nine articles, or the Truth of the Chriſtian Religion, or the Divine Inſpiration of the Scriptures, he ſhould, upon conviction,

---

They ſent for Mr. Peele, Publiſher of the London Journal, and for the reputed Author of the letters, but they both kept out of the way. Miſt, the Printer and Publiſher of a Weekly Journal, was, for reflections caſt on the King for his interpoſitions on behalf of the Proteſtants in the Palatinate, ſentenced to ſtand in the Pillory, to pay a fine of fifty pounds, and after three months impriſonment to give ſecurity for his good behaviour ſeven years. His Journal was carried on under the title of Fog's, and two months after (May 27) was cenſured again by the Commons as a traiterous libel, tending to alienate the affections of his Majeſty's ſubjects, and excite Rebellion. However, the Journal continued many years afterwards.

(1) About the latter end of March, a full Convocation of the Univerſity of Oxford unanimouſly reſolved, That the ſolemn thanks of the Univerſity ſhould be returned to the Earl of Nottingham, for his moſt noble defence of the Chriſtian Faith, contained in his anſwer to Mr. Whiſton's letter to him, concerning the eternity of the Son of God, and of the Holy Ghoſt. It was alſo agreed, that Dr. Shippen, the Vice-Chancellor, with their Repreſentatives, Mr. Bromley and Dr. Clarke, ſhould wait upon the Earl with their thanks. The example of the Univerſity was followed by the Clergy, at the viſitations held for the Dioceſe of Oxford, at Witney, Chipping-norton, and Henley. The Archdeacon of Hereford, and forty-five of the Clergy, ſigned an addreſs of thanks to the Earl, wherein they hinted, that he had aſſerted the Convocation to be a part of the Parliament. The ſame was done likewiſe by the Clergy of Cheſter and Shropſhire. About the ſame time Mr. Joſeph Hall, Mace-bearer to the King, and Juſtice of the Peace, was ſentenced to ſtand in the Pillory, to pay 200 l. fine, to lie three months in priſon, and give ſecurity alſo for ſeven years, for his ſober reply to Mr. Higgs's merry argument for the Tritheiſtical Doctrine of the Trinity.

In May, the King publiſhed directions to the Archbiſhops and Biſhops, for the preſervation of unity in the Church, and the purity of the Chriſtian Faith, particularly in the Doctrine of the Trinity. They were required to ſee 'That no Preacher whatſoever, in his ſermon, or lecture, do preſume to deliver any other doctrine, concerning the great and fundamental truths of our moſt holy Religion, and particularly concerning the bleſſed Trinity, than what are contained in the Holy Scriptures, and are agreeable to the three Creeds, and the thirty-nine articles of Religion.' All perſons denying one of the Perſons in the Trinity to be God, &c. were to be incapable of any office, and to ſuffer impriſonment three years.

viction, be impriſoned many months, unleſs he ſhould, within ſuch a time, publickly renounce his error, in a form preſcribed.

II. If any Preacher in a ſeparate Congregation ſhould deny any of the fundamental articles of the Chriſtian Religion, he ſhould be deprived of the benefit of the act of Toleration.

III. The Archbiſhops in their Provinces, and every Biſhop in his Dioceſe, ſhould be authorized to ſummon any perſon in Holy Orders, to appear before, and ſubſcribe the declaration abovementioned, and, upon refuſal, ſuch perſon ſhould be incapable to hold any Eccleſiaſtical benefice.

IV. The Juſtices at their Quarter-Seſſions are authorized, in like manner, to ſummon any Diſſenting Preacher, and, upon his refuſal to ſubſcribe the declaration of Faith, he ſhould be deprived of the benefit of the act of Toleration.

At the ſecond reading of this bill (May 2) all the Lords about London being ſummoned to attend, the Archbiſhop moved to have it committed. Upon which the Lord Onſlow ſaid: 'He was as much againſt Blaſphemy, and for promoting Religion, as it is profeſſed in the Church of England, as any body; but he could not be for any law, that was for Perſecution, of which nature he took this bill to be; and therefore he moved, that it might be thrown out.' He was ſeconded by the Duke of Wharton, who ſaid, 'He was not inſenſible of the common talk and opinion of the town concerning himſelf; and therefore he was glad of this opportunity to juſtify himſelf, by declaring, he was far from being a patron of Blaſphemy, or any enemy to Religion; but, on the other hand, he could not be for this bill, becauſe he conceived it to be repugnant to the Holy Scripture.' Then, taking an old family Bible out of his pocket, he quoted and read ſeveral paſſages of the Epiſtles of St. Peter and St. Paul; concluding, That the bill might be thrown out. He was ſupported by the Duke of Argyle, and the Earls of Sunderland and Ilay, the Lord Townſhend, and Earl Cowper. The Earl of Peterborough ſaid, 'Tho' he was for a parliamentary King, yet he did not deſire to have a parliamentary God, or a parliamentary Religion: And, if the houſe were for ſuch a one, he would go to Rome, and endeavour to be choſen a Cardinal; for he had rather ſit in the Conclave, than with their Lordſhips upon thoſe terms.' Dr. Kennet, Biſhop of Peterborough, ſpoke likewiſe on the ſame ſide, and ſaid, 'That neither himſelf, nor, he hoped, any of that Bench, would be executioners of ſuch a law, which ſeemed to tend to the ſetting up of an Inquiſition.' On the other hand, the Earl of Nottingham, the Lord Bathurſt, the Biſhops of London, Wincheſter, Litchfield and Coventry, and ſome others, ſpoke for the bill; as did likewiſe the Lord Trevor. One of theſe having ſaid, 'That he verily believed, the preſent calamity, occaſioned by the South-Sea project, was a judgment of God on the blaſphemy and profaneneſs the Nation was guilty of:' The Lord Onſlow replied, 'That noble Peer muſt then have been a great ſinner; for he heard, he had loſt conſiderably by the South-Sea.' After ſome other ſpeeches, the bill was put off to a long day, by a majority of of 60 voices againſt 31.

The Supplies were, contrary to cuſtom, granted very late, and not with the uſual readineſs. The King, not to increaſe the ill humour, had not mentioned the Subſidy he was obliged, by the laſt year's treaty, to give Sweden for her ſupport againſt Ruſſia. However, on the 16th of June, he thought proper to ſend the following meſſage to the Houſe of Commons: 1721.

'His Majeſty, having taken the firſt opportunity, upon the death of the late King of Sweden, to renew the antient Alliances between this Kingdom and Sweden, and having ſtipulated by a treaty to pay a Subſidy to that Crown, hath ordered that treaty to be laid before the Houſe of Commons; and hopes from their known zeal and affection for the Proteſtant Religion, and the true intereſt of their Country, that they will enable him to make good the engagements he has entered into upon this occaſion.

His Majeſty being informed, that two ſhips called the Briſtol Merchant and Turky Merchant (now lying under quarentine) did arrive from Cyprus, and other parts of Turky, infected with the plague, and have cotton wool and other goods on board, which are dangerous to ſpread the infection; and conceiving it neceſſary for the preſervation of the health of his ſubjects, that theſe ſhips and their ladings be burnt and deſtroyed, and that a reaſonable ſatisfaction be given to the owners, hath, by advice of his Privy-Council, cauſed the value thereof to be computed by his Majeſty's Officers, and ordered thoſe computations to be laid before the Houſe of Commons, that proviſion may be made for ſatisfying the ſame.'

This meſſage occaſioned a long debate. Mr. Shippen, Sir William Wyndham, Sir Joſeph Jekyll, the Lord Moleſworth, Mr. Butler, and ſome others, deſired to know, 'Whether we were to give 72,000 l. (for that was the Subſidy) to Sweden, beſides the maintaining a great fleet, with ſix thouſand ſeamen in the Baltic, which they thought a ſufficient charge to the Nation, without paying ſo great a Subſidy? Urging, that, before this laſt treaty with Sweden, there had been a rupture between the two Nations, and hoſtilities, and great depredations committed by the Swediſh Privateers on our Merchants; ſo that, before any Subſidy be given to that Crown, accounts ought firſt to be ſtated and ſettled, and it might appear upon the balance, that Sweden is indebted to us.' To this it was anſwered by Mr. Walpole and his brother, Mr. Lechmere, the Lord Barrington, and ſome others, 'That the Subſidy allowed to Sweden by this laſt treaty, and the ſquadron ſent to their aſſiſtance, was no more than had been ſtipulated by former engagements; but that the ſubſidy was not like to be demanded any more, the preliminaries of the peace between the Czar of Muſcovy and the Crown of Sweden being in a manner ſettled. Neither did the King deſire any new tax for it, the land and malt tax being ſufficient to anſwer all this year's expence.' Mr. Walpole added, 'He was extremely glad, he could at the ſame time acquaint the Houſe, that his Majeſty's endeavours to procure a general peace had been ſo ſucceſsful, that an advantageous treaty with Spain was actually agreed on and ſigned.' The Lord Moleſworth obſerved, 'That he would go as far as any man to maintain and ſupport the honour and dignity of the Crown of Great-Britain; but that, on the other hand, he was not for ſquandering away unneceſſarily the ſmall remainder of the wealth of the Nation. That by our late conduct we were become the Allies of 1721. the whole world, and the bubbles of all our Allies; but, when we have occaſion for our Allies, we are obliged to pay them well:' And to that purpoſe he inſtanced in the Dutch troops, that came over to our aſſiſtance in the Rebellion in 1715. He added, 'That, as to our Alliances with Sweden, it was a matter of great intricacy and nicety, becauſe the treaties, which England has in divers times made with Sweden, are partly contradictory.' He then entered into a detail of the treaties of Roſchield and Travendal made in the Reigns of King Charles II. and William III. 'That the engagements lately entered into with the Crown of Sweden were likewiſe, in ſome meaſure, contrary to the treaties ſubſiſting with Denmark; particularly as to the ſecuring to the Duke of Holſtein the Duchy of Sleſwick; and directly oppoſite to the meaſures formerly concerted with the Czar of Muſcovy, in order to engage him to check the fierceneſs and ambition of the late King of Sweden: And therefore, in order to engage the Czar to yield what he had gained, it were but juſt, that the King of Pruſſia ſhould give up Stetin, and the Elector of Hanover, Bremen and Verden. He owned, that the diſtreſſed condition, to which the Swedes had been reduced, was really worthy of compaſſion: But that, on the other hand, it muſt be conſidered, they had been, in great meaſure, the Authors of their own misfortunes by their tame ſubmiſſion to a deſpotic tyrannical Prince, and by ſacrificing their whole ſubſtance to enable him to carry on his unjuſt, raſh, and ambitious deſigns; and that any Nation, who followed their example, deſerved the ſame fate. To this purpoſe he took notice of the hard uſage of the ſubjects of Mecklenburgh from their Prince, which he inſinuated to have been one of the cauſes of the late rupture with the Czar; but that, after all, England ought not to intermeddle with the affairs of the Empire: That the getting naval ſtores for our ſhipping was the main advantage we reaped from our trading in the Baltic: And he owned, that hemp was a very neceſſary commodity, particularly at this juncture; but that, if due encouragement were given to ſome of our Plantations in America, we might be ſupplied from thence at a much cheaper rate than from Sweden and Norway.' Mr. Lechmere diſtinguiſhed himſelf alſo on this occaſion; but the Subſidy was at laſt granted by a majority of 197 againſt 136. A Supply was alſo given to ſatisfy the owners of the ſhips that were to be burnt, on account of their being ſuſpected to be infectious.

A tax on the Civil Liſt revenues.

Notwithſtanding this warm debate about the Swediſh Subſidy, the King ſent, about three weeks after, another meſſage to the Commons, relating to the debts of the Civil Liſt:

'His Majeſty finds it neceſſary to acquaint his loyal Houſe of Commons with the difficulties he labours under, by reaſon of debts contracted in his Civil Government; which, being computed at Lady-Day laſt, do amount to more than 550,000 l.

If the proviſion, made by an act of the laſt Seſſion of Parliament for diſcharging this debt, had not hitherto proved in a very great degree ineffectual, his Majeſty had not been under a neceſſity of applying again to Parliament upon this occaſion. But being reſolved to cauſe a retrenchment to be made of his Civil Liſt expences for the future, and finding, that ſuch a retrenchment cannot well be effected, without diſcharging the preſent arrears, has ordered the accounts thereof to be laid before the Houſe, and hopes he may be impowered to raiſe ready money for that purpoſe on the Civil Liſt revenues, which, to avoid laying any new burden on his people, his Majeſty propoſes ſhall be replaced to the Civil Liſt, and reimburſed by a deduction to be made out of the ſalaries and wages of all officers, and the penſions, and other payments from the Crown.' After the reading of this meſſage, Mr. Shippen ſtood up, and made a long ſpeech, wherein he took notice of 'this new and unuſual method of aſking for money, not from the Throne, and at the beginning of a Seſſion, as it had always been the cuſtom in the former Reigns; but now, by a meſſage, towards the end of the Seſſion, when moſt of the Members were gone home. Look round about the Houſe, Gentlemen, ſaid he, and ſee how few Members are preſent, when a buſineſs of this conſequence is to be debated.' But, beſides the unſeaſonableneſs of the time, he obſerved, 'That this meſſage was no leſs extraordinary as to another circumſtance; for, whereas the ways and means of raiſing Supplies were always left to the Commons, here, not only the ſum, but the way of raiſing it, was pointed out to them, which was making the Houſe a perfect Parliament of Paris. That, if things were brought to that paſs, it might be eaſy for any King, whenever he thought fit, to make himſelf arbitrary and abſolute Maſter of our liberties and properties; concluding, he was ſure, that the Gentleman, who had adviſed the aſking for ſuch a ſum in that manner, would have been of a quite contrary mind two years ago; but that it was uſual for men's judgments to alter as their intereſts lead them.' Mr. Shippen was anſwered by Mr. Walpole, who ſhewed the occaſion and the reaſonableneſs of the King's meſſage, the tenderneſs and regard he expreſſed in it for the eaſe of his ſubjects, and the neceſſity of complying with his deſires. He was ſeconded by Mr. Lowndes, who ſaid, that ſix-pence in the pound on all the Civil Liſt funds would anſwer the purpoſe. But Mr. Pulteney, and Sir Joſeph Jekyll were of opinion, that it would not do, and therefore moved for one ſhilling in the pound; adding, that, if this were too much for the preſent occaſion, the overplus might go towards the diſcharge of the public debts. Mr. Sloper agreed with them, and upon this laſt conſideration moved for one ſhilling and ſix-pence in the pound; and that the tax might extend to all military Officers, whoſe pay was above ten ſhillings a day. But this motion was dropped, and after ſome other debates it was at laſt agreed, that 500,000 l. ſhould be raiſed for the debts of the Civil Liſt, by a deduction of ſix-pence in the pound out of ſalaries, wages, penſions, and other payments from the Crown. For this purpoſe a bill paſſed both Houſes, and received the Royal aſſent. At the ſame time paſſed alſo an act for a general pardon.

The act for reſtoring public credit was paſſed the 10th of Auguſt, when the King came to the Houſe of Peers, and concluded the Seſſion with the following ſpeech:

My Lords and Gentlemen,

"I Am glad, that the buſineſs of this, and "the former Seſſion, is at length brought "to ſuch a period, that I have now an oppor"tunity

21. " tunity of giving you ſome receſs, after the " great pains you have taken in the ſervice of " the Public.

" The common calamity, occaſioned by the " wicked execution of the South-Sea ſcheme, was " become ſo very great before your meeting, " that the providing proper remedies for it was " very difficult. But it is a great comfort to me " to obſerve, that public credit now begins to " recover, which gives me the greateſt hopes, " that it will be intirely reſtored, when all the " proviſions, you have made for that end, ſhall " be duly put in execution.

" I have great compaſſion for the ſufferings of " the innocent, and a juſt indignation againſt " the guilty; and have readily given my aſſent " to ſuch bills, as you have preſented to me, " for puniſhing the Authors of our late misfor- " tunes; and for obtaining the reſtitution and " ſatisfaction due to thoſe, who have been in- " jured by them, in ſuch manner, as you judged " proper. I was at the ſame time willing and " deſirous, by my free and general pardon to " give eaſe and quiet to the reſt of my ſubjects, " many of whom may, in ſuch a general infa- " tuation, have been unwarily drawn in to tranſ- " greſs the laws.

Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons,

" I return you my hearty thanks for the Sup- " plies you have granted for the current ſervice " of this year, and particularly for your inabling " me to diſcharge the debts and arrears on the " Civil Liſt, and to make good the engage- " ments I was under for procuring peace in the " North, which, in all probability, will now " very ſoon be concluded. Theſe inſtances of " your faithful endeavours to ſupport the ho- " nour and dignity of the Crown at home and " abroad are freſh marks of your zeal and affec- " tion to my Perſon and Government.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

" I take this opportunity of acquainting you, " that we have renewed all our treaties of com- " merce with Spain, upon the ſame foot as they " were ſettled before the late war, which muſt " neceſſarily prove an immediate and valuable " advantage to the trade and manufactures of " this Kingdom.

" I earneſtly recommend to you all, in your " ſeveral ſtations, to ſuppreſs profaneneſs and " immorality, and to preſerve the peace and " quiet of the Kingdom.

" You are all ſenſible that the diſcontents oc- " caſioned by the great loſſes, that many of my " ſubjects have ſuſtained, have been induſtriouſly " raiſed and inflamed by malicious and ſeditious " libels: But I make no doubt, but that, by your " prudent conduct in your ſeveral Countries, " all the enemies of my Government, who " flattered themſelves they ſhould be able to " take advantage from our misfortunes, and blow " up the ſufferings of my people into popular 1721. " diſcontent and diſaffection, will be diſappoint- " ed in their wicked deſigns and expecta- " tions."

The zeal of the Parliament deſerved the praiſes beſtowed by the King, for having in great meaſure reſtored the public credit, when under ſuch difficulties, and his thanks, not only for the Supplies for the ſervice of the year, but for the diſcharge of the Civil Liſt debts, and the Subſidy to Sweden. The King was ſenſible of the injurious ſuſpicions raiſed on his account with regard to the South-Sea Company: The Emperor's refuſal to deliver up Mr. Knight, and the favour ſhewn to the Directors and their Abettors, were conſidered as his work, and greatly increaſed the number of the diſaffected. Hence it was that he ſo ſtrongly expreſſed his apprehenſions, that the enemies to his Government would endeavour to blow up the ſufferings of the people into diſcontent, that the Members of Parliament might be the more zealous to diſappoint their deſigns.

After the ſpeech the Parliament was prorogued to the 19th of October.

During thoſe proceedings, ſeveral changes had been made in the Miniſtry. Mr. Walpole (as has been ſaid) was made firſt Commiſſioner of the Treaſury, and Chancellor of the Exchequer (1). The Lords Townſhend and Carteret were appointed Secretaries of State. The Earl of Ilay was made Privy-Seal of Scotland, and the Earl of Bute a Lord of the Bed-Chamber.

Foreign affairs.

Whilſt the Parliament was employed in ſettling affairs at home, the King had continued his Negotiations abroad, and ended them with ſucceſs.

Peace with Spain.

On the 13th of June, N. S. the treaty of peace between Great-Britain and Spain was ſigned at Madrid. It contained only ſix articles, by which all the regulations with regard to commerce, agreed upon by the former treaties, were renewed; and both the contracting parties promiſed to execute it with the utmoſt ſincerity, and to renounce all interpretations, which had been made uſe of to reſtrain and to weaken theſe Conventions. They engaged to reſtore mutually all the effects ſeized and confiſcated on both ſides. His Britannic Majeſty, in particular, was to reſtore all the ſhips of the Spaniſh fleet, which had been taken by that of England, in the action near Sicily, with the guns, ſails, rigging, &c. in the ſame condition, in which they then were, or the value of them, if they were ſold. The deciſion of the other difficulties and pretenſions was referred to the Congreſs of Cambray. It was ſtipulated likewiſe, that the publication of this treaty ſhould be deferred till the general peace, which was negotiating at Cambray, or ſome other agreement ſhould be made. It was, however, to take place immediately after its being ratified, and the letters of which ratification were to be exchanged in ſix weeks, or ſooner, if poſſible. To theſe was added a ſecret

(1) The other Commiſſioners of the Treaſury were Baillie, Turner, Edgecomb, and Pelham. Mr. Horatio Walpole was made Secretary of the Treaſury: And Edward Carteret and Galfredus Walpole, Poſt-Maſters-General. Benjamin Mildmay, Brother to the Lord Fitzwalter, was made a Commiſſioner of the Exciſe, and Charles Stanhope, Treaſurer of the Chamber to the King. Hugh Forteſcue was called up to the Houſe of Lords by the title of Baron Clinton.

1721. cret article, by which King George promiſed not to interfere any longer in the affairs of Italy, and the King of Spain made an abſolute ceſſion of Gibraltar and Port-Mahon.

The ſame day another treaty was ſigned at Madrid, which was little expected: It was a defenſive Alliance between Great-Britain, France, and Spain; by which they were to defend the Dominions of each other, wherever ſituated, as they were fixed by the treaties of Utrecht, Baden, and London. Each of the Allies was to furniſh him, who ſhould have occaſion for aſſiſtance, or be attacked, with 8000 foot, and 4000 horſe, or an equivalent in money and ſhips.

One deſign of this Alliance was the maintenance and obſervation of the treaty, which was to be made at Cambray, in order to terminate the differences between the Emperor and King of Spain.

'Their Britannic, moſt Chriſtian, and Catholic Majeſties (ſaid the fifth article of this treaty) being entirely ſatisfied with the ſentiments, the Duke of Parma has always ſhewn towards them, and being deſirous to give him marks of the ſingular eſteem and affection they have for him, promiſe and engage, by virtue of the preſent treaty, to grant him a particular protection for the preſervation of his territories and rights, and for the ſupport of his dignity; ſo that, if he ſhall be diſturbed, they will join their good offices and endeavours to obtain a juſt ſatisfaction; and, if that be refuſed, they will agree upon meaſures to procure it him by all other methods, which ſhall be in their power.'

The States-General were, on the firſt opportunity, to be invited to enter into this treaty; and it was promiſed to maintain the treaty of defenſive Alliance, made at the Hague, the 4th of January 1717, and that nothing ſhould be done, either directly or indirectly, to the prejudice thereof.

Congreſs of Cambray fruitleſs.

The Congreſs at Cambray, to which all the difficult points were referred, was at laſt opened. The Ambaſſadors of England and France had the title of Mediators, and were to terminate the numberleſs differences between the Courts of Vienna and Madrid; but they could not ſucceed, the demands on both ſides being ſo oppoſite. The Imperial Miniſters talked in ſo high and deciſive a ſtrain, that there was no treating with them: 'All the pretenſions of their Maſter were inconteſtable, and equity itſelf; to oppoſe or conteſt them, was attacking his ſacred Majeſty.' It was thus they expreſſed themſelves, in ſpeaking of the pretenſions of the Duke of Parma, who had inſiſted, That the Emperor and Empire had no right to exerciſe any ſuperiority over the Duchies of Parma and Placentia. The Imperial Miniſters declared, 'They were amazed the Duke of Parma ſhould have the aſſurance to draw up ſuch a memorial, and engage the Mediators to preſent it to them. It violates (ſaid they) the reſpect due to his Imperial Majeſty, by denying, he has any ſovereignty over the Duke. The Mediators ſhould have ſuppreſſed ſuch unreaſonable pretenſions, which they neither could regard, nor had time to diſcuſs. If the Duke had any juſt complaints to propoſe, and would repreſent them with reſpect to the Imperial Court, they would undoubtedly be treated there with equity.'

The Mediators anſwered, that the terms uſed by the Imperial Miniſters were not very becoming between Princes: That the memorial in queſtion could not, without cenſure, have been ſuppreſſed: That the Duke of Parma had reaſon to apply to the Congreſs for juſtice, and that he had not met with ſufficient encouragement, in his repreſentations to the Court of Vienna, to addreſs himſelf thither again. To this it was added, that the Negotiations had been always delayed, by continual obſtructions from the Plenipotentiaries of the Emperor.

With ſuch diſpoſitions, nothing was concluded, and never was Congreſs more fruitleſs. To amuſe and ſurpriſe one another was the chief buſineſs; and, when they broke up, they were farther than ever from agreeing.

After the peace with Spain, King George had the ſatisfaction to ſee the tranquillity of Europe reſtored, by a reconciliation between Sweden and Ruſſia. Though this was not done by his mediation, yet, it is certain, the aſſiſtance he had given Sweden, and the peace he had procured between that Crown and thoſe of Pruſſia, Denmark, and Poland, had determined the Czar to bound his pretenſions, and hearken to an accommodation. As the Czar had no quarrel with France, he accepted the mediation of that Crown, but abſolutely refuſed to hear of the mediation of Great-Britain.

Sweden was forced to yield up to the Czar almoſt all his conqueſts, after the battle of Pultowa; as Livonia, Ingria, Eſtonia, part of Carelia, and of the territory of Wyburg, Riga, Revel, Nerva, &c; and, in return, the Czar reſtored only part of Finland, with two millions of Rix-dollars, promiſing not to concern himſelf with the regulations of their Government.

The Czar included in the treaty the King and Republic of Poland, and conſented alſo to the including of the King of Great-Britain, in ſuch ſort, that the differences between them ſhould be adjuſted in an amicable manner.

Theſe differences daily increaſed; and, if theſe Princes had been neighbours, a war would certainly have enſued. Their enmity was in great meaſure perſonal. The Czar's was founded upon the conduct of King George, who, whilſt only Elector of Hanover, had entered into the views of the Northern States againſt Sweden, and, after reaping the fruit of that Alliance, had declared, on all occaſions, againſt Ruſſia. Hence the Czar always diſtinguiſhed the King of England from the Elector of Hanover, and ſhewed all poſſible regard for the Engliſh, whilſt he endeavoured, by all methods, to annoy their King; and, perhaps he would have ſucceeded, had it not been for the death of Charles XII. That Prince and the Czar, how much ſoever they were offended with each other, were more ſo with King George, and were going to lay aſide or ſuſpend their reſentments, in order to be revenged. About the time of the King's laſt arrival from Hanover, Mr. Baſtugef, the Czar's Reſident at London, for ſome expreſſions in a memorial, was ordered to depart the Kingdom in a fortnight. The Czar, in revenge of this affront, took occaſion to publiſh a declaration (which was delivered to the Engliſh factory at Peterſburg, and printed in Holland) in order to raiſe diſcontents in England. The declaration was as follows:

Peterſburg, Jan. 29, 1720-21.

'It is notorious in what an unjuſt and injurious manner our Reſident was ſent away from the

the Court of England; which, having done us a great and ſenſible wrong, ought naturally to have engaged us to uſe repriſals, according to what is practiſed every where elſe. But as we perceive that all this is done without any regard to the intereſt of England, and only in favour of the Hanoverian intereſt; for which the Miniſters of Great-Britain not only neglect the friendſhip of foreign powers, but do not even ſpare their own Country, which more nearly, and more ſenſibly, concern them; we were unwilling that the Engliſh Nation, which has no ſhare in that piece of injuſtice, ſhould ſuffer for it; and therefore we grant to them all manner of ſecurity and free liberty to trade in all our Dominions.'

Theſe two Princes, without mentioning their other qualities, had great talents for Negotiation; but King George excelled; for, it muſt be owned, no Prince could more wiſely improve any favourable circumſtances to diſconcert his enemy's projects.

Beſides theſe treaties in which King George had ſo great an influence, there was one made with the Moors, and ſigned the 12th of Auguſt. Spain, being then at war with the Moors, loudly complained of the treaty, but without any effect.

This year died Pope Clement XI. His name was John Francis Albani, native of Urbino. He had ſate in the papal chair above twenty years. When he was Cardinal, he was for his abilities courted by all the powers of Europe, and had a great hand in the will of King Charles II. of Spain. He was revengeful to the laſt degree, inflexible in his reſolutions, and rejected all advice. His greateſt policy was to keep Princes at variance. He expreſſed great kindneſs for the Pretender. When he found he was going to die, he ſent for the Pretender, who being come, he told the Cardinals then in his Bed-chamber, that he wanted to ſpeak with him in private; but, one of them repreſenting, that it would redound moſt to his Holineſs's honour to deliver his laſt thoughts to him in their preſence, the Pope complied, and recommended to them the three following points:

1. To let the Pretender reſide conſtantly in the palace which he had aſſigned him.

2. To continue the penſion granted to him, that he may be always enabled to ſupport the Royal dignity, till he recover his Kingdoms.

3. To oblige the Succeſſor in the holy ſee, to aſſiſt the Pretender in all things againſt the attempts of his enemies.

The Cardinals aſſured the Pope they would take care to perform the 1ſt and 3d articles; but that, as to the 2d, they would be inexcuſable, if they ſhould continue to exhauſt the treaſure of the Church, which was by no means appropriated for the preſervation of one Prince alone, but for the defence of the Roman Catholic Religion in general. To this the Pope anſwered, that his Succeſſor might, with a very ſafe conſcience, draw out ſums from the Treaſury for the maintenance of the Pretender, becauſe he had been deprived of his Dominions for the ſake of the Catholic Religion; moreover, the Pretender himſelf made a very moving ſpeech againſt the inhumanity of abandoning one that was ſo helpleſs: But the Cardinals replied, That they would conſider of it, and give their anſwer next day. The Pope, acquieſcing therewith, deſired the Cardinal d'Althan to engage the Emperor to eſpouſe the Pretender's intereſt, and not to forſake him in the preſent juncture; but that Cardinal begged to be excuſed, and ſhewed, that it was impoſſible to be done, not only on account of ſolemn treaty, but alſo by reaſon of the ſignal ſervices which England did to his Imperial Majeſty, in the late war againſt the Spaniards. 1721.

Clement XI. was ſucceeded by Michael Angelo, of the family of Conti, who took the name of Innocent XIII, in memory of Pope Innocent III. the moſt worthy of all the Popes choſen from among the Cardinals of that family (1).

The Princeſs of Wales delivered of a Son, Apr. 15.

On the 15th of April, the Princeſs of Wales was delivered of a Son at Leiceſter-Houſe, and, the next day the City of London having preſented a congratulatory addreſs, the King in his anſwer, ſaid, 'I cannot omit taking this opportunity of aſſuring you, that I am truly concerned at the calamity brought upon you by the wicked management of the South-Sea Company. I have, however, this comfort, that the report of any part of this misfortune cannot with the leaſt juſtice be imputed to me. Nothing will give me more eaſe and ſatisfaction than the ſeeing you delivered from your preſent ſufferings, your trade revived, and public credit re-eſtabliſhed.' This declaration was thought to be neceſſary, by reaſon of the inſinuations raiſed by the diſaffected.

The young Prince was chriſtened the 2d of May: The Godfathers were the King of Pruſſia and the Duke of York, repreſented by the Earl of Grantham and the Lord Lumley. The Godmother was the Queen of Pruſſia, repreſented by the Ducheſs of Dorſet. The young Prince was named William Auguſtus, who, this very year 1746, defeated the Rebels in Scotland.

Chapter of the Garter.

The King held, on the 27th of March, a Chapter of the order of the Garter, to fill up the vacancies occaſioned by the death of the Dukes of Rutland and Buckingham (2). In their room were choſen Charles Fitzroy, Duke of Grafton, and Henry Clinton, Earl of Lincoln.

The Parliament had but one Seſſion left, ſince the ſeven years expired at Lady-Day next. It was

---

(1) The family of Conti is one of the four chief families of Rome; the other three are thoſe of Colonna, Orſino, and Savelli, which laſt is extinct.

(2) John Sheffield, Duke of Buckingham, died February 24, 1720-21. He had himſelf made the following Epitaph, and ordered it to be engraved on his tomb: But it was not orthodox enough:

Pro Rege ſæpè, pro Republicâ ſemper, dubius non improbus vixi. Incertus nec perturbatus morior. Chriſtum veneror. In Deo confido æterno ac omnipotente. ENS ENTIUM MISERERE MEI.

He was made Knight of the Garter by King Charles II, and Lord Chamberlain by his Succeſſor: He was always in the oppoſition againſt King William, and made Privy-Seal by Queen Anne. Notwithſtanding his dying in a ſtate of uncertainty, as he owned in his Epitaph, he had appeared very zealous for the Church. He left a ſon by a natural daughter of King James II, who are ſince both dead, and the family extinct.

This year Sept. 15, died Matthew Prior, for whom a monument was erected in Weſtminſter-Abby.

1721. was propoſed in Council to diſſolve the preſent, and call a new Parliament; but it was repreſented by the majority, that it would be more expedient to hold another Seſſion, as farther meaſures were to be taken towards a perfect reſtoration of the public credit, which another Parliament might not ſo readily come into. It had been inſinuated, that a deſign was formed for the continuance of the Parliament beyond the next Seſſion; and ſo far believed, that ſeveral Members of the Common-Council of London demanded, in form, of the Lord-Mayor, that a Council ſhould be ſummoned, in which it was intended to move for an addreſs to the King, to thank him for his great care of the trade and commerce with Spain, but principally to expreſs their hopes of his calling frequent and new Parliaments. The Lord-Mayor, perceiving their intentions, refuſed to comply with their requeſt on various pretences. Upon this, they publiſhed an account of their proceedings, with the heads of their intended addreſs, under the artful title of An Apology for the Citizens of London, for their not addreſſing his Majeſty under the preſent circumſtances of affairs.

Sept. 25.

Plague in France.

The plague raged this year in the ſouthern parts of France, particularly at Marſeilles. On this occaſion a proclamation was publiſhed, forbidding any perſon to come into England from any part of France, between the bay of Biſcay and Dunkirk, without certificates of health. The ſtreets were ordered to be paved and kept clean; and an act of Parliament paſſed the laſt Seſſion for prevention of infection, by building of Peſt-houſes (to which the infected perſons, or healthy of an infected family, were to be removed) and by ordering trenches or lines to be drawn round any city, town, or place infected. Theſe precautions, appearing to ſome to be unreaſonable, cauſed great debates, as will hereafter be ſeen.

The laſt Seſſion of the firſt Parliament of King George.

The Parliament met on the day appointed, October 19, and the Seſſion was opened with the following ſpeech from the Throne:

My Lords and Gentlemen,

"I Acquainted you, when we parted laſt, with "our having renewed all our treaties of "commerce with Spain; ſince which, peace is "happily reſtored in the North, by the con-"cluſion of the treaty between the Czar and the "King of Sweden, and by that, which I have "made with the Moors, a great number of my "ſubjects are delivered from ſlavery; and all "ſuch of them, as trade to thoſe parts of the "world, are, for the future, ſecured from falling "under that dreadful calamity.

"In this ſituation of affairs, we ſhould be "extremely wanting to ourſelves, if we neglect-"ed to improve the favourable opportunity, "which this general tranquillity gives us of ex-"tending our commerce, upon which the "riches and grandeur of this Nation chiefly "depend. It is very obvious, that nothing "would more conduce to the obtaining ſo pub-"lic a good, than to make the exportation of "our own manufactures, and the importation "of the commodities, uſed in the manufacturing "of them, as practicable and eaſy as may be. "By this means, the balance of trade may be "preſerved in our favour, our navigation in-"creaſed, and greater numbers of our poor "employed.

"I muſt therefore recommend it to you, "Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons, to "conſider how far the duties upon theſe branch-"es may be taken off and replaced, without "any violation of public faith, or laying any "new burthen upon my people. And I pro-"miſe myſelf, that, by a due conſideration of "this matter, the produce of thoſe duties, "compared with the infinite advantages, that "will accrue to the Kingdom by their being "taken off, will be found ſo inconſiderable, as "to leave little room for any difficulties or ob-"jections.

"The ſupplying ourſelves with naval ſtores, "upon terms the moſt eaſy and leaſt pre-"carious, ſeems highly to deſerve the care "and attention of Parliament. Our Plantations "in America naturally abound with moſt of the "proper materials for this neceſſary and eſſen-"tial part of our trade and maritime ſtrength: "And if, by due encouragement, we could "be furniſhed from thence with thoſe naval "ſtores, which we are now obliged to purchaſe "and bring from foreign Countries, it would "not only greatly contribute to the riches, in-"fluence, and power of this Nation, but, by "employing our own Colonies in this uſeful and "advantageous ſervice, divert them from ſet-"ting up and carrying on manufactures, which "directly interfere with thoſe of Great-Bri-"tain.

Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons,

"It will be a great pleaſure to me, if, in "raiſing the Supplies of this year, it may be ſo "ordered, that my people may reap ſome im-"mediate benefit from the preſent circumſtances "of affairs abroad. I have ordered eſtimates to "be prepared for the ſervice of the enſuing year, "and likewiſe an account of the debts of the "Navy to be laid before you. You cannot but "be ſenſible of the ill conſequences, that ariſe "from ſuch a large debt remaining unprovided "for; and that, as long as the Navy and Vic-"tualling bills are at a very high diſcount, they "do not only affect all other public credit, but "greatly increaſe the charge and expence of the "current ſervice. It is therefore very much to "be wiſhed, that you could find a method of "diſcharging this part of the national debts, "which of all others is the moſt heavy and "burdenſome; and by that means have it in "your power to eaſe your Country of ſome part "of the taxes, which, from an abſolute neceſ-"ſity, they have been obliged to pay.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

"The unſpeakable miſery and deſolation, that "has of late raged in ſome parts of Europe, can-"not but be a ſufficient warning to us, to uſe "all poſſible precautions to prevent the conta-"gion from being brought in among us; or, "if theſe Kingdoms ſhould be viſited with ſuch "a fatal calamity, to be in a condition, with "the Bleſſing of God, to ſtop its farther pro-"greſs. And as all other proviſions will be al-"together vain and fruitleſs, if the abominable "practice of running goods be not at once to-"tally ſuppreſſed, I moſt earneſtly recommend "to you, to let no other conſideration ſtand in "competition with a due care of preſerving ſo "many thouſand lives.

"The

" The ſeveral affairs, which I have mentioned " to you, being of the higheſt and moſt im- " mediate concern to the whole Kingdom, I " doubt not but you will enter into the conſi- " deration of them with that temper, unani- " mity, and diſpatch, that the neceſſity and im- " portance of them require."

The King, in this ſpeech, propoſes the affairs to be conſidered: Shews the beſt manner of extending commerce, and ſupplying naval ſtores: Expreſſes his concern for the debts of the Navy, and hopes they will be taken care of in the Supplies for the preſent year: Concludes with recommending all poſſible means to prevent the plague, or ſtop the progreſs of its contagion, particularly by providing againſt the practice of ſmuggling.

The addreſſes of thanks were ſuitable to the ſpeech; the King was congratulated upon his ſucceſs for reſtoring the tranquillity of Europe, and ſecuring the trade of the Nation by treaties: Aſſurances were given to proceed to the conſideration of the affairs recommended by him, with temper, unanimity, and diſpatch. Notwithſtanding theſe aſſurances of unanimity, the debates ran very high this Seſſion, and nothing paſſed without great oppoſition.

One of the firſt debates which happened in the Houſe of Lords was about the famous Mr. Law. He came to England, on the 20th of October, in the fleet under Sir John Norris from the Baltic. Mr. Law after the downfall of the Miſſiſſipi ſtock had been forced to leave France, to avoid the reſentment of the inraged people, who had more than once attempted his life. Having ſpent ſome time at Venice, and paid a viſit to the Pretender at Rome, people were not a little ſurpriſed, ſome time after, to hear, that he was gone to Hanover, from whence he deſigned ſhortly to come into England. He was brought up to London by a Lord, with whom he had negotiated for great parcels of South-Sea ſtock; was privately admitted at Court; and having taken a houſe in Conduit-Street, near Hanover-Square, he was, for ſome days, viſited by great numbers of perſons of quality and diſtinction. This gave ſo much umbrage, that, on the 26th of October, Earl Coningsby repreſented to the Houſe of Lords, how dangerous it might be, on ſeveral accounts, to entertain and countenance ſuch a man as Mr. Law; and a day being, at his motion, appointed to conſider of that matter, the Earl ſaid, 'That he, the Earl, could not but entertain ſome jealouſy of a perſon, who had done ſo much miſchief in a neighbouring Kingdom, and who being ſo immenſely rich, as he was reported to be, might do a great deal more hurt here, by tampering with any, who were grown deſperate, by being involved in the calamity occaſioned by the fatal imitation of his pernicious projects. That this perſon was the more dangerous, in that he had renounced, not only his natural affection to his Country, and his allegiance to his lawful Sovereign, by being naturalized in France, and openly countenancing the Pretender's friends, but, which was worſt of all, he had alſo renounced his God, by turning Roman Catholic: Concluding, that they ought to inquire, Whether Sir John Norris had orders to bring him over?' The Lord Carteret anſwered, 'That Mr. Law had, many years ago, the misfortune to kill a Gentleman in a duel; but that, having, at laſt, received the benefit of the King's clemency, and the appeal lodged by the relations of the deceaſed being taken off, he was come over to plead his Majeſty's pardon. That there was no law to keep any Engliſhman out of his Country; and as Mr. Law was a ſubject of Great-Britain, it was not even in the King's power to hinder him from coming over, if he thought fit.' To this the Lord Trevor replied, 'That Mr. Law was indeed a ſubject of Great-Britain, and, therefore, as ſuch, had an undoubted right to come hither; but the circumſtances of a perſon of his character being brought over on board an Engliſh Admiral, and at this juncture of time, might deſerve the conſideration of that Houſe.' Earl Cowper ſpoke much to the ſame effect: But, however, the affair was dropped, and Mr. Law, attended by the Duke of Argyle and the Earl of Ilay, pleaded his pardon at the King's-Bench according to form. 1721.

Debates about the Navy debt.

The Navy debt, which was increaſed to 1,700,000 l. and of which the conſideration had been recommended from the Throne, occaſioned great debates in both Houſes. Mr. Freeman, in the Houſe of Commons, reflected with ſome warmth upon the perſons concerned in that part of the Adminiſtration, ſaying, 'It was matter of wonder, how ſo great a debt could be incurred, when the Parliament had provided what had been deſired upon that head.' Mr. Shippen hinted, 'That ſuch extraordinary expences could not be for the immediate ſervice of Great-Britain, but, in all probability, for the preſervation of ſome foreign acquiſitions.' Sir Joſeph Jekyll ſaid, 'That he was not againſt providing for any juſt public debt; but that, in his opinion, they could not anſwer it, either to themſelves, or thoſe they had the honour to repreſent, if they gave away the Nation's money blindfold; and therefore he deſired, that the Houſe might be informed, How ſo great a debt had been contracted?' To this Mr. Walpole replied, 'Nothing in the world was more reaſonable; and therefore he backed the motion, for having a particular account of that debt laid before the Houſe; but, in the mean time, he might aſſure them, that near 1,100,000 l. of it was contracted in the laſt Reign; and, as the perſons now in the Adminiſtration were not anſwerable for that part, neither did they deſire, that above one million of it ſhould be this year provided for.' This was agreed to without dividing.

The ſame affair was more warmly debated in the Houſe of Lords: When a ſurprize was expreſſed, how the Navy debt came to be ſo large, it was anſwered (as in the Houſe of Commons) that near two thirds of the debt had been contracted in the laſt Reign, of which the proofs were ready. Upon this the Earl of Rocheſter ſaid, 'That, ſince the debt was incurred, it was but juſtice, that they, who truſted the Government, ſhould be paid; but, on the other hand, it became the wiſdom of that Houſe to endeavour to prevent the like for the future, and to reſtore the Navy on the antient foot, that is, not to exceed the expences provided for by Parliament.' And moved for an addreſs to that purpoſe. This was oppoſed by the Earl of Ilay, who urged, that, the public good, and the ſafety of the Nation, being the grand object and rule of Government, ſome latitude muſt of neceſſity be given, and allowance made, to thoſe who are in the Adminiſtration, for extraordina-

1721. ry expences, upon unforeſeen exigencies. And therefore, if the Miniſters, as they had promiſed it, gave the Houſe a ſatisfactory account, how the debt in queſtion came to be contracted, there was, in his opinion, no occaſion for ſuch an addreſs.' The Lord Chancellor Parker and others ſpeaking on the ſame ſide, the motion for an addreſs was rejected by 64 voices (among which was the Lord Harcourt's, who had been lately made a Viſcount) againſt 22.

In ſeveral other debates on this affair, it was urged, 'That the Navy debt was increaſed by employing more ſeamen than were provided for by Parliament, particularly by ſending large fleets to the Baltic and Mediteranean, and keeping the ſailors in pay during the winter: That theſe extraordinary expences were not neceſſary for the ſervice of Great-Britain, and therefore it was proper to have all the papers ralating to the Northern tranſactions, particularly the Lord Carteret's private inſtructions, laid before the Houſe, in order to have full ſatisfaction concerning the grounds of theſe expeditions, and to ſee whether the act of ſettlement had been no ways infringed by them, a point of the utmoſt conſequence to the preſent Eſtabliſhment. To this it was anſwered, That the employing more ſeamen for ſeveral years, than were provided for by Parliament, was occaſioned by ſervices which either were purſuant to the previous advice, or had the ſubſequent approbation of one or both Houſes, and were alſo neceſſary for the ſafety of the Kingdom, and tranquillity of Europe: That, the nature of theſe ſervices detaining the ſquadrons till the months of November, or December, the paying off the ſeamen was inconſiſtent with having the ſhips ready to ſail early in the ſpring, and nothing would be ſaved by it. By a great majority it was voted, that the Lord Carteret's private inſtructions ſhould not be addreſſed, and that the ſending a ſquadron to the Baltic did no way break into the act of ſettlement.

About the affairs of Spain and the North.

The affairs of Spain and the North were ſo equally concerned in the increaſe of the naval debt, that the inquiry into the one naturally led to the inquiry into the other. The debate was opened by the Duke of Wharton, who animadverted upon the conduct of the Miniſters, both as to the war and peace with Spain, and moved that the treaty with that Crown might be laid before the Houſe. The Earl of Sunderland ſaid, 'He did not doubt but his Majeſty would be always ready to comply with the deſires of that Houſe, and even in this particular, as well as in others; but that, for his part, he would be ſo free as to declare his judgment againſt adviſing his Majeſty to communicate the treaty in queſtion at this juncture, becauſe, to his knowledge, there was in it a ſecret article, which the King of Spain had deſired might not be made public, till after the treaty of Cambray was over; and, his Majeſty having granted that requeſt, he therefore hoped that Houſe would not deſire his Majeſty to break his promiſe.' Upon this the Duke of Wharton's motion was rejected by a majority of 59 voices againſt 22. In another debate the Earl of Strafford ſuggeſted, 'That as the war with Spain was undertaken without neceſſity, or a juſt provocation, ſo the peace was concluded without any benefit or advantage. That, contrary to the law of Nations, the Spaniſh fleet was fallen upon without any declaration of war, and even while a Britiſh Miniſter and a Secretary of State were amicably treating at Madrid; ſo that the Spaniards might think themſelves ſecure from any hoſtilities. And, as the manner of beginning the war did not appear juſtifiable, ſo neither could the war itſelf be eaſily reconciled with ſound politics, ſince it was an interruption to one of the moſt valuable branches of our trade, and at a time, when the Nation groaned under the preſſure of heavy debts, occaſioned by a former long expenſive war: Concluding with a motion for an addreſs to his Majeſty, that he would be pleaſed to cauſe the inſtructions, that were given to Sir George Byng (now Lord Torrington) to be laid before the Houſe.' But as the motion for the treaty, ſo this for the inſtructions of Sir George Byng, was upon the queſtion rejected by a majority of 67 againſt 24. A proteſt was entered, repreſenting, that a motion for Admirals inſtructions had never been denied; that, without a ſight of the Lord Torrington's inſtructions, the war with Spain, in which the action in the Mediterranean involved us, did not appear juſtifiable, and was plainly prejudicial to the Nation, as it interrupted our commerce with Spain, and occaſioned a ſtrict union between the French and Spaniſh Crowns, which it was the intereſt of Great-Britain to have kept always divided. Nor did it appear that Great-Britain reaped any fruits from that war.

After this it was moved, that the Houſe would inquire what were become of the ſhips taken from the Spaniards, and how they were diſpoſed of, and an addreſs for that purpoſe was voted.

The debates on the Navy debt being put off for three weeks, a proteſt (Feb. 19) was entered againſt it, in which the ſeveral particulars that were deſigned to be proceeded upon were ſpecified, but they were afterwards expunged by an order of the Houſe.

The bill to prevent infection from the plague cauſed likewiſe long and warm debates in the Houſe of Lords. Earl Cowper moved, 'That a clauſe might be added to the bill for repealing ſo much of the late quarentine act, as impowers the Government to remove to a Lazaret, or Peſt-Houſe, any perſons whatſoever, infected with the plague, or healthy perſons out of an infected family from their habitations; and alſo ſo much of the act, as gives power for the drawing lines or trenches round any City, Town, or place infected. He repreſented, that theſe powers were altogether unknown to our Conſtitution, inconſiſtent with the lenity of our free Government, ſuch as could never be wiſely or uſefully put in practice; and the more odious, becauſe they ſeemed to be copied from the arbitrary Government of France, and could not be executed but by military force.' The Earl alſo oppoſed the forcing perſons to accept of Nurſes and Phyſicians appointed by the Government. Though the repeal of the obnoxious clauſes in the quarentine act, met with much oppoſition, and a petition from the City of London, for that purpoſe, had been rejected by the Lords: Yet an act paſſed at laſt for repealing the clauſes for removing perſons to Peſt-Houſes, and drawing lines round any City or Town that was infected.

The mutiny and deſertion bill occaſioned the uſual diſputes about the army. The Lord Tre-vor opened the debate with a long ſpeech, wherein he excepted againſt the clauſes for puniſhing ſoldiers with death for deſertion, and for exempting them from being arreſted for debt. He urged, 'That the exerciſe of martial law in time of peace was unknown, and repugnant to our Conſtitution: That ſuch a law was indeed neceſſary during the late Rebellion; but, there being at preſent no ſuch reaſon, and all being perfectly quiet and eaſy under his Majeſty's mild Government, the puniſhment of offences committed by the ſoldiery ought to be left to the Civil Magiſtrate: And that, on the other hand, it was unreaſonable to grant ſoldiers a protection from their lawful creditors, ſince a great many poor people, who might be drawn in to truſt them, might be ruined.' After a warm debate, the bill paſſed without any alteration or reduction of the forces.

There was at this time great clamour againſt the French building and buying ſhips in England. Some were built for them at Briſtol, and more at London. When this matter was conſidered in the Houſe of Lords, it was ſuggeſted, 'That the practice of building ſhips for foreigners might be attended with very ill and dangerous conſequences; for, as ſuch foreigners, though at preſent in amity with us, may yet, one time or other, become our enemies, they will, in ſuch a caſe, make uſe of theſe very ſhips to fight againſt us: Beſides this general conſideration, the preſent great ſcarcity of timber in England made ſuch a practice ſo much the more unjuſtifiable, eſpecially if it was conſidered what a great number of ſhips had lately been built for the French, ſome of which were ſixty or ſeventy gun-ſhips.' To this it was anſwered, 'That they knew of no law in being to hinder any ſhip-carpenter from working for any one, that would employ him. That the French, though now in amity, may indeed be one day our enemies; but yet, if they built not here ſuch ſhips as they have occaſion for, they might get them built in Holland or at Hamburgh; and they were of opinion, that it was better for us to get their money than our neighbours: That indeed, if we could hinder the French from building ſhips at all, it would be prudent to do it; but, ſince they can have them in other places, our prohibiting them to buy them here would rather be detrimental than advantageous to us.' After ſome other ſpeeches, it was agreed to conſult the Judges. Upon which, Chief-Juſtice Pratt, in the name of all the Judges preſent (except Baron Mountague, who deſired further time to conſider of it, before he gave his opinion) declared, 'That they knew of no law, whereby the King was impowered to hinder any of his ſubjects from building ſhips for any one, that would employ them, whether Natives or Foreigners.' Earl Cowper ſaid, if there was no ſuch law, it was high time there ſhould be one, to put a ſtop to ſuch a pernicious practice for the future; and therefore moved, that the Judges be ordered to bring in a bill for that purpoſe. But, after ſome diſputes about certain proviſoes, the conſideration of the bill was put off and never more reſumed.

The Quakers having petitioned the Commons for leave to bring in a bill for taking out of their ſolemn affirmation the words, In the preſence of Almighty God, a bill paſſed the Houſe for that purpoſe, and was ſent up to the Lords, where it occaſioned a debate. The Biſhop of Rocheſter having, among other things, ſaid, 'He did not know why ſuch a diſtinguiſhing indulgence, as was intended by this bill, ſhould be allowed to a ſet of people, who were hardly Chriſtians:' The Earl of Ilay anſwered, 'He wondered that Reverend Prelate ſhould call in queſtion, whether the Quakers were Chriſtians, ſince they were ſo, at leaſt by act of Parliament; being included in the Toleration act, under the general denomination of Proteſtant Diſſenters. The Biſhop replied, 'It was againſt the ſtanding orders of that Auguſt Aſſembly to make any perſonal reflections; and he thought it a much greater indecency to make a jeſt of any thing, that was ſacred; and that the calling the Quakers Chriſtians, by act of Parliament, was a ſort of ſide-wind reflection upon Chriſtianity itſelf: However, he would let that paſs, and reſerve to another opportunity what he had to offer againſt the bill. Accordingly, he afterwards endeavoured to prove the Quakers were no Chriſtians, and was ſeconded and ſupported by the Earl of Strafford, Lord North and Grey, and the Archbiſhop of York. When the bill was committed, a petition from ſome of the London Clergy was preſented by the Archbiſhop of York, ſetting forth, 'That, the bill might, in its conſequences, nearly affect the property of the ſubject in general, ſo it would, in a more eſpecial manner, indanger the legal maintenance of the Clergy by tythes, inaſmuch as the people called Quakers pretend to deny the payment of tythes upon a principle of conſcience; and therefore might be under ſtrong inducements to eaſe their conſciences in that reſpect, by violating them in another, when their ſimple affirmation, on behalf of friends of the ſame perſuaſion, ſhall paſs in all Courts of Judicature for legal evidence. However, that the injuries, which the Petitioners in their private affairs might poſſibly ſuffer, were, as they ought to be, of ſmall account with them, in compariſon of the miſchiefs, which might redound to ſociety from the indulgence intended, as it ſeemed to imply, that Juſtice may be duly adminiſtered, and Government ſupported, without the intervention of any ſolemn appeal to God as a witneſs of the truth of what is ſaid, by all perſons, in all caſes of great importance to the common welfare; whereas the Petitioners were firmly perſuaded, that an oath was inſtituted by God himſelf, as the ſureſt bond of fidelity among men, and hath been eſteemed, and found to be ſo by the wiſdom and experience of all Nations in all ages. But that what chiefly moved the Petitioners to apply to their Lordſhips, was their ſerious concern, leſt the minds of good men ſhould be grieved and wounded, and the enemies of Chriſtianity triumph, when they ſhould ſee ſuch condeſcenſions made by a Chriſtian Legiſlature to a ſet of men, who renounce the divine inſtitutions of Chriſt; particularly that, by which the faithful are initiated into his Religion, and denominated Chriſtians; and who cannot, on this account, according to the uniform judgment and practice of the Catholic Church, be deemed worthy of that ſacred name. The Petitioners moreover repreſented, that, upon the beſt information they could get, the inſtances, wherein any Quaker had refuſed the ſolemn affirmation preſcribed by an act in the 7th and 8th years of William III, had, from the paſſing that act to that day, been exceeding rare; ſo that there might be ground to hope, that the continued uſe of the ſaid ſolemn affirmation would, by degrees, 1721-22. Petition againſt it.

1721-22. grees, have intirely cured that people of all thoſe unreaſonable prejudices againſt an oath, which the favour deſigned them by the bill might tend to ſtrengthen and confirm. And the Petitioners humbly left it to their Lordſhips wiſe deliberations, whether ſuch an extraordinary indulgence, granted to a people already, as is conceived, too numerous, might not contribute to multiply their ſect, and tempt perſons to profeſs themſelves Quakers, in order to be exempted from the obligation of oaths, and to ſtand upon a foot of privilege, not allowed to the beſt Chriſtians in the Kingdom.'

it is rejected. The receiving and reading of this petition was warmly oppoſed, and, the queſtion being at laſt put, it was rejected. All the Biſhops preſent (except the two Archbiſhops, the Biſhops of Oxford *, Litchfield and Coventry †, and Rocheſter) were againſt the petition. The Biſhop of Salisbury endeavoured to mitigate the matter, and propoſed, that the Petitioners might have leave to withdraw their petition; but this was oppoſed by the Earl of Sunderland, who ſaid, that a Committee ought to be appointed to inquire into the Authors and promoters of it, for he looked upon it to be no better than a libel. The Lord Townſhend took notice of the irregular way, in which the petition was preſented, for, if it was a petition of the London Clergy, it ought to be offered either by the Biſhop of that Dioceſe, or the Archbiſhop of Canterbury; whereas it was preſented by the Archbiſhop of York, who was Metropolitan of another Province. However, a proteſt was entered by ſeveral Lords and Biſhops againſt rejecting the petition. After this, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury moved, that the Quakers affirmation might not be admitted in Courts of Judicature, but among themſelves; and the Archbiſhop of York moved for a clauſe, that the Quakers affirmation ſhould not go in any ſuit at law for tythes: But, after ſome farther debate, the bill was gone through, and ſent back to the Commons; but a proteſt was entered againſt it by ſeveral Lords and Biſhops.

* Potter.
† Hough.

An order about proteſts. As nothing had paſſed without being proteſted againſt, the Earl of Sunderland, towards the end of the Seſſion, took notice, 'That the privilege of entering proteſts had, of late, been ſo much abuſed, that, in his opinion, ſome reſtraint ought to be put to it by limiting the time for entering proteſts upon aſking leave of the Houſe, which was never denied: And therefore he moved, that ſuch Lords, as ſhall enter their proteſtations with reaſons, ſhall do the ſame before two o'clock the next ſitting day, and ſign them before the Houſe riſes.' This was oppoſed by the Lord Cowper, who alledged, 'That, the time being ſo ſhort, and very few Lords coming ſo early, ſuch an order would in effect put an end to all proteſting, which was an antient privilege of that Houſe.' The Biſhop of Rocheſter added That, if proteſts were limited to ſo ſhort a time, this was at leaſt the way to have them crude and indigeſted; and he thought it unbecoming the dignity of that Auguſt Aſſembly to have any thing entered upon their journals, which were records for after ages, before it had been duly conſidered, and well digeſted.' However, it was reſolved, that it ſhould be a ſtanding order of the Houſe (inſtead of the order of the 5th of March, 1641) That ſuch Lords, as ſhall enter their proteſtations with reaſons, ſhall do the ſame before two o'clock the next ſitting day, and ſign them before the Houſe riſes.

The Commons, after having granted the neceſſary Supplies, brought in a bill for ſecuring the freedom of elections of Members of Parliament: Great debates aroſe about ſeveral clauſes that were offered to be inſerted in the bill; particularly, that no Officer of the Cuſtoms or Exciſe ſhould vote at any election for Parliament Men. This was ſtrenuouſly oppoſed, as taking away from thoſe Officers their birthright, as Engliſhmen and Freeholders; upon which that clauſe was dropped. Another was propoſed, that no perſon, who did not pay ſcot and lot, ſhould have a vote in a Corporation. This was alſo oppoſed, 'becauſe (as it was urged) it had already been adjudged at Committees of elections, and agreed to by the Houſe in ſeveral caſes, that ſuch perſons, in ſome places, ſhould have no votes; and in other places they ſhould be allowed to vote, provided they did not receive alms from the pariſh.' As this clauſe was not inſiſted upon, the bill paſſed, and was ſent up to the Lords. The Earl of Sunderland endeavoured to ſhew the impoſſibility of the ſeveral clauſes of the bill being put in execution, without expoſing the moſt innocent perſons to the guilt of perjury. After ſeveral ſpeeches on both ſides, the bill was rejected by 48 voices againſt 30.

An act paſſed this Seſſion, to enable the South-Sea Company to diſpoſe of the effects in their hands by way of lottery or ſubſcription, in order to pay the debts of the Company. By a clauſe in this bill, the South-Sea Company were impowered to ſell 200,000 l. a year of their capital ſtock for the ſame purpoſe. Another act paſſed, to prolong the times for hearing and determining claims upon the eſtates of the South-Sea Directors, and of Mr. Aiſlabie and Mr. Craggs.

On the 7th of March, the buſineſs of the Seſſion being over, the King came to the Houſe of Peers, and put an end to the Parliament, with the following ſpeech to both Houſes:

My Lords and Gentlemen,

" YOU could not have given me a more acceptable inſtance of your zeal and affection, than by diſpatching, with ſo much unanimity, the ſeveral particulars I recommended to you at the beginning of this Seſſion, for the eaſe and advantage of my people.

" The many and great encouragements you have given to our trade and manufactures, and the proviſion you have made for our being ſupplied with naval ſtores from our own Plantations, will, I make no doubt, excite the induſtry of my ſubjects, employ a greater number of the poor, increaſe our navigation, and be a conſiderable addition to the riches and ſtrength of this Nation.

Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons,

" The raiſing the current Supplies of the year, and the making a proviſion for the diſcharge of ſo conſiderable a part of the debt of the Navy, is a farther proof of your affection to me, and your regard for the public; and your doing it, in a manner ſo little burthenſome to my people, gives me the greateſt ſatisfaction.

My

My Lords and Gentlemen,

" I cannot in juſtice part with this Parliament, " without returning you my ſincereſt thanks for " your ſteady and reſolute adherence to my Per- " ſon and Government, and to the intereſt of " the Proteſtant Cauſe both at home and abroad. " The enemies of our happy Conſtitution have " given the ſtrongeſt and moſt honourable teſti- " mony of your behaviour in theſe particulars, " by the implacable malice, which they have, " upon all occaſions, expreſſed againſt you.

" You muſt all be ſenſible, that they are at " this juncture reviving, with the greateſt induſ- " try, the ſame wicked arts of calumny and de- " famation, which have been the conſtant pre- " ludes to public troubles and diſorders: And " ſuch is their infatuation, that they flatter " themſelves, the groſſeſt miſrepreſentations " will turn to their advantage, and give them " an opportunity of recommending themſelves " to the favour and good opinion of my people. " But I have ſo juſt a confidence in the affection " of my ſubjects, and in their regard for their " own welfare, that I am perſuaded they will " not ſuffer themſelves to be thus impoſed up- " on, and betrayed into their own deſtruction.

" For my part, as the preſervation of the " Conſtitution in Church and State ſhall always " be my care, I am firmly determined to con- " tinue to countenance ſuch, as have manifeſted " their zeal for the preſent Eſtabliſhment, and 1721-22. " have the religious and civil rights of all my " ſubjects truly at heart; and I queſtion not " but that behaviour, which has juſtly recom- " mended them to me, will effectually ſecure to " them the good-will of all that are well-affected " to my Government, and will convince the " world, that the expectations of thoſe are very " ill grounded, who hope to prevail with a " Proteſtant free people, to give up their Re- " ligion and Liberties into the hands of ſuch " as are enemies unto both."

After this ſpeech the Parliament was prorogued to the 15th of March, but, on the 10th, a Proclamation was publiſhed to diſſolve the Parliament, and, three days after, another for calling a new one.

Soon after the diſſolution of the Parliament, 1722. died Charles Spencer, Earl of Sunderland, whoſe Death of the Earl of Sunderland, abilities as a Miniſter were indiſputable, but who Apr. 19. expoſed himſelf to great odium by the violence of his temper, and the ſhare he was thought to have had in the South-Sea ſcheme; and in the latter part of his life it is thought upon good grounds, that he had entered into correſpondencies and deſigns, which would have been fatal to himſelf, or to the public.

His death was followed in leſs than a month and of the Duke of Marlborough, by that of his father-in-law the Duke of Marlborough, whoſe character has been given in the former part of this hiſtory (1). He was interred June 16. the

(1) It may not be improper to inſert here the monumental inſcription on the pillar in the Park, before the Caſtle of Blenheim, which enumerates the Duke of Marlborough's exploits in a plain, elegant, and maſculine ſtyle:

The Caſtle of Blenheim was founded by Q. ANN.
In the fourth Year of her Reign;
In the Year of the Chriſtian Æra 1705;
A Monument deſigned to perpetuate the Memory of the ſignal Victory
Obtain'd over the French and Bavarians,
Near the Village of Blenheim,
On the Banks of the Danube,
By JOHN Duke of MARLBOROUGH;
The Hero not only of his Nation, but of his Age;
Whoſe Glory was equal in the Council and in the Field;
Who by Wiſdom, Juſtice, Candour and Addreſs,
Reconciled various, and even oppoſite Intereſts;
Acquired an Influence, which no Rank, no Authority can give,
Nor any Force but that of ſuperior Virtue;
Became the fixed important Center,
Which united in one common Cauſe
The principal States of Europe;
Who by military Knowledge, and irreſiſtible Valour,
In a long Series of uninterrupted Triumphs,
Broke the Power of France,
When raiſed the higheſt, when exerted the moſt;
Reſcued the Empire from Deſolation;
Aſſerted and confirmed the Liberties of Europe.

PHILIP, a Grandſon of the Houſe of France, united to the intereſts, directed by the policy, ſupported by the arms of that Crown, was placed on the Throne of Spain. King William the Third beheld this formidable union of two great, and once rival, Monarchies. At the end of a life ſpent in defending the liberties of Europe, he ſaw them in their greateſt danger. He provided for their ſecurity, in the moſt effectual manner. He took the Duke of Marlborough into his ſervice.

Ambaſſador extraordinary and Plenipotentiary
To the States-General of the United Provinces.

The Duke contracted ſeveral Alliances before the death of King WILLIAM. He confirmed and improved theſe. He contracted others, after the acceſſion of Queen ANNE; and reunited the Confederacy, which had been diſſolved at the end of a former war, in a ſtricter and firmer league.

Captain General and Commander in Chief
Of the Forces of GREAT BRITAIN.

The Duke led to the field the army of the Allies. He took with ſurprizing rapidity Venlo, Ruremonde, Stevenſwaert, Liege. He extended and ſecured the frontiers of the Dutch. The enemies, whom he found inſulting at the gates of Nimweghen, were driven to ſeek for ſhelter behind their lines. He forced Bonne, Huy, Limbourg in another campaign. He opened the communication of the Rhine, as well as the Maes. He added all the Country between theſe rivers to his former conqueſts. The arms of France, favoured by the defection of the Elector of Bavaria, had penetrated into the heart of the Empire. This mighty body lay expoſed to immediate ruin. In that memorable criſis, the Duke of MARLBOROUGH led his troops with unexampled celerity, ſecrecy, order, from the Ocean to the Danube. He ſaw; he attacked; nor ſtopped, but to conquer the enemy. He forced the Bavarians, ſuſtained by the French, in their ſtrong intrenchments at Schellenberg. He paſſed the Danube. A ſecond royal army, compoſed of the beſt troops of France, was ſent to reinforce the firſt. That of the Confederates was divided. With one part of it the ſiege of Ingolſtadt was carried on. With the other the Duke gave battle to the united ſtrength of France and Bavaria. On the ſecond day of Auguſt, 1704, he gained a more glorious victory than the hiſtories of any age can boaſt. The heaps of ſlain were dreadful proofs of his valour. A Marſhal of France, whole legions of French, his priſoners, proclaimed his mercy. Bavaria was ſubdued. Ratisbon, Augsburg, Ulm, Meminghen, all the uſurpations of the enemy, were recovered. The liberty of the Diet, the peace of the Empire, were reſtored. From the Danube the Duke turned his victorious arms toward the Rhine, and the Moſelle. Landau, Treves, Traerbach 1722. the 9th of Auguſt, with great funeral pomp, in Weſtminſter-Abbey; and was ſucceeded as Maſter-General of the Ordnance, and Colonel of the firſt regiment of Foot-guards by the Earl of Cadogan.

The elections for Members of Parliament were

Traerbach were taken. In the courſe of one campaign the very nature of the war was changed. The Invaders of other States were reduced to defend their own. The frontier of France was expoſed in its weakeſt part to the efforts of the Allies.

That he might improve his advantage, that he might puſh the ſum of things to a ſpeedy deciſion, the Duke of MARLBOROUGH led his troops early in the following year once more to the Moſelle. They, whom he had ſaved a few months before, neglected to ſecond him now. They, who might have been his companions in conqueſt, refuſed to join him. When he ſaw the generous deſigns he had formed fruſtrated by private intereſt, by pique, by jealouſy, he returned with ſpeed to the Maes. He returned; and fortune and victory returned with him. Liege was relieved; Huy re-taken; the French, who had preſſed the army of the States-General with ſuperior numbers, retired behind intrenchments, which they deemed impregnable. The Duke forced theſe intrenchments, with inconſiderable loſs, on the ſeventh day of July, 1705. He defeated a great part of the army, which defended them. The reſt eſcaped by a precipitate retreat. If advantages proportionable to this ſucceſs were not immediately obtained, let the failure be aſcribed to that miſfortune, which attends moſt Confederacies, a diviſion of opinions, where one alone ſhould judge; a diviſion of powers, where one alone ſhould command. The diſappointment itſelf did honour to the Duke. It became the wonder of mankind how he could do ſo much under thoſe reſtraints, which had hindered him from doing more.

Powers more abſolute were given him afterwards. The encreaſe of his powers multiplied his victories. At the opening of the next campaign, when all his army was not yet aſſembled, when it was hardly known that he had taken the field, the noiſe of his triumphs was heard over Europe. On the 12th of May, 1706, he attacked the French at Ramillies. In the ſpace of two hours, the whole army was put to flight. The vigour and conduct, with which he improved this ſucceſs, were equal to thoſe, with which he gained it. Louvain, Bruſſels, Malines, Liere, Ghent, Oudenard, Antwerp, Damme, Bruges, Courtray ſurrendered. Oſtend, Menin, Dendermond, Aeth were taken. Brabant and Flanders were recovered. Places which had reſiſted the greateſt Generals for months, for years; Provinces, diſputed for ages, were the conqueſts of a ſummer. Nor was the Duke content to triumph alone. Solicitous for the general intereſt, his care extended to the remoteſt ſcenes of the war. He choſe to leſſen his own army, that he might enable the Leaders of other armies to conquer. To this it muſt be aſcribed that Turin was relieved, the Duke of Savoy re-inſtated, the French driven with confuſion out of Italy.

Theſe victories gave the Confederates an opportunity of carrying the war, on every ſide, into the Dominions of France. But ſhe continued to enjoy a kind of peaceful Neutrality in Germany. From Italy ſhe was once alarmed, and had no more to fear. The entire reduction of this power, whoſe ambition had cauſed, whoſe ſtrength ſupported the war, ſeemed reſerved for him alone, who had ſo triumphantly begun the glorious work.

The barrier of France, on the ſide of the Low-Countries, had been forming for more than half a century. What art, power, expence could do, had been done to render it impenetrable. Yet here ſhe was moſt expoſed; for here the Duke of MARLBOROUGH threatened to attack her.

To cover what they had gained by ſurprize, or had been yielded to them by treachery, the French marched to the banks of the Schelde. At their head were the Princes of the blood, and their moſt fortunate General, the Duke of Vendoſme. Thus commanded, thus poſted, they hoped to check the Victor in his courſe. Vain were their hopes. The Duke of MARLBOROUGH paſſed the river in their ſight. He defeated their whole army. The approach of night concealed, the proximity of Ghent favoured their flight. They neglected nothing to repair their loſs; to defend their frontier. New Generals, new Armies, appeared in the Netherlands. All contributed to enhance the glory, none were able to retard the progreſs of the Confederate arms.

Liſle, the bulwark of this barrier, was beſieged. A numerous Garriſon and a Marſhal of France defended the place. Prince Eugene of Savoy commanded, the Duke of MARLBOROUGH covered and ſuſtained the ſiege. The rivers were ſeized, and the communication with Holland interrupted. The Duke opened new communications with great labour and much greater art. Through Countries, over-run by the enemy, the neceſſary convoys arrived in ſafety. One alone was attacked. The troops, which attacked it, were beat. The defence of Liſle was animated by aſſurances of relief.

The French aſſembled all their force. They marched towards the town. The Duke of MARLBOROUGH offered them battle, without ſuſpending the ſiege. They abandoned the enterprize. They came to ſave the town. They were ſpectators of its fall.

From this conqueſt the Duke haſtened to others. The poſts taken by the enemy on the Schelde were ſurprized. That river was paſſed the ſecond time; and notwithſtanding the great preparations made to prevent it, without oppoſition.

Bruſſels, beſieged by the Elector of Bavaria, was relieved. Ghent ſurrendered to the Duke in the middle of a winter remarkably ſevere. An army, little inferior to his own, marched out of the place.

As ſoon as the ſeaſon of the year permitted him to open another campaign, the Duke beſieged and took Tournay. He inveſted Mons. Near this City the French army, covered by thick woods, defended by treble intrenchments, waited to moleſt, nor preſumed to offer battle. Even this was not attempted by them with impunity. On the laſt day of Auguſt, 1709, the Duke attacked them in their camp. All was employed, nothing availed againſt the reſolution of ſuch a General; againſt the fury of ſuch troops. The battle was bloody. The event deciſive. The woods were pierced. The fortifications trampled down. The enemy fled. The town was taken. Douay, Bethune, Aire, St. Venant, Bouchain underwent the ſame fate in two ſucceeding years. Their vigorous reſiſtance could not ſave them. The army of France durſt not attempt to relieve them. It ſeemed preſerved to defend the capital of the Monarchy.

The proſpect of this extream diſtreſs was neither diſtant, nor dubious. The French acknowledged their Conqueror, and ſued for peace.

Theſe are the Actions of the Duke of MARLBOROUGH:
Perform'd in the Compaſs of few Years,
Sufficient to adorn the Annals of Ages.
The Admiration of other Nations
Will be conveyed to lateſt Poſterity,
In the Hiſtories even of the enemies of BRITAIN.

The Senſe, which the BRITISH Nation had
Of his tranſcendent Merit,
Was expreſſed
In the moſt ſolemn, moſt effectual, moſt durable manner.

The ACTS of PARLIAMENT, inſcribed on this Pillar,
Shall ſtand
As long as the BRITISH Name and Language laſt,
Illuſtrious Monuments
Of MARLBOROUGH's Glory
And Of BRITAIN's Gratitude.

(1) About

were carried on with great zeal on both ſides; but the majority of the elected was clearly in favour of the Court; as was likewiſe that of the ſixteen Scots Peers, who were the Dukes of Montroſe and Roxburgh, the Marquiſs of Tweedale, the Earls of Sutherland, Rothes, Loudon, Haddington, Buchan, Selkirk, Orkney, Stair, Deloraine, Ilay, Hoptoun, Bute, and Aberdeen (1.)

It was King George's lot to meet with continual diſturbances. The affair of the South-Sea, and the favour ſhewn to the Managers of that ſcheme, had raiſed great diſcontents. It was natural for the enemies of his Perſon and Government to improve ſuch a juncture: Accordingly they did ſo, and, though without hope of any foreign aſſiſtance, they imagined it poſſible to ſucceed in their deſigns, unleſs prevented by a diſcovery. The King had ſome ſuſpicion of a plot, which he had intimated in his ſpeech to both Houſes, but preſently after his ſuſpicions were turned into certainty. In the beginning of May he had full information of a conſpiracy formed againſt him, the firſt notice of which came from the Duke of Orleans.

Upon this information, a camp was marked out in Hyde-Park, to which the troops of the King's Houſhold marched the next day. Orders were iſſued to all military Officers immediately to repair to their reſpective commands. Lieutenant-General Maccartney was diſpatched to Ireland, to bring over ſome troops from thence into the Weſt of England. Meſſengers were ſent to Scotland to ſecure ſome ſuſpected perſons; and Mr. Horace Walpole, who, ſome days before, went over to Holland, was inſtructed to deſire the States, to keep in readineſs the guarantee troops, in order to be ſent into England in caſe of neceſſity. On the other hand, Colonel Churchill was ſent to the Court of France, with a private Commiſſion, probably to ſee how far the aſſurances from thence were to be depended upon. By theſe precautions the public tranquillity was preſerved in Great-Britain. However, the apprehenſions of the plot did not a little affect public credit; for, on May the 7th, South-Sea ſtock fell from 90 to 77; and the timorous or diſaffected began a run upon the Bank. But, a few days after, the funds gradually roſe to their former value.

To authorize theſe precautions, and ſound the temper of the people, the Lord Townſhend writ the following letter to the Lord-Mayor of London:

My Lord, Whitehall, May 8, 1722.

'His Majeſty having nothing more at heart than the peace and ſafety of his good City of London, the protection of its inhabitants, and the ſupport of public credit, has commanded me to acquaint your Lordſhip, that he has received repeated and unqueſtionable advices, that ſeveral of his ſubjects, forgetting the allegiance they owe to his Majeſty, as well as the natural love they ought to bear to their Country, have entered into a wicked Conſpiracy, in concert with Traitors abroad, for raiſing a Rebellion in this Kingdom in favour of a Popiſh Pretender, with a traiterous deſign to overthrow our excellent Conſtitution both in Church and State, and to ſubject a Proteſtant free people to tyranny and ſuperſtition; but I am perſuaded, that it will be a great ſatisfaction to your Lordſhip and the City to find, that, at the ſame time I am ordered to inform you of this deſign, I am likewiſe commanded by his Majeſty to let you know, that he is firmly aſſured, that the Authors of it neither are, nor will be ſupported, nor even countenanced by any foreign power. And as his Majeſty has had timely notice of their wicked machinations, and has made the proper diſpoſitions for defeating them, he has no reaſon to doubt, but by the continuance of the bleſſing of Almighty God, and the ready aſſiſtance of his faithful ſubjects, this effort of the malice of his enemies will be turned to their own confuſion. 1722.

His Majeſty makes no doubt, but your Lordſhip, purſuant to the truſt repoſed in you, will, in conjunction with the other Magiſtrates of his good City of London, exert, with the utmoſt care and vigilance, your authority at ſo important a conjuncture, for the preſervation of the public Peace, and the ſecurity of the City.'

I am, &c.

TOWNSHEND.

The reception this letter met with was very acceptable to the Court. An addreſs was preſented by the Court of Aldermen, thanking the King for his indulgent regard to the City of London, by informing them of the wicked deſigns of his enemies at home and abroad, and congratulating him upon the happy ſucceſs of his Negotiations, which had procured aſſurances, that theſe traiterous purpoſes would not be ſupported by any foreign power:

'When we reflect (continues the addreſs) on the many bleſſings, which Britons enjoy, under the protection of a Prince, who makes the laws of this land his rule for the Government of his people, when we conſider that neither the civil, or religious rights of your Majeſty's ſubjects, have met with the leaſt inſtance of violation, ſince your Majeſty's happy Acceſſion to the Throne of theſe Realms, when we recollect your Majeſty's Royal clemency and benevolence, (ſince the laſt Rebellion) to numbers of thoſe who had offended, in the higheſt degree, againſt their King, and the laws of their Country, we cannot but expreſs the utmoſt abhorrence of thoſe vile and deteſtable perſons, who ſhall again conſpire and attempt to bring a free and happy people under the yoke and tyranny of ſuperſtition, and to involve this Nation in a ſtate of blood, miſery, and utmoſt confuſion.

And as theſe muſt be the unavoidable conſequences attending any enterprize to alter our preſent happy Eſtabliſhment, and to introduce a Popiſh one;

As Engliſhmen that value our liberties; as honeſt

(1) About this time David Graham, eldeſt ſon of the Duke of Montroſe, was created Earl Graham of Belford in Northumberland, and Robert Ker, only ſon of the Duke of Roxburgh, Earl Ker of Wakefield in Yorkſhire. John Leſtlie, Earl of Rothes, dying ſoon after his election, James Ogilvy, Earl of Finlater and Seafield was elected in his room.

1722. neſt men that have ſworn Allegiance to your Majeſty, and who have abjured and renounced the Pretender; and as real friends to our excellent Conſtitution in Church and State (with a Proteſtant Prince at the head of it) we beg leave, in the moſt ſolemn manner, to declare to your Majeſty, that, as we are bound in gratitude, we will exert ourſelves in our ſeveral ſtations, with the utmoſt care and vigilance, for the preſervation of the public peace and tranquillity, and for the reſtoring of public credit; and that we will uſe our ſincere and hearty endeavours for the firm ſupport of your Majeſty upon the Throne, and for the making your Reign eaſy and happy.'

The example of London was followed by many other Cities and Burroughs, who all expreſſed the ſame zeal and devotion. But, notwithſtanding theſe aſſurances, the King's journey to Hanover was laid aſide, though the Regency had been ſettled, in which the Prince of Wales had no part. The Court, however, went to Kenſington, and the Prince and Princeſs retired to Richmond.

Several perſons taken up.

Various were the reports about the nature and diſcovery of the Conſpiracy, as the Government did not as yet think fit to publiſh the particulars. However, to remove all ſuſpicion of its reality, ſeveral perſons were taken up. On the 21ſt of May, Mr. George Kelly, who went under the name of Johnſon, an Iriſh Clergyman, was ſeized at his lodgings in Bury-Street, by three Meſſengers, for treaſonable correſpondences; and, having delivered his ſword and papers to them, they placed them in a window, and went in ſearch of other things. Their negligence gave him an opportunity of recovering his ſword, which he drew, and ſwore he would run the firſt man through the body, that diſturbed him in what he was doing, which was burning his papers in a candle with his left hand, whilſt he held the drawn ſword in the other. When the papers were burnt, he ſurrendered himſelf.

On the 4th of Auguſt, Mr. Robert Cotton, of Huntingtonſhire, one of the Gentlemen concerned in the late Rebellion, and cleared by the act of Grace, was ſeized at his lodgings over againſt Somerſet-Houſe, as were alſo his Footman and Landlady. Two days after, Mr. Cochran and Mr. Smith were brought priſoners from Edinburgh, and Cochran was committed to the Tower. One John Sample, formerly a ſervant to Sir Robert Sutton, while he reſided as Envoy Extraordinary at the Court of France, having been taken up for High-treaſon, and being in cuſtody of a Meſſenger, found means, on the 5th of Auguſt, to make his eſcape; upon which a proclamation was iſſued out, with a reward of 1000*l.* for apprehending him. And, on the 13th, another proclamation, with the like reward, was publiſhed for apprehending Mr. Thomas Carte, a Nonjuring Clergyman, againſt whom a warrant had been iſſued by one of the Secretaries of State.

On the 24th of Auguſt, Dr. Francis Atterbury, Biſhop of Rocheſter, and Dean of Weſtminſter, was apprehended by ſome of the King's Meſſengers, who, having ſearched his houſe, and ſecured ſome of his papers, carried him before a Committee of the Privy-Council, who, having examined him, committed him to the Tower for High-treaſon. The next day, Mr. Thomas Moore, Vicar of St. Botolph Alderſgate, formerly Secretary to the Biſhop of Rocheſter, was likewiſe taken up, and afterwards examined, but ſoon after diſcharged.

About the middle of September, Mr. Bingley, Mr. Neynoe, a young Iriſh Prieſt, and two other perſons, were ſeized at Deal, and brought up priſoners to London. About the ſame time Mr. Chriſtopher Layer, a young Counſellor of the Temple, being alſo apprehended, he endeavoured, the next day, to make his eſcape; and ſucceeded ſo far in his deſign, that he found means to get out at a back-window two ſtory high, and, having reached the river-ſide, he gave a Sculler ſome guineas to carry him over the water to Southwark with all poſſible expedition. But, being diſcovered, upon his going off, by a ſervant-maid, he was immediately purſued, and, a hue and cry being raiſed after him, he was taken, and brought back, and the next morning committed to the Tower. On the 21ſt of of September, he was brought under a ſtrong guard to the Cock-pit at Whitehall, and, having been ſome hours under examination, before a Committee of the Privy-Council, was remanded to his confinement. The day before, Mr. Sayer, of the Temple, was taken into cuſtody; as was alſo, the next day, Mr. Stewart, Clerk to Mr. Layer, while his Maſter was under examination. The ſame day, John Plunket, Serjeant to a Company of Invalids at Plymouth, was ſeized at Chelſea, upon ſuſpicion of being concerned with Mr. Layer, and, after examination, committed to the cuſtody of a Meſſenger. On the 24th, Mr. Shippen's houſe in Norfolk-Street was ſearched for papers, that might give light into ſome ſuſpicions. Warrants were likewiſe iſſued out for apprehending the Lord North and Grey, who was gone as far as the Iſle of Wight, and had put himſelf on board a Smuggler's ſloop, having been ſome time at Mr. Holmes's houſe in that Iſland. Colonel Morgan, the Deputy-Governor, being informed of his being on board the ſloop, ſent to a Captain of one of the King's frigates, to have an eye upon the ſloop, and, when going to ſail, to ſend his long-boat aboard, and ſecure all the paſſengers on ſuſpicion; which being done, the Lord North and Grey at firſt pretended to be another perſon; but, finding that did him no ſervice, he confeſſed who he was; and he and the reſt of the paſſengers were carried before the Governor, who told them, he muſt ſecure them till he could write to Court; and, upon an anſwer from thence, he had orders to ſend them up in cuſtody. The Lord North and Grey's houſe, in Great Queen-Street, being alſo ſearched for papers, the Meſſenger found there Mr. Swathfegger, Secretary to the Earl of Orrery, who was ſeized and committed to cuſtody; and, the next morning, September 27, the Earl himſelf was brought to town from his ſeat at Brittel in Buckinghamſhire, and, having been examined at the Cock-pit, was ordered to be confined that night at his own houſe in Glaſs-Houſe-Street, under a guard of thirty ſoldiers; and, the next day, in the evening, was again examined by a Committee of the Privy-Council, and committed priſoner to the Tower; as was alſo the Lord North and Grey, being brought up from Portſmouth by Lieutenant-General Maccartney, Colonel Gordon, and a Meſſenger.

On the 26th of September Mr. Fleetwood was taken taken into cuſtody, and Mrs. Layer, ignorant of her husband's fate, and coming over from France, was about the ſame time ſeized at Dover.

Two days after Mr. Stephen Neynoe, the Iriſh Prieſt, ſeized at Deal, being cloſely confined in the houſe of Mr. Crawford, one of the King's Meſſengers, in Mancheſter-Court near the Thames, found means, about three in the morning, to make his eſcape from a window two ſtory high, by tying the blanket and ſheets together, and got to the wall of a neighbouring garden adjoining to the river; but not knowing, that the tide was high, he leaped into the water, and, being unskilled in ſwimming, was drowned.

After the Biſhop of Rocheſter had lain a fortnight in priſon, Sir Conſtantine Phipps preſented a petition to the Court at the Seſſions-Houſe in the Old Bailey, in the name of Mrs. Morrice, the Biſhop's daughter, praying that, in conſideration of the Biſhop's ill ſtate of health, he might be either brought to a ſpeedy trial, or bailed, or diſcharged: But it was overruled, as were alſo the petitions of two other priſoners for the plot, Cochran and Dennis Kelly.

The commitment of the Biſhop of Rocheſter made a great noiſe through the whole Kingdom, and gave occaſion to the diſaffected to heighten jealouſies and diſcontents. They pretended his confinement was injurious to the Church of England, and the Epiſcopal order, and went ſo far as to offer up public prayers for him (under pretence of his being afflicted with the Gout) in moſt Churches and Chapels in London and Weſtminſter, on Sunday the 16th of September. On the other hand, endeavours were uſed to remove the prejudices of the Clergy againſt the Miniſtry, and Dr. Gibſon, Biſhop of Lincoln (now of London) wrote a circular letter, wherein he ſets forth the indulgence wherewith the Biſhop was treated: The great reſpect the order of Biſhops met with from the King, who in the diſpoſal of his preferments was directed by their advice: The improbability of ſo unpopular an act, without a juſt and even neceſſary foundation: And laſtly the ſafety of the Nation, which requires that all delinquents ſhould be cenſured as ſuch, without any regard to the office, or title, or honour they bear.

Whilſt the Public was employed in condemning or acquitting the impriſoned Biſhop, the King thought proper to ſhew himſelf to the people. He ſet out the latter end of Auguſt for his Weſtern progreſs, accompanied by the Prince of Wales. He came to Hackwood, a ſeat of the Duke of Bolton, near Baſingſtoke in Hampſhire, on the 28th of Auguſt, lay there that night, and the next day arrived at Salisbury, being received every where with demonſtrations of the greateſt affection and joy. On the 30th he went to the camp near that City, and reviewed Londonderry's and Wade's Regiments of horſe, and Evans's and Gore's Regiments of dragoons; and Wills's, Cadogan's, Pocock's, Stanwix's, Groves's, Montague's, and Clayton's Regiments of foot. The King returned by the way of Wincheſter, viſited Portſmouth, lay at Stanſtead, the ſeat of the Earl of Scarborough, and arrived at Kenſington the firſt of September.

The noiſe made by the Conſpiracy ſeemed to require the meeting of the Parliament as ſoon as the ſeaſon would permit. Accordingly, on the 9th of October, the King came to the Houſe of Lords, and opened the Seſſion with a ſpeech very proper to remove any doubts which might have been entertained of the plot: 1722.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

" I AM concerned to find myſelf obliged, at the opening of this Parliament, to acquaint you, that a dangerous Conſpiracy has been for ſome time formed, and is ſtill carrying on, againſt my Perſon and Government, in favour of a Popiſh Pretender. The King's ſpeech.

" The diſcoveries I have made here, the informations I have received from my Miniſters abroad, and the intelligences I have had from the powers in alliance with me, and indeed from moſt parts of Europe, have given me moſt ample and concurrent proofs of this wicked deſign.

" The Conſpirators have, by their Emiſſaries, made the ſtrongeſt inſtances for aſſiſtance from foreign powers, but were diſappointed in their expectations. However, confiding in their numbers, and not diſcouraged by their former ill ſucceſs, they reſolved once more, upon their own ſtrength, to attempt the ſubverſion of my Government.

" To this end they provided conſiderable ſums of money, engaged great numbers of Officers from abroad, ſecured large quantities of arms and ammunition, and thought themſelves in ſuch readineſs, that, had not the Conſpiracy been timely diſcovered, we ſhould, without doubt, before now, have ſeen the whole Nation, and particularly the City of London, involved in blood and confuſion.

" The care I have taken has, by the bleſſing of God, hitherto prevented the execution of their traiterous projects. The troops have been incamped all this ſummer: Six Regiments (though very neceſſary for the ſecurity of that Kingdom) have been brought over from Ireland: The States-General have given me aſſurances, that they would keep a conſiderable body of forces in readineſs to imbark on the firſt notice of their being wanted here, which was all I deſired of them, being determined not to put my people to any more expence than what was abſolutely neceſſary for their peace and ſecurity.

" Some of the Conſpirators have been taken up, and ſecured, and endeavours are uſed for the apprehending others.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

" Having thus in general laid before you the ſtate of the preſent Conſpiracy, I muſt leave to your conſideration what is proper and neceſſary to be done for the quiet and ſafety of the Kingdom. I cannot but believe the hopes and expectations of our enemies are very ill-grounded, in flattering themſelves, that the late diſcontents, occaſioned by private loſſes and misfortunes, however induſtriouſly and maliciouſly fomented, are turned into diſaffection, and a ſpirit of Rebellion.

" Had I, ſince my Acceſſion to the Throne, ever attempted any innovation in our eſtabliſhed Religion; had I, in any one inſtance, invaded the liberty and property of my ſubjects, I ſhould leſs wonder at any endeavours 1722. " to alienate the affections of my people, and " draw them into measures, that can end in no- " thing but their own destruction.

" But to hope to persuade a free people, in " full enjoyment of all that is dear and valuable " to them, to exchange freedom for slavery, the " Protestant Religion for Popery, and to sacri- " fice at once the price of so much blood and " treasure, as have been spent in defence of our " present Establishment, seems an infatuation " not to be accounted for. But, however vain " and unsuccessful these desperate projects may " prove in the end, they have at present so far " the desired effect, as to create uneasiness and " diffidence in the minds of my people; which " our enemies labour to improve to their own " advantage. By forming plots they depreciate " all property, that is vested in the public " funds, and then complain of the low state of " credit. They make an increase of the na- " tional expences necessary, and then clamour " at the burthen of taxes, and endeavour to im- " pute to my Government, as grievances, the " mischiefs and calamities, which they alone " create and occasion.

" I wish for nothing more, than to see the " public expences lessened, and the great na- " tional debt put in a method of being gradually " reduced and discharged, with a strict regard " to parliamentary faith; and a more favour- " able opportunity could never have been hoped " for, than the state of profound peace, which " we now enjoy with all our neighbours. But " public credit will always languish under daily " alarms and apprehensions of public danger. " And, as the enemies of our peace have been a- " ble to bring this immediate mischief upon us, " nothing can prevent them from continuing to " subject the Nation to new and constant diffi- " culties and distresses, but the wisdom, zeal, " and vigorous resolutions of this Parliament.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

" I have ordered the accounts to be made up, " and laid before you, of the extraordinary " charge, that has been incurred this summer, " for the defence and safety of the Kingdom; " and I have been particularly careful, not to " direct any expence to be made greater or " sooner than was of absolute necessity.

" I have likewise ordered estimates to be pre- " pared, and laid before you, for the service of " the year ensuing; and I hope the further " provisions, which the treasonable practices of " our enemies have made necessary for our com- " mon safety, may be ordered with such fruga- " lity, as very little to exceed the Supplies of " the last year.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

" I need not tell you of what infinite concern " it is to the peace and tranquillity of the King- " dom, that this Parliament should, upon this " occasion, exert themselves with a more than " ordinary zeal and vigour. An intire union " among all, that sincerely wish well to the pre- " sent Establishment, is now become absolutely " necessary. Our enemies have too long taken " advantage from your differences and dissen- " sions. Let it be known, that the spirit of " Popery, which breathes nothing but confusion " to the civil and religious rights of a Protestant " Church and Kingdom, however abandoned " some few may be, in despite of all obligations " divine and human, has not so far possessed my " people, as to make them ripe for such a fatal " change. Let the world see, that the general " disposition of the Nation is no invitation to " foreign powers to invade us, nor encourage- " ment to domestic enemies to kindle a civil war " in the bowels of the Kingdom. Your own " interest and welfare call upon you to defend " yourselves. I shall wholly rely upon the Di- " vine Protection, the support of my Parliament, " and the affections of my people, which I shall " endeavour to preserve, by steadily adhering " to the Constitution in Church and State, and " continuing to make the laws of the Realm " the rule and measure of all my actions."

The addresses of thanks were full of the sen- timents which so strong and pathetic a speech naturally produced. The detestation and abhor- rence, as well as the indignation conceived by both Houses, at the hearing of these traiterous and dangerous designs against his Majesty in fa- vour of a Popish Pretender were unspeakable. The Commons especially expressed themselves in a very affecting manner: 'We cannot ex- press too great an abhorrence of such unnatural practices, nor too great an indignation against those who would have made the Capital of this flourishing Kingdom a scene of blood and deso- lation. Wicked men! whilst they have the malice to revile your Government, and attempt to overturn it, at the same time have the inso- lence to depend upon the clemency of it for their security: While they are endeavouring to destroy all liberty, they are clamouring that a few of them are, for the public safety, confined: Whilst they are attempting to destroy all pro- perty, they are murmuring at the necessary taxes given to your Majesty for the security of it: And, whilst they act against all law themselves, they trust, and are confident, that, even in their own cases, the laws of the Realm will be the rule and measure of your actions.' To this were added assurances of not only making good all the extraordinary expences already incurred, but of chearfully granting whatever should be neces- sary for the safety of the Kingdom, as they were entirely convinced, that they could by no other means restore public credit, and attempt the gradual reduction of the great national debt, than by doing every thing in their power for the support of his Majesty's Government, and happy establishment in his Royal Family.

The expressions of doing every thing in their power were objected against by some Members as too general, and it was moved to add the words, with due regard to the liberty of the Sub- ject, the Constitution in Church and State, and the Laws now in force. But the motion was reject- ed, upon Mr. Pulteney's representing, that such a clause would be injurious to the King, since it would look like making a condition or bar- gain with the King, and tacitly imply, either that the laws had already been infringed, or that the Commons were jealous, lest his Majesty should, for the future, break in upon the Con- stitution.

As the diſcovery of the plot made the ſuſpenſion of the Habeas Corpus act neceſſary, a bill was brought in for that purpoſe the very firſt day of the Seſſion, by the Duke of Grafton, Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, who repreſented the neceſſity of ſtrengthening the hands of the King's Miniſters, in order to a full detection and entire ſuppreſſion of the traiterous deſigns and practices againſt the Government, by impowering his Majeſty to ſecure all ſuſpected perſons. Accordingly, it was propoſed that the Habeas Corpus act ſhould be ſuſpended till the 24th of October 1723.

This was oppoſed chiefly by the Earls of Angleſea, Cowper, Strafford, and Coningſby, and the Lords Trevor, Bathurſt, and Bingley, who repreſented, that, the Habeas Corpus act being, on all hands, admitted to be the greateſt and ſtrongeſt bulwark of Engliſh liberty, it did not conſiſt with the wiſdom of Parliament to ſuſpend it, without an abſolute neceſſity. That, indeed, in caſes of actual Rebellion, or intended Invaſion, that act had been, at times before, ſuſpended; but yet this was done ſparingly, by degrees, and never for above the term of ſix months. That this conſideration put them under a very melancholy apprehenſion for the very being or effect of that excellent law, ſince the ſuſpenſion of it for a year might be as good a precedent for the ſuſpending it, on another occaſion, for the term of two years, as any former precedent was now for the preſent ſuſpenſion. That, the horrid and deteſtable Conſpiracy, which occaſioned this ſuſpenſion, having been diſcovered and notified to the City of London above five months before, and divers of the Conſpirators impriſoned for it a conſiderable time paſt, it was very unreaſonable to ſuppoſe, that the danger of this plot, in the hands of an able, faithful, and diligent Miniſtry, would continue for a year or more yet to come; and that in ſo high a degree, as to require a ſuſpenſion of the liberty of the ſubject; for ſo they took the Habeas Corpus act to be. That, indeed, their juſt apprehenſions would, in a great meaſure, be removed, if they could flatter themſelves with the hopes, that his Majeſty, on whoſe known equity, goodneſs, and clemency, they intirely depended, would remain among us, during the whole time of this ſuſpenſion: But that his Majeſty, not having viſited his Dominions abroad theſe two laſt years, would, very probably, leave the Kingdom the next ſpring to that end. That, in his Majeſty's abſence, this great power of ſuſpecting and impriſoning the ſubjects at will, and detaining them in priſon till the 24th of October 1723, and for as much longer time, as till they can, after that, take the benefit of the Habeas Corpus act (if they could then do it at all) would be lodged in the hands of our fellow-ſubjects, who could not be ſuppoſed to be above all prejudices and partialities, as their Lordſhips were ſure his Majeſty was; and who, beſides, might have private piques and reſentments to gratify. That this bill did, in effect, veſt the Miniſters with an authority almoſt as arbitrary and extenſive as that of a Roman Dictator, ſince they might inflict, even on innocent perſons (who ſhould have the misfortune to diſpleaſe them) a puniſhment of above a year's impriſonment, which comes little ſhort of death, and which oftentimes occaſions it. That the Dictatorian power among the Romans was always ended or laid down immediately after the occaſion; for which it was given, was over; and it was remarkable, that it was never continued much longer, till a little before the Roman Commonwealth (from which all other States draw ſo many maxims of Government) loſt its liberty. That ſo long a ſuſpenſion of the Habeas Corpus act weakens the proviſion made in the bill for the Members of either Houſe of Parliament, that they ſhall not be committed or detained, ſitting the Parliament, until the matter be firſt communicated, and the conſent obtained of the Houſes reſpectively, ſince it is very probable, the Parliament will not be ſitting the greateſt part of the time, for which this bill was enacted, and would continue a law. That ſuch is the weakneſs of human nature, that the apprehenſion of what might befall a Member of Parliament, while the Parliament is not ſitting, might have ſome influence on the freedom of Parliament. And, upon the whole matter, ſince ſo long a ſuſpenſion was liable to ſo many inconveniencies, they thought it adviſable and conſiſtent with the uſual prudence of that Auguſt Aſſembly, to reduce it to the term of ſix months; at the end of which, if there appeared to be a neceſſity for it, it might be continued ſix months longer, as was done before in this very Reign, during the late Rebellion. 1722.

Theſe objections to the bill itſelf, or continuance of it for a year, were anſwered by the Lords Townſhend, Harcourt, Carteret, the Dukes of Argyle, Wharton, and Newcaſtle, and ſome others. They repreſented, 'That the Habeas Corpus act had been ſuſpended upon much leſs important occaſions, upon bare intimations of a plot; whereas the King had now laid before the Parliament the particulars of a Conſpiracy to introduce a Popiſh Prince: That it was neceſſary the ſuſpenſion ſhould continue a whole year, ſince the Conſpirators (who probably would lie ſtill all the winter) would exert themſelves in the ſummer when the Parliament was up; and might flatter themſelves with the hopes of foreign aſſiſtance.' After theſe debates, the ſuſpenſion, being put to the vote, was carried without a diviſion, and the bill was ſent down to the Commons.

The debates (which ran chiefly upon the continuance of it) were much the ſame as in the Houſe of Lords. Mr. Spencer Cowper ſaid, 'That he and all his family had come as early and readily into the Revolution, and, on all occaſions, had appeared as zealous for the preſent happy Eſtabliſhment, as any one: But yet he could not be of opinion to truſt the liberties of the people in the hands of any Miniſtry, for ſo long a time as above a year. That neither in King William's nor Queen Anne's Reigns, nor ſince his preſent Majeſty's Acceſſion to the Throne, even in times of open and actual Rebellion, the Habeas Corpus act had ever been ſuſpended for above ſix months; and therefore he moved, that the preſent ſuſpenſion might be limited to that term.' Sir Joſeph Jekyll added, 'That, if, at the end of thoſe ſix months, there appeared to be a neceſſity for a farther ſuſpenſion, he ſhould, and he doubted not but the whole Houſe would readily come into it.' At laſt, Mr. Robert Walpole roſe up, and laid before the Aſſembly ſome particulars of the dangerous Conſpiracy, which for ſome time had been, and was ſtill carrying on, for the utter ſubverſion of the 1722. the preſent happy Settlement. He ſaid, 'That this wicked deſign was formed about Chriſtmas laſt: That the Conſpirators had at firſt made application to ſome Potentates abroad, for an aſſiſtance of five thouſand men: That being denied, they afterwards (about the month of April) made farther application and earneſt inſtances for three thouſand men: Being again diſappointed in their expectations from foreign aſſiſtance, they reſolved deſperately to go on, confiding in their own ſtrength, and fondly depending on the diſaffection in England: That their firſt attempt was to have been the ſeizing of the Bank, the Exchequer, and ſuch other places, where the public money was lodged: That the Government had undoubted informations of this plot ever ſince May laſt; but, nevertheleſs, thought fit not to take up any body, becauſe, there being then two terms coming on together, the Conſpirators would have had the benefit of the Habeas Corpus act; and ſo the apprehending them was put off till the long vacation.' He added, 'That the traiterous deſigns againſt his Majeſty's Perſon and Government had been carrying on ever ſince the death of the late Queen; and it could be proved, that there had been a meeting of ſome conſiderable perſons, one of whom was not far off, wherein it had been propoſed to proclaim the Pretender at the Royal Exchange: That an exact account of this deteſtable Conſpiracy would, in due time, be laid before the Parliament: And, as to the buſineſs now before them, though it was true, that the Habeas Corpus act had never before been ſuſpended for above ſix months; yet, conſidering the Lords had made this ſuſpenſion for a whole year, if the Commons ſhould go about to alter it, the ſame might occaſion a difference between the two Houſes, which, at this time of jealouſy and danger, might ſound ill in foreign Courts.' After this ſpeech, the bill paſſed the Houſe as ſent down by the Lords, and, on the 17th of October, received the Royal aſſent.

Purſuant to a clauſe in the act, that no Member of either Houſe ſhould be impriſoned during their ſitting, till the matter be firſt communicated to the Houſe, and their conſent obtained, the King by the Lord Carteret deſired the conſent of the Lords to detain priſoners the Biſhop of Rocheſter, the Lord North and Grey, and the Earl of Orrery, which was readily given.

Soon after paſſing the bill, the Duke of Norfolk was taken into cuſtody at the Bath, and brought up to London. He was examined by the Council, and afterwards committed to the Tower on ſuſpicion of High-Treaſon.

When the Lord Townſhend acquainted the Peers with this affair, thoſe that oppoſed the ſuſpenſion of the Habeas Corpus act were againſt conſenting to the Duke's commitment. They repreſented, that the cauſe and ground of his being ſuſpected of High-Treaſon ſhould be communicated to the Houſe, and that a general ſuſpicion was not ſufficient: That this would ſubject every Peer, even while the Parliament was ſitting, to unwarrantable impriſonments, and might produce very ill effects. But their reaſons were not heard, and after a long debate the Houſe conſented to the Duke's being detained priſoner in the Tower.

The Pretender's declaration.

As a farther proof of the Plot, the King, on the 16th of November, ſent the following meſſage to the Houſe of Peers:

'His Majeſty having been informed, that many ſcandalous declarations in print have been by ſeveral foreign poſts tranſmitted into this Kingdom, in order to be diſperſed among his good and faithful ſubjects, to poiſon their minds, and ſeduce them from their allegiance; ſeveral of thoſe declarations have, by his Majeſty's order, ever ſince his Majeſty received from both Houſes of Parliament the laſt moſt ſolemn and acceptable aſſurances of their fidelity, been intercepted; and amongſt them an original in writing, ſigned, as his Majeſty has good reaſon to believe by the Pretender himſelf. This, together with one of the printed copies, his Majeſty has ordered to be laid before you, as a matter not unworthy of your conſideration.'

This declaration (dated September 20, 1722, at Lucca) was directed by James III, King of England, Scotland, and Ireland, to all his loving ſubjects of the three Nations, and to all foreign Princes and States, to ſerve as a foundation for a laſting peace in Europe, and ſigned James Rex. The Pretender begins with ſhewing how fond he is of his ſubjects; that, though the obligation he owes to his own honour be great, yet the obligation to the ſafety and tranquillity of his native Country is above all ties the deareſt to him and the tendereſt. He then talks of the late violations to the freedom of elections: Of Conſpiracies invented on purpoſe to give pretence for new oppreſſions: Of infamous informers: And a ſtate of proſcription in which he concludes every honeſt well-meaning man to be. Theſe conſiderations have engaged him to enter ſeriouſly into himſelf, and examine his heart, what ſacrifice to make on his own part for the public peace, eſpecially of theſe Kingdoms, of which he is the natural and undoubted father. Then he propoſes, that, if King George will quietly deliver to him the poſſeſſion of his Throne, he will in return beſtow upon him the title of King in his native Dominions, and invite all other States to confirm it, with a promiſe to leave to him his ſucceſſion to the Britiſh Dominions ſecure, whenever in due courſe his natural right ſhall take place. As motives to this reſignation, he ſays, that in King George's native Dominions an unconteſtable right will free him from the crime and reproach of tyranny, and repreſents the difference between a calm undiſturbed reign over a willing people, and a reſtleſs poſſeſſion in a ſtrange land, where authority, forcing the inclinations of the people, can only be ſupported by blood and violence, eternally ſubject to fears and alarms, even when no danger appears. He concludes with ſaying, King George's ſettlement here is frail and uncertain, becauſe his title ſhall, whilſt the Pretender has health or any deſcendants in being, be for ever diſputed, conjuring him, inſtead of adviſing with an imperious Miniſtry, as much his tyrants as the Nation's, to conſult his reaſon, to ask his conſcience, and to examine his intereſt and glory, and then his very ambition will admoniſh him to deſcend from a Throne, which muſt be always ſhaking, to mount another, where his ſeat will be firm and ſecure.

When this declaration was read in the Houſe of Lords, it was unanimouſly reſolved, that it was a falſe, inſolent, and traiterous libel, the higheſt higheſt indignity to the King, full of preſumption and arrogance, in ſuppoſing the Pretender in a condition to offer terms to his Majeſty, and injurious to the honour of the Britiſh Nation, in imagining that a free Proteſtant people, happy under the Government of the beſt of Princes, could be ſo infatuated, as, without the utmoſt contempt and indignation, to hear of any terms from a Popiſh bigotted Pretender. Then they ordered the declaration to be burnt at the Royal Exchange. The King's meſſage, the declaration, and the Lords reſolution being communicated to the Commons, they agreed with the Lords, only adding, that the Sheriffs ſhould attend in perſon at the burning of the declaration. An addreſs was preſented by both Houſes, expreſſing their utmoſt aſtoniſhment and indignation at the ſurprizing inſolence of the Pretender, and aſſuring, they were determined to ſupport the King's title to the Crown, with their lives and fortunes (1).

The Commons proceeding to conſider of the ways and means to raiſe the Supplies, a motion was made, that, towards defraying the expences occaſioned by the late rebellion and diſorders, the ſum of 100,000*l.* ſhould be raiſed (in lieu of all forfeitures and profits of the two thirds of their regiſtered eſtates) upon the real and perſonal eſtates of all Papiſts or perſons educated in the Popiſh Religion. This was oppoſed by Sir Wilfred Lawſon and Dr. Friend, who ſaid, that ſuch an extraordinary tax would carry the face of perſecution, which was inconſiſtent with the principles and temper of the Proteſtant Religion: Adding, ſome of thoſe, who had their education in foreign Seminaries, proved ſome of the beſt friends to the preſent Government. To this Mr. Yonge anſwered, That he knew very little of foreign education, but he doubted very much, that loyalty to King George was taught by Prieſts and Jeſuits in Romiſh Seminaries. The Lord Gage, who was bred a Roman Catholic, and had ſeveral relations of that Religion, ſaid, That he believed moſt of them to be very loyal ſubjects, though, by their principles, they cannot take the oath of Supremacy; and therefore he propoſed, that a new oath of Allegiance might be framed for them. Mr. William Thompſon ſpoke on the ſame ſide, and declared his abhorrence of perſecuting any body on account of their opinions in Religion. This was anſwered by Recorder Thompſon, who ſtated the true notion of perſecution, which, in his opinion, was only when any one is puniſhed for his particular opinion in Religion, and for ſerving God according to that opinion, and the dictates of his conſcience. But that (ſaid he) was not the caſe here, for the extraordinary tax, now intended to be raiſed upon the Papiſts, was not a puniſhment for their being Roman Catholics, but on account of penalties they had at divers times incurred for being enemies to the Civil Government, raiſing rebellions, and contriving plots againſt the State. At laſt, Mr. Walpole repreſented 'the great dangers this Nation had been in, ever ſince the Reformation, from the conſtant endeavours of Popery to ſubvert our happy Conſtitution and the Proteſtant Religion, by the moſt cruel, violent, and unjuſtifiable methods: That he would not take upon him to charge any particular perſon among them with being concerned in the preſent horrid Conſpiracy: But that it was notorious to the whole world, that many of them had been engaged in the Preſton Rebellion, and ſome were executed for it; and the preſent Plot was contrived at Rome, and countenanced in Popiſh Countries: That many of the Papiſts were not only well-wiſhers to it, but had contributed large ſums of money towards carrying it on; and therefore he thought it very reaſonable, ſince they made ſuch ſavings of the incomes of their eſtates, that the ſame ſhould go towards the great expence they and the Pretender's friends had put the Nation to.' In the courſe of the bill, which was ordered to be brought in, the friends of the Roman Catholics, when they ſaw it was like to paſs, took the opportunity of a thin Houſe, to clog it with a clauſe for including the Papiſts and Nonjurors of Scotland, 1722.

(1) The addreſs was as follows:

'We your Majeſty's moſt dutiful and faithful ſubjects, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons in Parliament aſſembled, being deeply affected with the ſenſe of thoſe many bleſſings, which we have conſtantly enjoyed, and hope long to enjoy, under your Majeſty's moſt juſt and gracious Government; and being thoroughly convinced, that our religious and civil rights, as well as the very being of the Britiſh Name and Conſtitution, do, under God, intirely depend upon the preſervation of your Majeſty's ſacred Perſon, and of the Proteſtant Succeſſion, as ſettled by law in your Royal line, are filled with the utmoſt aſtoniſhment and indignation at the unexampled preſumption and arrogance of the Pretender to your Dominions, in daring to offer ſuch an indignity to your Majeſty and the Britiſh Nation, as to declare to your ſubjects, and to all foreign Princes and States, that he finds himſelf in a condition to offer terms to your Majeſty, and even to capitulate with you for the abſolute ſurrender of the Religion and Liberties of a free Nation.

However great the infatuation of his Adviſers may be, we are ſenſible, nothing could have raiſed his or their hopes to ſo extravagant a degree of preſumption, but repeated encouragements and aſſurances from the Conſpirators at home, founded on the moſt injurious and groſs miſrepreſentations of the inclinations and affections of your Majeſty's ſubjects; and a raſh concluſion, that becauſe ſome, from whom it ought leaſt to have been expected, had broke through the ſolemn reſtraint of reiterated oaths, in order to raiſe themſelves on the ruin of their Country; therefore the whole body of the Nation was ripe for the ſame fatal defection, and ready to exchange the mild and legal Government of a moſt indulgent Prince, for the boundleſs rage of an attainted Fugitive, bred up in the maxims of tyranny and ſuperſtition.

But we, your Majeſty's moſt dutiful and loyal ſubjects, reſolve, by a ſteady and conſtant adherence to your Government, to wipe off this ſtain and imputation from the name of Britons, and to convince the world, that thoſe wicked deſigns, formed againſt your Majeſty's ſacred Perſon and Government, which the inſolence of this declaration proves to be moſt real, while it affects to treat them as imaginary, are impracticable againſt a Prince relying on, and ſupported by the vigour and duty of a Britiſh Parliament, and the affections of his people.

And we beg leave, in the moſt ſolemn manner, to aſſure your Majeſty, that neither the impotent menaces of foreign aſſiſtance, nor the utmoſt efforts of domeſtic traitors, ſhall ever deter us from ſtanding by your Majeſty with our lives and fortunes, and ſupporting your Majeſty's moſt juſt title to the Crown of theſe Realms, againſt the Pretender, and all his open and ſecret Abettors, both at home and abroad.

1722. Scotland, which was carried by five voices only in the Committee. But, when this amendment came to be conſidered by the Houſe, Mr. Walpole repreſented, That, the names and real eſtates of the Scots Papiſts and Nonjurors not being regiſtered, it was impoſſible to aſcertain their proportion of this tax. Upon which the clauſe was rejected, and the bill, having paſſed, was ſent up to the Lords, where it was alſo agreed to with another bill from the Commons, to oblige all perſons, being Papiſts, in Scotland, and all perſons in Great-Britain refuſing or neglecting to take the oaths appointed for the ſecurity of the King's Perſon and Government, to regiſter their names and real eſtates. Both theſe bills received the Royal aſſent.

Trial of Layer.

Mr. Layer was brought to his trial on the 21ſt of November, at the King's-Bench. His indictment ſet forth, 'That he had been employed in forming a moſt traiterous and horrid Plot and Conſpiracy againſt his Majeſty and his Government, by inliſting men in Eſſex for the Pretender's ſervice, in order to ſtir up a Rebellion; and alſo, that he had held correſpondence with the Pretender, by carrying letters and treaſonable papers to him beyond ſeas, and from him to his Majeſty's diſaffected ſubjects in this Kingdom.' The firſt evidence proved, that the Earl of Cadogan was to be ſeized, and the Tower at the ſame time; afterwards the Bank of England, and then his Majeſty and the Prince of Wales. The inliſting men for the Pretender was proved by ſeveral perſons, to whom Mr. Layer had given money; and, after a trial of about eighteen hours, he was found guilty, and received ſentence of death; but, being reprieved from time to time, the Houſe of Commons appointed a Committee to examine him in relation to the Conſpiracy, conſiſting of Spencer Compton, the Speaker; Robert Walpole, Chancellor of the Exchequer; Sir Joſeph Jekyll, Maſter of the Rolls; Paul Methuen, Comptroller of the Houſhold; William Pulteney; John Smith, Teller of the Exchequer; Richard Hampden, Lieutenant General Wills, and Sir Robert Sutton. They choſe Stephen Poyntz to be their Secretary. Mr. Layer's reprieve was prolonged on this occaſion, and, his trial not being publiſhed, the Earl of Angleſey, in the Houſe of Lords, took notice, 'That, at the opening of this Seſſion, his Majeſty, in his ſpeech from the Throne, had been pleaſed to acquaint both Houſes with the diſcovery of a dangerous Conſpiracy, which for ſome time had been formed, and was ſtill carrying on againſt his Perſon and Government: That ſome of the Conſpirators had been taken up and ſecured; and that endeavours were uſed for the apprehending others. That, one of the principal Plotters having ſince that time been tried and condemned, it was ſomewhat ſtrange, that no particulars relating to the Conſpiracy had yet been communicated to that Houſe, the rather, becauſe ſeveral of their Members had been apprehended, and were ſtill confined, on ſuſpicion of being concerned in it.' And therefore he moved, 'That the Judges of the King's-Bench be ordered to cauſe the trial of Chriſtopher Layer to be forthwith printed and publiſhed, being firſt peruſed by the King's Council.' This motion was ſupported by the Earls Cowper, Strafford, and Aylesford, the Lords Trevor, Bathurſt, Lechmere, and ſome others. To this it was anſwered by the Lord Carteret, 'That the order moved for was altogether unneceſſary, directions having been long before given by the Judges for the printing and publiſhing of the trial with all convenient ſpeed: That the trial being of a very large extent, and ſeveral parts of it, that were taken down in ſhort-hand, requiring a great deal of time to be reviſed and rectified by the Judges and the Council on both ſides, had occaſioned the delay complained of; but that, the printing of the trial being now in great forwardneſs, the ſame would be publiſhed in a few days.' Upon this a motion for an order to the Judges was rejected, and about a week after the trial was publiſhed. However, ſixteen Lords entered their proteſts. 1722.

Theſe debates probably haſtened the publiſhing of the trial; and, though Layer was ſtill reprieved from time to time, in hopes that he would make a full diſcovery of the plot, he waved it; and therefore he was at laſt executed at Tyburn, his head being carried to Newgate, and the next day fixed up at Temple-Bar; but his quarters were delivered to thoſe, who came for them. He was attended at his death by Mr. George Hawkins and Mr. John Berryman, two Clergymen. His ſpeech was very ſhort; but in it he juſtified himſelf in what he had done, and recommended the intereſt of the Pretender. He delivered a paper to Mr. Price, the Under-Sheriff, and another to a friend. 1722. Layer executed, May

The report of the Committee appointed to examine Mr. Layer, and others, having been delivered to the Houſe on the 1ſt of March, by Mr. Pulteney, the Chairman, it appeared from thence, that a deſign had been long carrying on by perſons of figure and diſtinction at home, in conjunction with traitors abroad, for placing the Pretender on the Throne of theſe Kingdoms. That various methods had been attempted, and various times fixed for putting this deſign in execution. That the firſt intention was to have procured a regular body of foreign forces to invade theſe Kingdoms at the time of the late elections; but that the Conſpirators, being diſappointed in this expectation, next reſolved to make an attempt at the time, that it was generally believed the King intended to go to Hanover, by the help of ſuch Officers and Soldiers, as could paſs into England unobſerved from abroad, under the command of the late Duke of Ormond, who was to have landed in the river with a great quantity of arms, provided in Spain for that purpoſe, at which time the Tower was likewiſe to have been made a place for arms. But this deſign being alſo diſappointed by the diſcoveries made in England, and the King's putting off his journey; by the incampment of his forces at home, as well as the ſending for thoſe from Ireland, and by the readineſs of his Allies the States-General, to aſſiſt him in caſe of need; by the orders given in Spain, that the late Duke of Ormond ſhould not be ſuffered to paſs through that Kingdom, the Conſpirators found themſelves under a neceſſity of deferring their enterprize till the breaking up of the camp: During that interval they were labouring by their agents and emiſſaries to corrupt and ſeduce the Officers and Soldiers of the army, and depended ſo much on this defection, as to entertain hopes of placing the Pretender on the Throne, tho' they ſhould obtain no aſſiſtance from abroad, which nevertheleſs they ſtill continued to ſollicit for. Report of the Committee to examine Layer.

The truth and reality of theſe deſigns were confirmed by the concurrent advices from almoſt all parts of Europe, ſent by perſons who appeared to have had no communication with each other. Theſe advices were alſo verified by ſeveral diſcoveries made at home by the informations and confeſſions of the parties concerned, as well as by a long ſeries of correſpondence which the Conſpirators furniſhed the Government againſt themſelves. 1722-23.

From ſeveral letters and circumſtances it appeared, that the firſt deſign was to have been executed with the aſſiſtance of foreign forces, at the time of the elections; that the Pretender, the late Duke of Ormond, Lord Orrery, and the Biſhop of Rocheſter, were of this opinion; that memorials were drawn up here, to be preſented to the Regent for this purpoſe, and that thoſe memorials were actually preſented, or, at leaſt, application made to the Regent in conſequence of them, by directions from perſons in England; and that ſuch diſpoſitions had been made for this enterprize at that time, as broke out into riots at ſome of the elections; which muſt have been allowed to have been no unfavourable juncture for ſuch an attempt, conſidering the diſcontents occaſioned by the late South-Sea ſcheme, which the Conſpirators have all along flattered themſelves they ſhould be able to improve into a ſpirit of Rebellion, and the liberties uſually taken at ſuch a ſeaſon, when all the Freeholders of England are neceſſarily aſſembled together, and when the whole Nation is too apt to be in a ferment, even in the quieteſt times.

This deſign failing, on account (as it is reaſonable to believe) of the Conſpirators not being able to obtain the forces they ſollicited from abroad, and of their being themſelves divided in opinion as to the time and manner of execution, their next endeavour was to attempt an inſurrection at the time, when they ſuppoſed his Majeſty would be going to Hanover. For it appeared by ſeveral particulars, that the Duke of Ormond was to have landed in England with officers and arms about that time. The reaſon of Ormond's not coming proceeded from the orders iſſued at Madrid and in France to prevent him, and by the King's not going abroad. In a letter to one of the Secretaries of State from Rome, notice was taken, that a perſon of great diſtinction at that place had declared it as his opinion, that the grand project formed in the Conclave, for placing the Pretender on the Throne of Britain, was going to be put in execution; but that the ſame perſon afterwards aſſigned four reaſons for its having miſcarried, which were, the want of money, the ſuſpected faith of the Regent, the want of ſkill in thoſe who were to conduct it, and the puſillanimity of the Pretender, who, to avoid hazarding his own perſon, propoſed to ſend his child.

The Report farther obſerved, that the Leaders, in order (as it is natural to believe) to ſave themſelves from the danger of legal conviction, choſe to manage their correſpondences by the intervention of perſons of a meaner rank and figure, and of deſperate fortunes, who, they hoped, might eſcape the obſervation of the Government; being no otherwiſe conſiderable, than as the truſt repoſed in them made them ſo. Of theſe inferior Agents, Layer appears to have been principally intruſted by Lord North and Grey, and Lord Orrery; and Plunket, who travelled with Layer to Rome, and whoſe treaſonable practices and correſpondences are cloſely connected with thoſe of Layer, writes of himſelf as tranſacting part of his treaſons with Lord Orrery's Clerk, and ſends frequent accounts to the Pretender's Agents abroad, of matters relating to the ſaid Lord.

George Kelly, a Nonjuring Clergyman, appears to have been the perſon principally entruſted by the Biſhop of Rocheſter, and to have been employed in writing for him, and conveying letters to him, until the time that he, Kelly, was firſt taken into cuſtody; after which, it appears to the Committee, that Thomas Carte, another Nonjuring Clergyman, was entruſted and employed by the Biſhop in the ſame manner; and the Committee obſerved, that George Kelly's Correſpondence has a cloſe connexion with that of Dennis Kelly, and likewiſe that he appears to have been privy to Plunket's and Neynoe's tranſactions.

The perſon employed by the Duke of Norfolk, in conveying letters between him, and George Jernegan, an Agent of the Pretender's in Flanders, they find to be Mrs. Spelman, alias Yallop, who has likewiſe owned her conveying letters in the ſame manner between Mr. Harvey of Comb, and one Moore of Brownloe Street, and the ſaid Jernegan; the Committee obſerve, that John Sample acted under the direction of Mr. Sempil (commonly called Lord Sempil) and his ſon at Paris; and that he wrote letters to the late Duke of Ormond and the Pretender.

After the reading of the report, it was moved by Mr. Pulteney, that this queſtion might be put, 'That upon conſideration of the report, and the ſeveral papers and examinations relating to the Conſpiracy, it appears to this Houſe, that a deteſtable and horrid Conſpiracy has been formed and carried on by perſons of figure and diſtinction, and their agents and inſtruments, in conjunction with Traitors abroad, for invading theſe Kingdoms with foreign forces, for raiſing Inſurrections and a Rebellion at home, for ſeizing the Tower, and the City of London, for laying violent hands upon the Perſons of his moſt ſacred Majeſty and the Prince of Wales, in order to ſubvert our preſent happy Eſtabliſhment in Church and State, by placing a Popiſh Pretender upon the Throne.' This queſtion, after a ſhort debate, was carried without dividing; and then Mr. Pelham moved, 'That it appears to this Houſe, that Chriſtopher Layer, in his ſeveral examinations before the Lords of the Council, and the Committee of this Houſe, has groſsly prevaricated, ſuppreſſed the truth, contradicted himſelf, and endeavoured, as far as in him lies, to diſguiſe and conceal the horrid and deteſtable Conſpiracy:' Which was alſo carried in the ſame manner. After this, the Attorney-General moved, 'That it appears to this Houſe, that John Plunket has been a principal Agent and Inſtrument in the Conſpiracy, and has carried on ſeveral treaſonable correſpondences to procure a foreign force to invade theſe Kingdoms, to raiſe Inſurrections and a Rebellion at home, and was engaged with others in the villainous and execrable deſign, of laying violent hands upon his Majeſty's moſt ſacred Perſon.' This queſtion being carried with very little oppoſition, the Attorney-General moved again, for a bill to inflict certain pains and penalties on John Plunket. Though this motion was warmly oppoſed, yet, 1722-23 yet, after a long debate, it was carried by a majority of 289 againſt 130, and the bill, being brought in, paſſed both Houſes: But thirty-one Lords entered their proteſts againſt it. A few days after, the Sollicitor-General made the like motion in the caſe of George Kelly, and a bill was alſo paſſed againſt him, which was attended with the ſame proteſts.

By theſe acts Plunket and Kelly were to be kept in cloſe cuſtody during his Majeſty's pleaſure, his Heirs and Succeſſors, in any priſon in Great-Britain; and, in caſe they ſhould break priſon, they and their aſſiſtants were to ſuffer death.

Act againſt Biſhop Atterbury.

The ſame day Mr. Yonge in a long ſpeech took notice, how deeply Dr. Francis Atterbury, Biſhop of Rocheſter, had been concerned in this deteſtable Conſpiracy; aggravating his crime from his holy function, and high ſtation in the Church of England, a Church ever conſpicuous for its loyalty; from the ſolemn oaths he had, on ſo many occaſions, taken to the Government, and by which he had abjured the Pretender; when at the ſame time he was traiterouſly conſpiring to bring him in, upon the ruin of his Country, and of all that was dear and valuable to us as Freemen and Chriſtians: Concluding, that as he was a diſgrace to his Order, and a diſhonour to the Church, ſo he might apply to him on this occaſion theſe words of the 1ſt of Acts, Verſe 20, Let his habitation be deſolate, and let no man dwell therein, and his Biſhopric let another take. And therefore he moved, 'That it appears to this Houſe, that Francis Lord Biſhop of Rocheſter was principally concerned in forming, directing, and carrying on the wicked and deteſtable Conſpiracy, for invading theſe Kingdoms with a foreign force, and for raiſing Inſurrections and Rebellions at home, in order to ſubvert our preſent happy Eſtabliſhment in Church and State, by placing a Popiſh Pretender upon the Throne.' Sir William Wyndham ſaid, he ſaw no cauſe to proceed againſt the Biſhop in ſo ſevere a manner, there being little or indeed no evidence beſides conjectures and hearſays. However, Mr. Yonge's motion was agreed to, and a bill was ordered to be brought in to inflict certain pains and penalties on Francis Biſhop of Rocheſter.

When the bill came to be read a ſecond time, the Biſhop ſent a letter to the Speaker, which he deſired might be communicated to the Houſe, and in which he ſaid, that, though conſcious of his own innocence, he ſhould decline giving the Houſe any trouble that day, and contented himſelf with the opportunity (if the bill went on) of making his defence before another, of which he had the honour to be a Member.' However the Commons proceeded in that affair, and, the Council for the bill being called in, and the bill read, the Council opened the evidence, and produced a ſcheme, taken amongſt Mr. Layer's papers, which was read, as were alſo ſeveral copies of letters ſtopped at the Poſt-Office. Then the Council examined ſeveral witneſſes to make good the allegations of the bill; produced ſeveral papers taken at his houſes at Weſtminſter and Bromley; as alſo a packet taken on one of his ſervants at the Tower of London; and examined two witneſſes, one to prove, that a letter and paper contained in the packet were his handwriting; and the other to prove, that a letter directed to Mr. Dubois, taken amongſt his papers at the Deanry at Weſtminſter, was ſealed with the ſame ſeal, with which the letter taken on his ſervant at the Tower was ſealed. Then the Council ſummed up the evidence, and, being withdrawn, the Speaker opened the bill, which was committed to a Grand Committee, on the 6th of April, when the leading men amongſt the Tories choſe to go out of the Houſe, ſo that only Mr. Lawſon, Mr. Ogletherpe, and two or three more, ſtaid to ſpeak in the Biſhop's behalf. When they came to the filling up the blank for pains and penalties, it was moved, that he ſhould be deprived of his office and benefice, baniſhed the Kingdom, be guilty of felony if he returned, and that it ſhould not be in the King's power to pardon him without conſent of Parliament; but without forfeiture of goods and chattels. Mr. Lawſon repreſented, that, the evidence againſt the Biſhop being all either hearſay or conjecture, and therefore not to be depended upon, he ought to have no puniſhment at all. Mr. Oglethorpe was of the ſame opinion, but gave it another turn. He ſaid, 'It was plain, the Pretender had none but a company of ſilly fellows about him; and it was to be feared, that, if the Biſhop, who was allowed to be a man of great parts, ſhould be baniſhed, he might be ſollicited and tempted to go to Rome, and there be in a capacity to do more miſchief by his advice, than if he was ſuffered to ſtay in England under the watchful eye of thoſe in power.' But the bill paſſed and was ſent up to the Lords; before whom the Biſhop was brought to his trial on the 9th of May; and, himſelf and his Council having been heard, the Lords in a Grand Committee went through the bill againſt him; and on the 15th the bill was read the third time; after which a motion being made for paſſing it, there aroſe a very long and warm debate (1).

Earl Powlet, who opened the debate, ſpoke to the nature of this bill, ſhewed the danger of ſuch an extraordinary proceeding, and urged, that the ſwerving from the fixed rules of evidence, and conſequently from juſtice, muſt inevitably be attended with the moſt fatal conſequences to our excellent Conſtitution. Dr. Willis, Biſhop of Salisbury, in anſwer to that, alledged,

(1) The Speakers for and againſt the bill were as follows:

Againſt the bill.	For the bill.
1. Earl Powlet,	2. Lord Biſhop of Salisbury,
3. Lord Biſhop of Cheſter,	4. Lord Biſhop of London,
5. Duke of Wharton,	9. Earl of Findlater and Seafield,
6. Lord Bathurſt,	10. Duke of Argyle,
7. Earl of Strafford,	12. Lord Lechmere,
8. Lord Trevor,	14. Earl of Peterborough,
11. Lord Gower,	15. Earl of Cholmondley.
13. Earl Cowper.

1723. ledged, that as extraordinary diſeaſes require extraordinary remedies; ſo in caſes of extreme danger and neceſſity, when the very being of the State lies at ſtake, if the common law cannot reach offenders, the Legiſlature ought to exert itſelf. He was replied to by Dr. Gaſtrell, Biſhop of Cheſter, who owned, that extraordinary proceedings may indeed be recurred to upon extraordinary occaſions, and when they are evidently neceſſary for the preſervation of the State; but that was very far from the preſent caſe, ſince the Conſpiracy, in which the Biſhop of Rocheſter was charged to have had a ſhare, had been diſcovered and diſappointed long before. The Duke of Wharton, in a long ſpeech, ſummoned up the whole evidence, which had been produced againſt the Biſhop of Rocheſter, and endeavoured to ſhew the inſufficiency of it to prove the charge; concluding, 'That, let the conſequences be what they would, he would not have ſuch a helliſh ſtain ſully the luſtre and glory of that illuſtrious Houſe, as to condemn a man without the leaſt evidence;' and therefore was for rejecting the bill. He was ſtrongly ſupported by Lord Bathurſt, who, in the firſt place, took notice of the ungracious diſtinctions, that were fixed upon the Members of that noble and illuſtrious Aſſembly, who differed in opinion from thoſe, who happened to have the majority. That, for his own part, as he had nothing in view but truth and juſtice, the good of his Country, the honour of that Houſe, and the diſcharging of his own conſcience, he would freely ſpeak his thoughts, notwithſtanding all diſcouragements: That he would not complain of the ſiniſter arts, that had been uſed of late to render ſome perſons obnoxious, and, under pretence of their being ſo, to open their letters about their minuteſt domeſtic affairs. For theſe ſmall grievances he could eaſily bear; but, when he ſaw things go ſo far, as to condemn a perſon of the higheſt dignity in the Church, in ſuch an unprecedented manner, and without any legal evidence, he thought it his duty to oppoſe a proceeding ſo unjuſt and unwarrantable in itſelf, and ſo dangerous and diſmal in its conſequences. To this purpoſe he begged leave to tell their Lordſhips a ſtory he had from ſeveral Officers of undoubted credit, who had ſerved in Flanders in the late war. A Frenchman, it ſeems, had invented a machine, which would not only kill more men at once, than any yet in uſe, but alſo diſable for ever any man, who ſhould be wounded by it. Big with hopes of a great reward, he applied himſelf to one of the Miniſters, who laid the project before the late French King; but that Monarch conſidering, that ſo deſtructive an engine might ſoon be turned againſt his own men, did not think proper to encourage it: Whereupon the Inventor came over into England, and offered his ſervice to ſome of our Generals, who likewiſe rejected the propoſal with indignation. The uſe and application of this ſtory is very obvious; for, if this way of proceeding be admitted, it will certainly prove a very dangerous engine. No man's life, liberty, or property will be ſafe. And if thoſe, who were in the Adminiſtration ſome years ago, and who had as great a ſhare in the affections of the people, as any that came after them, had made uſe of ſuch a political machine, ſome of thoſe noble perſons, who now appear ſo zealous promoters of this bill, would not be in a capacity to ſerve his Majeſty at this time. He added, that, if ſuch extraordinary proceedings went on, he ſaw nothing remaining for him and others to do, but to retire to their Country Houſes, and there, if poſſible, quietly enjoy their eſtates within their own families, ſince the leaſt correſpondence, the leaſt intercepted letter, might be made criminal. To this purpoſe he quoted a paſſage out of Cardinal de Retz's memoirs, relating to that wicked politician, Cardinal Mazarine, who boaſted, that, if he had but two lines of any man's writing, with a few circumſtances atteſted by witneſſes, he could cut off his head, when he pleaſed. He likewiſe animadverted on the majority of the venerable bench, towards which turning himſelf, he ſaid, he could hardly account for the inveterate hatred and malice ſome perſons bore the learned and ingenious Biſhop of Rocheſter, unleſs it was, that they were intoxicated with the infatuation of ſome of the wild Indians, who fondly believe they inherit not only the ſpoils, but even the abilities of any great enemy they kill. The Earl of Strafford ſpoke on the ſame ſide, as did alſo the Lord Trevor, who, among other arguments againſt the bill, urged, that, if men were in this unprecedented manner proceeded againſt without legal proof, in a ſhort time men would be tried as they were liked by Miniſters: That, for his own part, he believed he ſtood but indifferently in the opinion and liking of ſome perſons, and therefore he had reaſon to think himſelf more in danger, becauſe at preſent they wanted the protection of the law (meaning the ſuſpenſion of the Habeas Corpus act;) and, as in a ſhort time they were like to be ſo unhappy, as to be deprived of his Majeſty's perſonal protection, and were ſtill liable to be confined upon ſuſpicion, which he took to be no more than will and pleaſure, they were conſequently at the will and pleaſure of the Miniſters. That however no apprehenſion of what he might ſuffer ſhould deter him from doing what he thought his duty: That, conſonant to that principle, he had all along, and ſtill oppoſed theſe extraordinary proceedings, which tended to lodge an exorbitant power in their fellow-ſubjects. That, if he were to loſe his liberty, he had rather give it up to one ſingle tyrant, than to many; for a tyrant, if a man of common underſtanding, would, for his own ſake, be tender of the lives of his ſubjects; whereas many tyrants would endeavour to deſtroy one another, to get one another's preferments. The Lord Trevor having done ſpeaking, the Earl of Seafield endeavoured to ſhew, that the evidence, which had been produced before them, being ſufficient to convince any reaſonable man, that there had been a deteſtable Conſpiracy, and that the Biſhop of Rocheſter had a great ſhare in it, was likewiſe ſufficient to juſtify this extraordinary proceeding againſt him, eſpecially ſince they inflicted on him ſo light a puniſhment, conſidering the heinouſneſs of the crime. The Duke of Argyle purſued the ſame argument; run through and confuted the moſt eſſential parts of the Biſhop's defence; and aggravated his offence, by which he had debaſed his holy function and character, and acted contrary to the ſolemn repeated oaths he had taken. The Lord Gower ſpoke afterwards againſt the bill; but what ſurprized moſt people, the Lord Lechmere, who, on ſeveral occaſions, had expreſſed his diſlike of theſe extraordinary proceedings, declared it as his opi- 1723.

1723. nion, that there was ſufficient evidence to ſupport the charge. He was anſwered by Earl Cowper in a long ſpeech, importing in ſubſtance, That the ſtrongeſt argument, which had been urged for this bill, was neceſſity; but that, for his part, he ſaw no neceſſity, that could juſtify ſo unprecedented and ſo dangerous a proceeding. That, as already had been ſuggeſted, the Conſpiracy had above a twelve month before been happily diſcovered, and the effects of it conſequently prevented. That, beſides the intrinſic weight and ſtrength of the Government, by numerous offices and employments, civil and military, and the wealth and intereſt of the well-affected to his Majeſty's Perſon and the preſent happy Eſtabliſhment, the hands of thoſe at the helm had ſtill been fortified by the ſuſpenſion of the Habeas Corpus act, and the additional troops; ſo that, in his opinion, there could be no danger to the Government, if Plunket and Kelly were not priſoners for life, nor the Biſhop of Rocheſter ſent into baniſhment. That, on the contrary, if that Prelate's talent and genius lay in contriving and carrying on ſtate intrigues, he thought him leſs dangerous at home than abroad: That the other reaſons alledged to ſupport this extraordinary proceeding had no more weight in them than the firſt: That the known rules of evidence, as laid down at firſt, and eſtabliſhed by the law of the land, were the birth-right of every ſubject of this Nation, and ought to be conſtantly obſerved, not only in the inferior courts of judicature, but alſo in both Houſes of Parliament, till altered by the Legiſlature: That much had been ſaid of the power of Parliaments, which he owned was very great; but that, in his opinion, their abſolute power conſiſted only in making and repealing laws, and, till ſuch time as a law was repealed, every ſubject had a right to it. That the admitting of the precarious and uncertain evidence of the Clerks of the Poſt-Office was a very dangerous precedent: That in former times it was thought very grievous, that, in capital caſes, a man ſhould be affected by ſimilitude of hands: But here the caſe was much worſe, ſince it was allowed, that the Clerks of the Poſt-Office would carry the ſimilitude of hands four months in their minds. That theſe men might be honeſt, and ſwear to the beſt of their knowledge; but he was ſure, they were at leaſt very willing and forward evidence: For as he asked one of them, how he knew ſuch a paper to be Mr. Kelly's hand? He readily anſwered, 'He had ſeen the ſame four months before, and he was ſure it could be no other:' Whereas any man, who has never ſo little been converſant in the world, knows, that hands may be ſo well counterfeited, as not to be diſtinguiſhed. After this, he commended the Biſhop of Rocheſter's noble and brave carriage in not anſwering before the Houſe of Commons, whoſe proceeding in this unprecedented manner againſt a Lord of Parliament was ſuch an incroachment on the prerogative of the Peerage, that, if ſubmitted to by paſſing this bill, they might well be ſaid to be the laſt of Lords. 'Ultimus Romanorum, my Lords (ſaid he in the concluſion) was a character of honour and praiſe: But to be the laſt of Britiſh Peers, by giving up our antient privileges, will never, I doubt, admit of ſuch conſtruction; and therefore I am for rejecting this bill." Little was ſaid of any great weight after this ſpeech; and, about half an hour paſt nine the queſtion being put, it was reſolved in the affirmative, that the bill ſhould paſs, by a majority of 83 voices againſt 43; upon which ſeveral Lords entered their proteſt. 1723

By this act the Biſhop, from the 1ſt day of June 1723, was to be deprived of all offices, dignities, promotions, and benefices Eccleſiaſtical, and incapable of holding any for the future. He was alſo baniſhed the Realm, and, in caſe he returned, he was to ſuffer death, as well as all perſons that correſponded with him.

When the report and the other papers were communicated to the Lords by the Commons, the Earls of Scarſdale, Strafford, and Cowper, the Lords Craven, Gower, Bathurſt, and Bingley complained, that, in the examinations, it is ſet forth, that John Plunket told Layer, that they were of a club or meeting, called, in Plunket's letters, Burford's Club (1). Theſe Lords ſeverally declared the ſame to be falſe and groundleſs: And Earl Cowper in particular made a long ſpeech, complaining of being mentioned in the Report, on the bare hearſay of an infamous perſon, which was enough to give an air of fiction to the whole Conſpiracy; and then moved, that Plunket ſhould be ſent for and examined. The Lord Townſhend anſwered, 'That he was much ſurprized to find that a noble Peer, whoſe abilities and merits had juſtly ſo great weight in that illuſtrious Aſſembly, ſhould, upon a trivial circumſtance, ridicule, as a fiction, a horrid execrable Conſpiracy, ſupported by ſo many concurring proofs, and from a falſe trifling particular infer, that no part of it was true.' As the debate was like to grow warm, ſome Members called for the queſtion, and Earl Cowper's motion was rejected by 81 againſt 26. The Earl and Mr. Hutchinſon publiſhed declarations againſt the falſe information of their being of the club, wherein they ſtrongly aſſerted their innocence. Burford club.

The Lords had alſo choſen by ballot a Committee of nine, to whom the report and original papers were referred to prepare what might be fit to be offered to the Commons, by way of anſwer to what was delivered, at a Conference relating to the papers. When the Duke of Dorſet's Report from the Lords Committees was taken into conſideration, it was reſolved, That a deteſtable Conſpiracy had been formed for

(1) Layer being aſked, If Plunket ever explained to him who were meant by Burford's Club? Plunket told him, It was an appellation made uſe of by the Pretender and his Agents, to denote a club of Tory Lords and others, of which club Lord Orrery was Chairman, and conſiſted of the following Members:

Lord Strafford,	Mr. Hutchinſon,
Sir Henry Goring,	Biſhop of Rocheſter,
Lord Cowper,	Sir Conſtantine Phipps,
General Webb,	Mr. Shippen,
Lord Bingley,	Lord Scarſdale,
Mr. Dawkins,	Lord Bathurſt,
Lord Craven,	Lord Gower.

The Committee thought it juſtice due to ſeveral of the perſons named by Layer, to obſerve, that the matters, aſſerted of Burford's Club in Plunket's letters to Dillon, ſeemed utterly inconſiſtent with the known characters of ſome of thoſe perſons. See Report.

for raiſing a Rebellion, and laying violent hands on the King and Prince: After which, the Committee was thanked by the Lord-Chancellor, for having diſcharged their truſt with great exactneſs, fidelity, and candor.

Dr. Friend the Phyſician, who had exerted himſelf very zealouſly for the Biſhop of Rocheſter, was ſoon after taken into cuſtody; for, on the 15th of March, Mr. Walpole acquainted the Commons, 'That his Majeſty, having had juſt reaſon to apprehend Dr. John Friend (a Member of this Houſe) for High-treaſon, deſired the conſent of the Houſe to his being committed and detained; and then he moved for an addreſs to that purpoſe. This motion was oppoſed by Mr. Shippen and Mr. Bromley, who ſaid, they could not ſee any reaſon for that Houſe giving leave for detaining any Member, unleſs the ſpecies of treaſon was declared, and that the information was upon oath. Sir Joſeph Jekyll and Mr. Walpole replied, That, by the late act for ſuſpending the Habeas Corpus, the King was impowered to take up any perſon he had reaſon to ſuſpect: That therefore the Government was not obliged to ſay, whether the information was upon oath or not. But Mr. Walpole added, he did not doubt but Dr. Friend was charged upon oath; and privately declared to ſeveral Members, that they had a poſitive oath of his being guilty of the blackeſt and baſeſt treaſon. Mr. Shippen then ſuggeſting, that the Doctor's having ſpoke ſo warmly the Monday before in Mr. Kelly and the Biſhop of Rocheſter's behalf, was, in his opinion, the reaſon of his being taken up the next day himſelf, and at that rate there was an end of the liberty of ſpeech, which every Member of that Houſe had a right to, Mr. Walpole replied, He wondered any Gentleman could think any Miniſtry capable of ſo baſe a thing, as to take up any Gentleman for what he ſaid in that Houſe, without any other cauſe, when they knew themſelves to be accountable as well as others for their actions: Adding, that they, who made ſuch inſinuations, might more eaſily be proved to be Jacobites, than they could make out ſuch an allegation againſt the Miniſtry. Mr. Pulteney ſpoke on the ſame ſide; and, in relation to Dr. Friend's having ſpoken in Kelly's behalf, obſerved, that it was uſual, in all Conſpiracies, for one Traitor to endeavour to excuſe another. Mr. Shippen animadverted with ſome warmth upon this reflection, ſaying, It was not to be endured, to have a Member of that Houſe called a Traitor, before he was convicted as ſuch. But, Mr. Pulteney having explained himſelf, that matter ended, and then the motion for an addreſs was carried without a diviſion.

The affair which occaſioned the moſt talk, next to the plot, was the Harburgh lottery, which was brought before the Parliament this Seſſion. The lottery took its name from the place where it was to be drawn, the town and port of Harburgh on the river Elbe, within the King's German Dominions, where the Projector was to ſettle a trade for the woollen manufacture between England and Germany. The Houſe of Commons having appointed a Committee to inquire into this and other lotteries, then carrying on in London, it was repreſented in their report, 'That the ſcheme propoſed, that 1,500,000 l. ſterling, or 16,500,000 guilders, ſhould be ſubſcribed; and that it was to be drawn at Harburgh in five claſſes, 100,000 tickets to be drawn in each claſs, at 3 l. per ticket; and that every perſon ſubſcribing was to pay 12 s. or ſix guilders for each ticket, before the drawing each claſs of the lottery. That 200,000 l. of 300,000 l. in each claſs was to be divided into lots, to the fortunate Adventurers, which amounts to 1,000,000 l. to be deducted out of the whole ſum, which was to be paid the fortunate Adventurers. That a ſum of 1,000,000 l. was ſubſcribed for, to carry on a trade between Great-Britain and his Majeſty's German Dominions; and that 2 per cent. was only paid in upon the ſtock ſo ſubſcribed; of which a ſum of 13,000 l. or more was actually paid in money, and 7000 l. or more was ſecured by notes; 400,000 l. whereof was ſubſcribed. At firſt, 100,000 l. ſtock was ſold at 15 l. 3 s. per cent. of which 2 per cent was only paid in to the Company, and the reſt diſpoſed of as follows; 13 l. 3 s. per cent. which amounted to 13,150 l. 10,000 l. of which was given to Mr. Nicolai; and 3,150 l. to Mr. Benjamin Joules, for their ſervices: And as to 13,000 l. paid in money, and 7,000 l. in notes, the Committee could get no account what was become of it, not being able to ſee their books; nor could the Committee learn what number of tickets had been delivered out, or what money thereupon had been received, or what was become of what they had received. That with regard to the diſpoſition of the other 500,000 l. 5 per cent. upon 1,500,000 l. which amounts to 75,000 l. was to be deducted for management; which being taken out of the ſaid 500,000 l. leaves 425,000 l. which ſum was to be incorporated into the ſtock of the firſt Company, and to make a part of a capital of 1,500,000 l. as the Committee apprehended, of which they could get no poſitive information. But whether the former capital was intended to be ſo great, or only to conſiſt of this 425,000 l. and the 1,000,000 l. which was before ſubſcribed, it appeared to the Committee, that a plain fraud was intended in joining this real ſum with an imaginary ſubſcription; of which 2 per cent. only was paid in or ſecured, and that probably embezzled.' The Truſtees of this lottery were twenty; ſome of whom were in Germany; the reſt, who were in England, were the Lord Barrington, Sir John Hartop, Charles Frederick Krenbergh, John London, Fiennes Harriſon, Peter Hartop, William Squire, Edward Richier, John Caſwal, William Sterling, Benjamin Smith, Benjamin Burroughs, John Thompſon, Henry Bendiſh, —— Foſter, Benjamin Joules, and John Manley. But ſeveral of them reſigned their truſt immediately, being diſſatisfied with the ſcheme; for, when Sir Thomas Webſter, Sir Charles Wager, and Lord Barrington waited upon Lord Townſhend, Lord Carteret, and Mr. Walpole, they were told, that an Engliſh charter for the advantage of the lottery could not be granted, becauſe it was illegal and impracticable. Upon reading the report, the Houſe came to the following reſolutions: 1723.

1. That the project, called the Harburgh lottery, carried on in the City of London, is an infamous fraudulent undertaking, whereby ſeveral unwary perſons have been drawn in to their great loſs; and that the manner of carrying the ſame on hath been a manifeſt violation of the laws of this Kingdom.

2. That it appears to this Houſe, that the Managers of, and Agents of the ſaid lottery, did frequently,

1723. frequently, without any authority for ſo doing, make uſe of his Majeſty's Royal Name, thereby to give countenance to the infamous project, and induce his Majeſty's ſubjects to engage, or be concerned therein. After which a bill was ordered to be brought in to ſuppreſs the lottery, and to prevent any foreign lotteries from being carried on in this Kingdom; and to oblige the perſons concerned, in the management of the Harburgh lottery, to make reſtitution and ſatisfaction for the money they have received from the Contributors. And it was alſo reſolved, nemine contradicente, That it appeared to this Houſe, that John Lord Viſcount Barrington, of the Kingdom of Ireland, a Member of this Houſe, has been notoriouſly guilty of promoting, abetting, and carrying on the fraudulent undertaking, called the Harburgh lottery; and for that offence he be expelled the Houſe.'

East-India Company at Oſtend.

In December 1722, the Emperor of Germany granted a patent for eſtabliſhing an Eaſt-India Company in the Auſtrian Netherlands, the ſubſtance of which was, that they were impowered to open books of ſubſcription, wherein the ſubjects of any Nation were admitted to ſubſcribe. The Company was to be called the Imperial Company of Commerce eſtabliſhed in Flanders. The fund conſiſted of eight millions of florins, and Directors to be choſen annually. The Nobility had the privilege of entering into this Company, without derogation in the leaſt from their Nobility: Thoſe of any Nation, who ſubſcribed 20,000 florins, were to be naturalized from that ſubſcription: And any perſon had the privilege to ſubſcribe what ſum he pleaſed above 1000 florins, but nothing leſs, to prevent confuſion in their accounts. The ſettlement of this Company was ſaid to be chiefly owing to Mr. Colebrook, an Engliſh Merchant.

Notwithſtanding the oppoſition they met with from the Engliſh, French, and Dutch, they opened their books, and had a full ſubſcription in a very few days, owing chiefly to the clandeſtine Negotiations of their Agents in England, France, and Holland, where great numbers of Merchants ſubſcribed to that ſtock, and Maſters of Eaſt-India ſhips and Supercargoes went to Oſtend, to enter into their ſervice, and put them in a way to eſtabliſh and carry on their trade, which they did effectually, to the great damage of the Engliſh, French, and Dutch Companies. Monſieur de Fonſeca, the Emperor's Miniſter at Paris, ſignified to the Duke of Orleans, then at the head of affairs there, that the Emperor was much ſurprized at the moſt Chriſtian King's forbidding his ſubjects to be any ways concerned in the Oſtend Company. He was anſwered, 'That repreſentations had been made to the Emperor, that he was engaged by treaty not to encourage any ſuch commerce; that, nevertheleſs, his Imperial Majeſty, without any regard to the ſaid repreſentations, had thought fit to grant a Charter in favour thereof. That the moſt Chriſtian King was Maſter of his own Kingdom, and not obliged to give an account of his actions, and therefore the Emperor could not take amiſs the prohibition to his ſubjects, not to have any concern in the Company ſet up at Oſtend.'

A memorial of the Dutch Eaſt-India Company (which had been delivered to the States in March) having been preſented to the Commons this Seſſion, together with an extract of another memorial ſent by the States to the Court of Vienna, concerning the Oſtend Company, Sir Nathaniel Gould repreſented to the Houſe the great damage the Eaſt-India Company had already received, and was like farther to receive by the Oſtend Company; it was unanimouſly reſolved, 'That for the ſubjects of this Kingdom to ſubſcribe, or be concerned in encouraging any ſubſcription, to promote an Eaſt-India Company, now erecting in the Auſtrian Netherlands, is a High-Crime and Miſdemeanor.' Accordingly a bill paſſed both Houſes, and received the Royal aſſent, to prevent the King's ſubjects from ſubſcribing or being concerned in the Oſtend Eaſt-India Company.

There had been ſeveral General Courts held by the South-Sea Company about transferring two millions of their ſtock to the Bank of England, which was at laſt agreed on by the two Companies. A petition had likewiſe been preſented to the Commons for the reviving the two millions that had been annihilated. Accordingly an act paſſed this Seſſion, whereby it was enacted, that the two millions ſhould be revived, and added to the capital ſtock, and divided among the Proprietors.* By the ſame act, the whole capital, computed at 33,802,483 l. 14 s. was to be divided into two equal parts, one of which amounting to 16,901,241 l. 17 s. was to be called the joint ſtock of South-Sea annuities, attended with annuities payable out of the South-Sea Company's funds in lieu of all dividends, viz. at 5 l. per cent. till June 24, 1727, and from thence at 4 l. per cent. till redeemed. The other moiety was to remain in the Company as a joint-ſtock, attended with the reſidue of the yearly funds, payable at the Exchequer, till redemption, and alſo attended with the ſeveral ſums for charges of management, and with all benefits of trade, &c. And, as concerning the moiety ſo converted into South-Sea annuities, every Proprietor ſhould be intitled to annuities at 5 l. per cent. till June 24, 1727, and from thence at 4 l. per cent. and the Company ſhould receive at the Exchequer, out of the duties charged with their whole annuities yearly, the intereſt of the ſame moiety, till redemption, in truſt for the Proprietors: And all powers in force were to be continued for ſecuring the joint ſtock of South-Sea annuities, and the yearly funds to attend the ſame. The annuities were payable half-yearly, at Lady-Day and Michaelmas.

An act paſſed this Seſſion for the more effectual execution of juſtice, in a pretended privileged place in the pariſh of St. George, commonly called the Mint, where great numbers of Debtors had taken ſanctuary.

On the 27th of May, the King put an end to the Seſſion with the following ſpeech:

My Lords and Gentlemen,

"I AM perſuaded, notwithſtanding the unuſual length of this Seſſion, you will not think your time has been miſemployed in conſulting the neceſſary means for preſerving the peace and quiet of the Kingdom; and bringing to juſtice ſome of the chief promoters of that confuſion, which lately threatened the Nation.

"The prudent meaſures you have taken for our common ſecurity, and your enabling me to defend my Kingdoms againſt any deſigns or attempts of our enemies, are the moſt convincing teſtimonies of your fidelity and affection

723. " affection to me, and of your concern for the " liberties of my people. Be aſſured, the con- " fidence you have repoſed in me ſhall never be " made uſe of but for their ſafety and defence.

" The papers, which have been laid before " you, for your information, and have been " ſince publiſhed for the ſatisfaction of the " world, evidently ſhew, that the Conſpirators " had brought their wicked arts and practices to " ſuch perfection, that they confidently carried " on their traiterous projects in defiance of the " law, from an aſſurance of their being able to " elude it. The reſpect and reverence due to " the law had been loſt, and the tranquillity of " my people endangered, had not you inter- " poſed. This made it neceſſary for the Le- " giſlature to exert itſelf, in puniſhing ſuch of- " fenders, whoſe guilt is too certain to leave the " leaſt room for doubt, and whoſe crimes are " too heinous to admit of any aggravation.

" And yet it is with pleaſure I reflect, that " the juſtice of Parliament has been ſo tempered " with mercy, that even thoſe, who are re- " ſolved to be diſſatisfied, muſt acknowledge " the lenity of your proceedings, and will be " at a loſs for any pretence to complain, ſo few " examples having been made, and the penal- " ties inflicted by bill falling ſo much ſhort of " the puniſhments due for the ſame crimes, by " the common courſe of law.

" The firmneſs, you have ſhewn, muſt con- " vince all the world, how much they were " miſtaken, whoſe chief hopes were founded " on the diſaffection of my people. It gave " me great ſatisfaction to ſee as general a con- " currence in full Parliament upon this occaſion, " as has been known on any former: And it is " to be hoped, our enemies will ceaſe to flatter " themſelves with the vain imagination of being " able to ſubvert our Religion and preſent Eſta- " bliſhment.

Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons,

" I muſt acknowledge, in a particular man- " ner, the great readineſs you have ſhewn in " raiſing the neceſſary Supplies for the enſuing " year. It is an unexpected felicity, that you " have been able ſo far to diſappoint the hopes " of our enemies, as to avoid laying any new " burthen upon my people; and that ſo ſoon after " that great ſhock and convulſion in all the pub- " lic funds, and in the midſt of inteſtine alarms " and diſturbances, the credit of the Nation " ſhould ſo far revive and flouriſh, that not " only the Supplies of the year ſhould be raiſed " at a much lower intereſt, than was ever known " in the moſt quiet times, but part of the natio- " nal debt ſhould be reduced from an intereſt of " 5 to 3 per cent, and put in a courſe of being " ſoon diſcharged.

1723.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

" I return you my moſt ſincere thanks for " the indefatigable pains you have taken in the " ſervice of the Public. I earneſtly recommend " it to you, in your ſeveral ſtations and coun- " tries, to perſevere in your endeavours for pre- " ſerving the peace of the Kingdom; by juſtice " and reſolution to ſubdue the reſtleſs ſpirit of " faction and ſedition; and by prudence and " temper to reconcile the miſled.

" Some extraordinary affairs calling me abroad " this ſummer, I doubt not but that the wiſdom " and vigilance of my good ſubjects will pre- " vent our enemies from taking any advantage " of my abſence. To gain the hearts and af- " fections of my people ſhall always be my firſt " and principal care. On their duty and loy- " alty I will intirely depend. They may as " ſurely depend on my protection, in the full " enjoyment of their Religion, Liberty, and " Property."

The King goes to Hanover.

The King, whom the Conſpiracy had detained in England the laſt year, had no ſooner put an end to the Seſſion, but he ſet out for his German Dominions. He embarked for Holland the 3d of June, and, after ſtaying two days with his brother the Biſhop of Oſnabrug, arrived the 11th at Herenhauſen. He appointed Lords Juſtices in his abſence as uſual, the Prince being ſtill excluded, who was now in his forty-firſt year. The Lord Harcourt, formerly ſo ſtrictly united with the Earl of Oxford and Queen Anne's other Miniſters, and who had defended them with ſo much zeal, was one of the Lords Juſtices. Mr. Walpole was likewiſe of the number, and acted as Secretary of State, in the abſence of the Lords Townſhend and Carteret, who were with the King. It was intended to advance him to the Peerage, but he choſe rather to have that honour conferred on his ſon, who was made Baron Walpole of Walpole in the County of Norfolk (1). About the ſame time Mr. Pulteney, Chairman of the late Committee of Secrecy, was made Cofferer of the Houſhold; and Philip, Lord Stanhope, Captain of the Yeomen of the Guard; Dr. Gibſon was tranſlated from Lincoln to London, Dr. Reynolds from Bangor to Lincoln, and Dr. Bradford from Carliſle to Rocheſter; Dr. Waugh was promoted to Carliſle, and Dr. Willis, on the death of Dr. Trimnel, to Wincheſter; Dr. Hoadley was tranſlated from Hereford to Saliſbury; Dr. Green, on the death of Dr. Fleetwood, from Norwich to Ely; Dr. Leng was made Biſhop of Norwich, and Dr. Egerton, brother to the Duke of Bridgewater, of Hereford.

Promotions.

The King, before his departure, ſhewed his clemency to thoſe who had been taken up on account

The King's clemency.

(1) The Lord Townſhend's eldeſt ſon was called up to the Houſe of Peers, by the title of Baron Townſhend of Lynn-Regis, and made one of the Gentlemen of the Bedchamber, in the room of the Lord Teynham, who ſome days before ſhot himſelf, and died an hour after.

The preamble to the Lord Walpole began thus:

Our moſt beloved and moſt faithful Counſellor Robert Walpole, firſt Commiſſioner of the Treaſury, with the aſſiſtance of other ſelect perſons, and Chancellor of our Exchequer, having highly recommended himſelf to our Royal favour by his many ſervices to Us, to our Houſe, and to his own Country, we did not think him unworthy to be advanced to the rank of the Peers of our Realm. But, though he rather chuſes to merit the higheſt titles than to wear them, we have however thought fit, in order to ennoble his family, to confer on the ſon the honour due to the father, and to raiſe to the Peerage Robert Walpole, Junior, Eſq; &c.

1723. count of the Plot. The Earl of Orrery was releaſed from his confinement, and admitted to bail; as were alſo the Duke of Norfolk, the Lord North and Grey, Dennis Kelly, Thomas Cochran, and Swathfogger, the Earl of Orrery's Secretary. On the 20th of June, Dr. Friend was admitted to bail; and, two days after, Dr. Atterbury embarked on board the Aldborough, a ſmall man of war, which had orders to land him in France. He was put on ſhore at Calais, accompanied with his daughter Mrs. Morrice, and her huſband, who was High-Bailiff of Weſtminſter. At Calais he was told, that the late Lord Bolingbroke, having obtained his pardon, was juſt arrived there in his way to England: Upon which the Biſhop merrily ſaid, Then I am exchanged. The King had granted the Lord Bolingbroke a pardon the day after the Parliament broke up, of which one of his friends inſtantly ſet out for France to bring him word. He immediately returned to England to plead his pardon, in expectation that a new Parliament would repeal his Attainder. The Lord Harcourt had prevailed with the King to ſhew him this favour, though Mr. Walpole had oppoſed it at the Council-board with unanſwerable arguments: He was againſt looſening the hands of one, who (as he ſaid) he foreſaw, from his former conduct and ambition, and the natural reſtleſneſs of his temper, would go any lengths to poiſon the minds of the ſubjects, in order to diſturb the national tranquillity, that he himſelf might the eaſier arrive at power. But, notwithſtanding his diſapprobation, he was forced to give way (1).

Before the King left England, it was agreed in Council, that the troops ſhould be incamped as they had been the laſt ſummer, and that the Horſe-guards ſhould be quartered round Hyde-Park, in order to be ready to aſſemble, if there ſhould be occaſion.

Theſe meaſures kept all things quiet in Great-Britain, during the King's ſeven months abſence. The ſame reaſons, which had required his preſence abroad, detained him perhaps longer than he intended. He was received in his Dominions in the moſt agreeable manner, and was complimented by at leaſt twelve foreign Miniſters. The King and Queen of Pruſſia waited likewiſe upon him, by which means his Court was as ſplendid, and as much the ſcene of affairs, as ever the Court of Great-Britain had been.

State of foreign affairs.

Affairs were then at a ſort of criſis: The uſeleſneſs of the Congreſs of Cambray and of Brunſwick, where little had been done, having worn out the patience of the Princes whoſe intereſts were to be determined there, they entered into ſeparate Negotiations, and ſought the means of coming to an agreement. The Czar and King of Sweden were going to conclude a treaty favourable to the Duke of Holſtein's pretenſions to Sleſwick, of which King George had guaranteed the poſſeſſion to the King of Denmark: It was to be feared, that this treaty might affect even Bremen and Verden, lately annexed to the Electorate of Hanover. 1723.

On the other hand, France and Spain ſeemed to be ſincerely reconciled, and willing to unite againſt the Emperor. The Regent had projected a marriage between the King of France and the Infanta of Spain, then three years old, and had married his ſecond daughter Mademoiſelle de Montpenſier to the Prince of Aſturias, and, a year after, another daughter to Don Carlos, eldeſt ſon of Philip V. by his ſecond wife. Theſe two powers endeavoured to draw the Czar to their ſide; they offered new treaties to England, more advantageous than the former, in regard to trade, but ſtrongly inſiſted upon the reſtitution of Gibraltar and Port-Mahon; and it was wiſhed, that Court would not be concerned in the affairs of Italy, and would declare openly againſt the Oſtend Company.

This ſituation of ſo oppoſite intereſts was full of difficulties. The Emperor, preſſed too much, might declare for the Czar and the Swede: Poland, confined between theſe three powers, could not help taking part with them: Almoſt all Italy exclaimed againſt the treaty of London: The Pope had proteſted againſt any deciſions at Cambray to the prejudice of his right: The King of Sardinia, the Dukes of Tuſcany, Parma, and Modena, had preſented memorials equivalent to ſo many proteſtations: France and Spain were inclined to ſupport them: War was every where on the point of breaking out: England, engaged by ſo many treaties, and her own intereſts, muſt have been concerned: For King George to declare againſt the Emperor was expoſing his German Dominions, and helping to ſtrengthen two powers already very formidable to the reſt of Europe: To take part with the Emperor was ſupporting the new eſtabliſhment at Oſtend, and arming againſt himſelf France, Spain, and perhaps Ruſſia and Sweden.

King George overcame all theſe difficulties, or at leaſt ſuſpended their ill conſequences. He entered into ſtricter Alliances with the Kings of Pruſſia and Denmark: He uſed his endeavours to prevail with the Emperor to be more ready to end his differences with Spain, and to deſiſt from the affair of Oſtend, againſt which his Subjects in particular, and his faithful Allies the States-General, were extremely incenſed. In England, as hath been related, the Commons had voted againſt it.

One of the King's principal deſigns, when he came to Hanover, was to perſuade the Court of Vienna to deſiſt from erecting the Oſtend India Company: He laboured conſtantly at it, but the ſucceſs did not anſwer his good intentions: That Court promiſed, in general, not to do any thing contrary to treaties, and the rights of others, but avoided to enter into any diſcuſſion, and diſregarded the repreſentations that were made from all parts.

It

(1) Mr. Walpole's conduct with regard to this tranſaction, and many more, was not unlike the Lord Clarendon's, who ſays of himſelf, 'That he had often, as believing himſelf obliged in duty, argued in the Senate in favour of many points, which he had ſtrenuouſly oppoſed at the Council-Table.' The reaſons, on which Miniſters found their conduct on ſuch occaſions, are obvious to every man of common penetration.

It is obſerved from the Lord Bolingbroke's pardon, that Mr. Walpole held not then the firſt rank, either in power or confidence, but that the direction of affairs, particularly the foreign, after the death of the Earls Stanhope and Sunderland, was chiefly conducted by the Lord Townſhend and Baron Bothmar.

It was the ſame with reſpect to the Czar. So that the King's journey proved fruitleſs, and the Negotiations might have been as well carried on at London as at Hanover. Something was alſo done for the Proteſtants, whoſe complaints continued, becauſe they were ſtill oppreſſed, and new grievances were added to the old. The King of Pruſſia readily entered into the deſign to procure them eaſe and tranquillity.

This union put a ſtop at leaſt to greater calamities; and appeared to be very cordial. King George ſpent four or five days at Berlin, where he was received and treated with great reſpect and magnificence. The two Secretaries of State, the Lords Townſhend and Carteret, who attended him, had frequent Conferences with the King of Pruſſia's Miniſters, in order to conclude ſome Alliance to prevent the Czar's deſigns, in favour of the Duke of Holſtein: The propoſals were neither rejected nor received, and aſſurance was given that no engagement ſhould be made contrary to what had been agreed.

All was quiet in England: However there appeared now and then ſome ſparks of diviſion, which ſhewed the parties ſtill ſubſiſted, and had not altered their ſentiments. At the election of the Sheriffs this year the rabble was ſpirited up at London, by the oppoſition which the new Sheriffs, Sir Richard Hopkins and Mr. Feaſt, met with from the old ones, Mr. Humphrey Parſons and Mr. Child, who endeavoured to have the election fall upon Sir John Williams and Mr. Lockwood. Hopkins and Feaſt were declared duly elected by the Lord Mayor and Aldermen; notwithſtanding Parſons and Child had made a contrary declaration in favour of Williams and Lockwood, but, the Lord Mayor having diſſolved the Common-Hall, after the Court had declared Hopkins and Feaſt duly choſen, the old Sheriffs could not meet them after the laſt adjournment, as they intended to have done, but were prevented by the Lord Mayor's and Aldermen's prior declaration. Feaſt oppoſed Williams in the election of an Alderman for Cripplegate-Ward, which, being alſo conteſted, was decided by the Court of Aldermen in favour of Williams, upon which the rabble broke the windows of the well-affected in that ward, and committed ſeveral outrages, for which ſome of the ring-leaders were taken, and committed to Newgate.

Purſuant to an act of Parliament lately paſt, requiring all perſons to take the oaths before the 25th of December, or to regiſter their eſtates, the Seſſions, held by the Juſtices of the Peace over all the Kingdom, were crowded with perſons of all ſexes and conditions for that purpoſe.

The King, having been informed that his ſubjects in Ireland were in want of ſmall money, made a contract with William Wood to furniſh that Kingdom with copper half-pence and farthings. The copper was to be of ſuch fineneſs, and the money of ſuch a weight, as agreed upon in the patent granted for that purpoſe. When this money came to be circulated in Ireland, great clamour was raiſed againſt it, and the Parliament, which met on the 5th of September, came to theſe reſolutions:

That the importing and uttering of copper half-pence and farthings, by virtue of Wood's patent, would be prejudicial to the revenue, deſtructive of trade, and of dangerous conſequence to the rights of the ſubject: That the State of the Nation had been miſrepreſented to the King, in order to obtain the patent: That the half-pence wanted weight; and, though the terms of the patent had been complied with, there would have been a loſs to the Nation of 150 l. per cent: That it had been always highly prejudicial to the Kingdom to grant the power of coinage to private perſons, and would at all times be of dangerous conſequence. 1723.

Addreſſes from both Houſes, agreeable to theſe reſolutions, were tranſmitted to the King, who, in anſwer to the Commons, ſaid, 'He was very much concerned, that his granting the patent for coining of half-pence and farthings, agreeable to the practice of his Royal Predeceſſors, had given ſo much uneaſineſs to the Houſe of Commons; and, if there had been any abuſes committed by the Patentee, his Majeſty would give the neceſſary orders for inquiring into, and puniſhing thoſe abuſes, and do every thing, that was in his power, for the ſatisfaction of his people.' Purſuant to this anſwer (for which the Commons returned an addreſs of thanks) the affair was referred to the Lords of the Privy-Council in England, by whom a report of it was drawn up in July the next year. In this report they juſtified the conduct of the Patentee, and obſerved, that, his Majeſty having ordered, that an aſſay ſhould be made of the fineneſs, value, and weight of Mr. Wood's copper money, and the goodneſs thereof, compared with the former coinages of copper money for Ireland, and the copper money coined in his Mint in England, it had been accordingly referred to Sir Iſaac Newton, Mr. Southwell, and Mr. Scroope, to make the aſſay and trial; and it appeared, 'That the Pix of the copper-monies coined at Briſtol by Mr. Wood for Ireland, containing the trial pieces, which was ſealed and locked up at the time of coining, was opened at his Majeſty's Mint at the Tower: That the Comptroller's account of the quantities of half-pence and farthings coined agreed with Mr. Wood's account, amounting to 59 tons, 3 hundred, 1 quarter, 11 pounds, and 4 ounces: That by the ſpecimens of this coinage, which had from time to time been taken from the ſeveral parcels coined, and ſealed up in papers, and put into the Pix, 60 half-pence weighed 14 ounces Troy, and 18 penny-weights, which is about a quarter of an ounce above one pound weight Averdupois; and 30 farthings weighed 3 ounces and 3 quarters of an ounce Troy, and 46 grains; which is alſo above the weight required by the patent: That both half-pence and farthings, when heated red hot, ſpread thin under the hammer, without cracking: That the copper, of which Mr. Wood's coinage is made, is of the ſame goodneſs and value with the copper, of which the copper money is coined in his Majeſty's Mint for England, and worth, in the market, about 13 pence per pound weight Averdupois: That a pound of copper wrought into bars and fillets, and made fit for coinage, before brought into the Mint at the Tower of London, is worth 18 pence per pound, and always coſts as much, and is coined into 23 pence of copper money by tale for England. That the half-pence and farthings coined by Mr. Wood, when compared with the copper money coined for Ireland in the Reigns of King Charles II, King James II, and King William and Queen Mary, conſiderably exceeds them all in goodneſs, fineneſs, and value of the copper, none of them bearing 1723. bearing the fire ſo well, not being malleable, waſting very much in the fire, and great part of them burning into a cinder of little or no value at all.' The fact being thus proved to be on the ſide of Mr. Wood, the Lords Committees ſhew, that his Majeſty's Royal Predeceſſors always exerciſed the undoubted prerogative of granting patents for copper coinage in Ireland to private perſons, none of which patents were equally beneficial to that Kingdom, nor ſo well guarded with proper covenants and conditions for the due execution of the powers thereby granted, as this of Mr. Wood, though the validity of theſe patents, and a due compliance with them, was never in any one inſtance till this time diſputed or controverted. They then prove, that Mr. Wood's patent was not, as had been ſuggeſted in Ireland, obtained clandeſtinely, in an unprecedented manner, but after a reference to the Attorney and Sollicitor-General, and after Sir Iſaac Newton had been conſulted in all the ſteps of ſettling it. In the laſt place they made it plainly appear by a cloud of witneſſes, that there was a real want of ſmall money in Ireland, to make ſmall payments. But, Mr. Wood having, in compliance with the clamour induſtriouſly raiſed againſt his coinage, propoſed to reduce his coinage from 100,000 l. to 40,000 l. value, it was thought fit to accept of it, and to ſend directions to Ireland accordingly (1).

The Parliament of Ireland paſſed ſeveral acts, and particularly one for accepting the Quakers affirmation inſtead of an oath; and granted 340,000 l. Supply towards paying off the debt of the Nation, which was about 660,000 l. and for the ſupport of the Eſtabliſhment for two years.

On the 10th of October died Earl Cowper, D eminent for his integrity in the diſcharge of the E office of Lord Chancellor, which he had twice O filled. There may have been Chancellors of more extenſive learning, but none of more knowledge in the laws of England. His judgment was quick, and yet ſolid. His eloquence manly, but flowing. His manner graceful and noble (2).

The King was ſtill at Hanover when he heard of D the Duke of Orleans's death, who, under the title th of Prime Miniſter, governed France as abſolutely O as he had done during the minority of Lewis XV. King George was much concerned at the news: The mutual eſteem they had for each other, their circumſtances and intereſts which were not unlike, begot a firm friendſhip between them, whereof they gave on all occaſions the moſt effectual proofs. The Duke died of an apoplexy in the 50th year of his age, and according to his deſire, before his deceaſe, the Duke of Bourbon was nominated Prime Miniſter.

As the death of the Duke of Orleans might T occaſion great alterations, and as it was uncer- tain whether the new Miniſter would enter into E the views of his Predeceſſor, the King haſtened his return to England. Being detained by contrary winds ſome days in Holland, he received there aſſurances, from the part of France, of the good

(1) Notwithſtanding this deciſion of the Privy-Council of England, Dean Swift, in his paper, called The Draper of Dublin, repreſented this affair in the blackeſt colours, and is ſuppoſed to be author of a lampoon upon it, beginning with theſe words:

Now, altho' to draw water is not very good,
Yet we all ſhould rejoice to be hewers of Wood.

(2) In September this year, four Engliſh Gentlemen were barbarouſly murdered in France. Mr. Seabright and Mr. Monpeſſon, accompanied by Mr. Davis, paſſing over to Calais in their way to Paris, ſet out from thence for that City the 12th of September, Mr. Seabright and Mr. Davis in one chaiſe, Mr. Monpeſſon and Richard Spindelow, Mr. Seabright's man, in another, and Mr. Monpeſſon's ſervant on horſeback. About ſeven miles from Calais they were attacked by ſix ruffians well mounted, who ſtopped the poſtillions, came up to the chaiſes, and demanded their money, which the Gentlemen readily ſurrendered, they having no fire-arms to make reſiſtance, and even their ſwords were taken from them. The robbers then, taking them out of the chaiſes, commanded them to lie down upon their faces, and the poſtillions to do the ſame. After which the villains rifled their pockets, and ſearched them very narrowly; which done, they ordered Spindelow to get up and open the portmanteaus, which as he was doing, he ſaw one of the rogues pull the dead body of Mr. Locke out of a chaiſe in which he had been killed in his return from Paris, at ſome ſmall diſtance from that Place; Mr. Locke's ſervant, a Swiſs, was ſpared, but made to lie on his face. When they had done with Mr. Seabright's portmanteau, they ordered Mr. Monpeſſon to open his, and he deſired Mr. Seabright to tell them in French, his ſervant was gone before, and had the key with him. This man they had ſhot in the back, but, not being dead, he was commanded to lie down on his face, and now they fetched him to open his maſter's portmanteau; when they had finiſhed their ſearch, they cried Tuez, Kill; they firſt ſhot Mr. Seabright through the heart, Mr. Davis was ſhot and ſtabbed in ſeveral places, and his ſkull cleft; they ſtabbed Spindelow in five places of his body, and left him for dead, Mr. Monpeſſon at the ſame time received a ſhot which had laid him ſprawling on the ground. A peaſant of the neighbourhood, who was going to Calais for a licence to marry, unfortunately paſſing that way, was alſo murdered, and Mr. Monpeſſon, who had lain as if he had been dead, lifting up his head before the murderers were gone, one of them came back to him and cut his throat; but he and Spindelow made a ſhift with the help of ſome of the Country people to get back to Calais, where Mr. Monpeſſon died 36 hours after, and Spindelow, recovering of his wounds, returned to England. The dead bodies of the four Engliſh Gentlemen were brought to England, and landed at Tower Wharf, four days after, where they were received by their friends, who gave them decent interment; and George Turville, Eſq; of the Middle Temple, who happened to paſs by the place where theſe Gentlemen were murdered, a few hours after the ſaid murder was committed, while the dead bodies, ſtripped naked by the Country people, yet lay on the high road, gave orders for erecting a monument of black marble, in form of a pyramid, on the ſpot where the murder happened, by permiſſion of the Duke de Humiers, Governour of the Boulognois, and the Biſhop of Bologne. Theſe robbers, and aſſaſſins robbed the Liſle ſtage coach, ſeven miles from Peronne, two months afterwards, and killed Poulart and Heuvlet, two perſons that accompanied the coach; two of the rogues Joſeph Bizean, a jeweller of Liege, and Peter le Fehvre, another jeweller, being taken, were tried and condemned at Paris in July following, by this moſt dreadful ſentence: To be put to the rack, to have their arms, legs, and thighs broken on a ſcaffold, and to have their bodies put upon wheels, there to remain with their faces towards the ſky as long as they had life, and Bizean's dead body to be carried and remain expoſed on a wheel upon the high road to Calais, and le Fehvre's on the high road to Peronne, which ſentence was executed to the full.

good disposition of that Court, to cultivate, and even improve, the union established by the late Duke of Orleans, between the two States.

The King came to London the 19th of December, and on the 9th of January the Parliament met, and was opened by the following speech, delivered as usual by the Lord Chancellor:

My Lords and Gentlemen,

"I Cannot open this Session without congratulating you upon the success of your endeavours last year for the safety, interest, and honour of the Kingdom. The rise of the public credit, the flourishing condition of our trade and manufactures, and the general tranquillity of my people, are the happy consequences of your prudent resolutions. It is to be hoped, that the few examples, which were made of some notorious offenders, will be sufficient to deter the most disaffected from engaging in the like desperate and wicked practices. The augmentation you thought fit to make to our National forces, by sea and land, has not only secured the general quiet of the Kingdom against any sudden attempts or insurrections, but has also given me such weight and credit in all foreign Negotiations, as greatly contribute towards the preservation of the peace of Europe.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

"I will order the proper Officers to lay before you the estimates for the service of the current year. I desire such Supplies only, as you shall find absolutely necessary for preserving the peace of the Kingdom, and for the security of my people; and those, I hope, may be raised without laying any additional charge or burthen on my subjects.

"I must, in a particular manner, recommend to your care the public debts of the Kingdom, as the most national concern you can possibly take into your consideration. I am persuaded, it must be a very great satisfaction to all my faithful subjects, to see the sinking fund improved and augmented, and the debt of the Nation thereby put into a method of being so much the sooner gradually reduced and paid off. It would be a work truly worthy of a British Parliament to begin this commendable undertaking, and to make such a progress therein, as, with a strict regard to public faith and private property, may pave the way to this great and desirable end.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

"In the present happy situation of our affairs, I have nothing more to recommend to you, than that you would make use of the opportunity, which your own good conduct has put into your hands, in considering of such farther laws, as may be wanting for the ease and encouragement of trade and navigation, for the employment of the poor, and for the exciting and encouraging a spirit of industry in the Nation.

"I am fully satisfied, that the trade and wealth of my people are the happy effects of the liberties they enjoy; and that the grandeur of the Crown consists in their prosperity: And I am as fully persuaded, that all, who wish well to their Country, must agree with me, that it is the vainest of all delusions to imagine, that the Religion, Laws, and Liberties of this Kingdom can ever be secured, but by supporting the present Establishment, and maintaining the Succession in the Protestant Line. Let us therefore heartily join in every thing, that may tend to promote our mutual happiness, and to extinguish the hopes of those, who long have been, and still are restless in their endeavours to subject this Nation to the whole train of miseries, that are inseparable from Popery and Arbitrary Power." 1723-24.

This speech drew from both Houses addresses of thanks, with assurances of maintaining the present happy Establishment, and the Succession in his Majesty's Family, as the only solid foundation of quietly enjoying their Religion, Laws, and Liberties. Addresses of thanks.

The Commons, according to custom, proceeded to raise the Supplies, which were granted according to the estimate laid before them by the Court. Ten thousand seamen, at 4 l. a month each, were voted for the sea-service, and the army was continued on the same foot as last year. The affair of the army occasioned a warm debate, chiefly about the four thousand additional troops raised the year before, which the Opposers insisted to have disbanded; but it was carried against them, and resolved that the number of effective men, for the year 1724 (including 1815 invalids) should be 18264. A land-tax of two shillings in the pound, with the malt-tax, was granted towards defraying the expences of the ensuing year. Proceedings on the Supply.

As the King had particularly recommended to their care the public debts of the Nation, the Commons took the same into consideration, and came to the following resolutions: A bill for lessening the public debts.

That, towards lessening the public debts, the annuities of 5*l. per cent*, charged on the general fund, by a clause in the act of the 5th of his Majesty's Reign, except such as had been subscribed into the South-Sea, should be paid off at Lady-Day 1724, as also the unsubscribed blanks of the lottery of 1714. That all these should be discharged, with the money arising from the sinking fund, as well as the two annuities, which by the act, entitled, An act for redeeming certain annuities, payable by the Cashier of the Bank at 5 l. per cent, were enacted to be redeemed at Lady-Day, 1724. Pursuant to these resolutions, a bill was brought in, which, passing both Houses, received the Royal assent.

Protections from foreign Ministers, Peers, and Members of Parliament, having long been the subject of complaint, a list of the names of the persons protected by written certificates was laid before the Commons, and it was resolved, 'That all protections and written certificates of the Members of this House be declared void in law, and be forthwith withdrawn and called in; and that none be granted for the future; and that, if any shall be granted by any Member, such Member shall make satisfaction to the party injured, and shall be liable to the censure of the House.' This order was to be printed and set up in the Courts of Justice, and distributed by the Sheriffs in their several Counties. The same Protections called in.

1723-24. grievance being taken into conſideration by the Lords, after ſome debate, the following declaration was made, 'That all the written protections are null and void; and all other protections, which ſhall be at any time hereafter given, ſhall be taken to be null and void.' But this order is not to extend to menial ſervants, nor thoſe employed neceſſarily and properly about the eſtates of Peers, or any who are really their ſervants.

In this Seſſion, the inland duty was laid on coffee, tea, and chocolate, which has been a conſiderable increaſe to the public revenue.

Army bill paſſed in the Houſe of Lords.

The affair of the army cauſed the greateſt debate in the Houſe of Lords. There had been the laſt year an addition of four thouſand men on account of the Conſpiracy, which was now propoſed to be continued. The Commons had agreed to it, and paſſed the bill; but the continuance of theſe additional troops met with great oppoſition in the Houſe of Lords. The two moſt remarkable ſpeeches were the Lord Trevor's againſt it, and the Lord Townſhend's for it (1). It was obſerved, that the Lord North and Grey, the Earl of Orrery, the Lord Bathurſt, and others of that party, appeared very zealous for the reduction of the army, which cauſed the Duke of Argyle to ſay in his ſpeech, 'That, if he ſaw the Nation unanimous in opinion, that our laws, liberties, properties, and holy religion, intirely depend on the preſent happy Settlement, and on the Proteſtant Succeſſion in his Majeſty's Royal Family, he would readily give his vote for reducing the army. But he was very much afraid, that ſome people ſo ſtrenuouſly inſiſted on the diſbanding of the additional troops, with no other deſign than to weaken the Government, and thereby have an opportunity of involving their native Country in new troubles. And therefore thoſe noble Lords, who had ſpoke for the reduction of the army, would do well, when they went down into their ſeveral Countries, to aſſure the people, with whom, no doubt, their reaſons would not fail of having great weight, that their liberties and properties were entirely ſafe under his Majeſty's Government.' After a long debate, the motion againſt the additional troops was rejected, and the bill paſſed, as ſent up by the Commons. 1723-24

The buſineſs of the Seſſion being over, the King came to the Houſe of Peers the 24th of April, and, paſſing the bills, delivered the following ſpeech by the mouth of the Chancellor: 1724. End of ſecond Seſſion.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

"THE unanimity, chearfulneſs, and diſ-
"patch with which you have now finiſhed
"every thing I recommended to you, at the "opening of this Seſſion, are freſh inſtances
"of your affection to my Perſon and Govern"ment, and cannot fail of contributing, with
"the bleſſing of God on our endeavours, to"wards the eſtabliſhment of that happy tran-
"quillity we now enjoy both at home and "abroad.

"Your continuing the like national force by
"ſea and land this year, as was judged neceſſary
"by Parliament for the ſervice of the laſt,
"gives me great ſatisfaction. You have hereby
"wiſely provided againſt the miſchiefs from any
"ſudden

(1) As theſe ſpeeches contain the chief arguments on both ſides, they are here inſerted at large:

The Lord Trevor ſaid, 'That, the Conſpiracy mentioned in the King's ſpeech at the opening of the laſt Seſſion of Parliament, which was the occaſion of this augmentation of the land-forces, being now happily extinguiſhed, and thereby the cauſe of raiſing that additional number being perfectly removed, there was not the leaſt reaſon or pretence for continuing that number. That the keeping on foot a greater army in time of peace, than was abſolutely neceſſary for the ſecurity of the King's Perſon and Government, was very dangerous to our happy Conſtitution: And, conſidering the great tranquillity we enjoy both at home and abroad, he could not but apprehend, the number of regular forces allowed by this bill to be much greater than was neceſſary for that end. That, if ſo great an army was allowed to be continued in our preſent happy circumſtances, a ſtanding army would thereby become an eſſential part of our Conſtitution, ſince the reaſons for keeping it up in perpetuity would grow ſtronger every year, and in every ſucceeding Reign. For on the one hand it cannot, with any probability, be foreſeen or expected, that in any future time there will be leſs reaſon to be given, than at preſent, for juſtifying the neceſſity of keeping up ſo great an army, there being now as little danger to our preſent happy Eſtabliſhment to be feared either from inſurrections at home, or by any diſturbance or invaſions from abroad, as the nature and inſtability of human affairs will allow of. And on the other hand, if ſo numerous an army be at preſent allowed of in Parliament, no argument can hereafter be urged for the reducing the number in any future Reign, but what will ſeem to carry with it too great a diſtruſt of the Prince then on the Throne, and will be conſtrued to imply, that the ſame confidence is not to be repoſed in him, as in his predeceſſors.' His Lordſhip added, 'That it was not out of any diſtruſt he entertained either of his Majeſty or his Miniſters, that he was for reducing part of the army. That, on the contrary, he was fully convinced, his Majeſty will never make an ill uſe of his power, of which they had a ſure earneſt in the equity and moderation, with which his Majeſty had governed hitherto: But, that as they could not promiſe themſelves, nor expect, that ſo good and ſo juſt a King ſhould always fill the Throne, it was prudence early to prevent the inconveniencies and dangers, to which our excellent Conſtitution and Liberties would be expoſed, in caſe, in any ſucceeding Reign, an ambitious Prince and ill Miniſters ſhould have ſo great a number of troops at their diſpoſal. That it was notorious, that all the States of Europe, that have loſt their liberties, have been inſlaved by their own armies, whoſe Officers and Commanders, growing every day in power, do, at laſt, turn it againſt thoſe, from whom they had at firſt their commiſſions; of which we had a fatal example in England ſtill freſh in our memories in the perſon of Oliver Cromwell. That, beſides the four thouſand additional men, the regular forces were double the number of thoſe kept on foot after the peace of Ryſwick, in the Reign of King William of glorious memory; and more numerous by one third than in the late Queen's Reign, after the peace of Utrecht: That therefore they are more than ſufficient to ſecure the Government againſt any ſudden inteſtine commotion, which is the leſs to be apprehended, by reaſon of the general affection, which the people had lately ſhewn in taking the oaths, though many of them, that took them, were not required to do it, by the act paſſed the laſt Seſſion; and he was confident, that, except a few perſons of deſperate principles and fortunes, who might hope to fiſh in troubled waters, there was no body in England, that had any thing to loſe, who wiſhed for a Revolution. That, if we looked abroad, it appeared, that by the happy influence of his Majeſty's wiſe Counſels, and the good Alliances, that had been entered into and concerted, all Europe enjoyed a profound peace, which,

" ſudden ſhocks to public credit; you have
" provided for the ſafety of the Kingdom, and
" have enabled this Nation to hold, among the " powers of Europe, the rank and figure due to " her honour and dignity. Nothing could have " been more acceptable to me, than your hav" ing been able to make that proviſion, with-
" out laying any new or additional burthens on
" my people.

Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons,

" I return you my thanks for the care and
" pains you have taken towards augmenting the
" ſinking fund, and improving the public re-
" venues, by putting them under a ſtricter
" management. I make no doubt, but that the " happy beginning you have made will be at" tended with ſuch immediate good conſe-
" quences, as will encourage you to purſue the " way you have now opened for a gradual re" duction of the debt, and for putting the " trade and navigation of Great-Britain on ſuch
" a foot, as may not only in ſome meaſure diſ-
" courage the unjuſtifiable incroachments they
" labour under from ſome of our neighbours,
" but at the ſame time extend her exportations
" beyond what has been known in former " ages.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

" As the early receſs, which your diligence
" and unanimity has procured you, affords you
" the opportunity of a longer retirement into the " Country, than the buſineſs of former Seſſions
" has uſually allowed of, I aſſure myſelf, that 1724.
" you will carry with you thither the ſame zeal
" for the public good, with which you have
" been animated in Parliament; and that you
" will make it your buſineſs to diſcountenance
" any remains there may be yet left of ſedition
" and diſaffection, and to promote that perfect
" harmony and confidence between me and my " people, which I moſt earneſtly deſire, and
" on which our mutual happineſs intirely de" pends."

A little before the end of the Seſſion, the King had appointed the Duke of Newcaſtle to be Secretary of State in the room of the Lord Carteret, who was made Lord Lieutenant of Ireland. The Duke of Grafton was appointed Lord Chamberlain, the Lord Falmouth and Mr. Edgecombe Vice-Treaſurers of Ireland, Mr. Yonge Commiſſioner of the Treaſury, and Mr. Pelham Secretary at war. Sir Robert Raymond being made a Judge of the King's-Bench, Sir Philip York ſucceeded him as Attorney-General. And Sir Clement Wearg was made Sollicitor-General. About the middle of May, Horatio Walpole was appointed Ambaſſador Extraordinary at the Court of France.

On the 16th of May the King ſent the following circular letter to the Univerſities of Oxford and Cambridge: 'We being greatly deſirous to favour and encourage thoſe antient and laudable nurſeries of piety and learning, and to enable them more effectually to anſwer the end of their inſtitution, by ſending forth conſtant Supplies of learned and able men, to ſerve the public both in Church and State; and having obſerved, that in all probability, would be laſting: But that, in caſe of a rupture with any neighbouring Prince, our fleet, which was certainly the moſt numerous, and the beſt in all Chriſtendom, would defend us againſt any foreign invaſion or inſult. That the pay of the four thouſand additional men amounted to a good ſum of money. That indeed, at another juncture, that expence might eaſily be borne; but that in the preſent circumſtances, when the Nation is involved in ſo great a debt, and groans under the load of heavy taxes, this additional charge is very conſiderable. That, his Majeſty, in his gracious ſpeech at the opening of this Seſſion of Parliament, having, in a particular manner, recommended to the Houſe of Commons the putting the national debt in a method of being gradually reduced and paid, it was with the greateſt ſatisfaction he took notice, that ſome progreſs had already been made in that great and important undertaking; and that, in order to improve that good beginning, not only the pay of theſe additional forces, but alſo all other needleſs expences ought, in his opinion, to be applied to the increaſe of the ſinking fund.' His Lordſhip concluded, as he had began, with the moſt earneſt profeſſions of his ſincere and intire affection for his Majeſty's ſacred Perſon and Government, and for his Royal Family, on whoſe proſperity, under God, abſolutely depend both our preſent felicity, and the preſervation of our laws, liberties, properties, and holy religion.

---

The Lord Townſhend anſwered the Lord Trevor, and ſaid, 'That he agreed with that noble Lord in ſome parts of his ſpeech, but was ſorry he differed from him in others. That he was thoroughly perſuaded of his intire affection to his Majeſty's Perſon, and the preſent happy Settlement; nor did he in the leaſt doubt, but he ſaw with pleaſure the progreſs, that had been already made towards reducing the national debt: But that, at the ſame time, they ought to conſider, that, as the happy tranquillity, we at preſent enjoy, is in ſome meaſure owing to the ſtrength of the Government, ſo it was prudence not to weaken that ſtrength, becauſe the ſame might affect public credit, which being founded on the ſecurity of the Government, if that ſecurity was rendered precarious, they would ſoon ſee the funds and ſtocks fall 10 or 12 per cent. which would render the reduction of the national debt altogether impracticable, ſince it was impoſſible to reduce that debt, otherwiſe than by public credit. That it was notorious, that, before the laſt augmentation of regular forces, the Government could not form and march a body of three or four thouſand men againſt any ſudden attempt, either at home, or from abroad, without leaving the King's Perſon, the Royal Family, the Capital of the Kingdom, and the fortified Places expoſed; and therefore the ſaid augmentation was become abſolutely neceſſary to prevent theſe dangers and inconveniencies. That the number of the troops now on foot was not ſo great as to afford any juſt ground of jealouſy, ſince the preſent forces are much inferior to thoſe the Crown had formerly. That, by the antient and Gothic conſtitution of the Government, the King had at his diſpoſal the Militia of the Realm, which chiefly conſiſted in archers, who were kept in conſtant diſcipline and exerciſe, the memory of which is ſtill preſerved, there being almoſt in every village a place called But-Lane. That the invention of fire-arms had made a great alteration in the antient Conſtitution; and, inſtead of archers, the Crown raiſed as many regular troops, as were thought neceſſary upon any emergency That Queen Elizabeth, who had many enemies both at home and abroad, conſtantly kept a conſiderable body of troops in the Netherlands, without any contradiction from her Parliaments, and thereby maintained herſelf on the Throne, and overcame all her enemies. That, if King Charles I. had ſteered the ſame courſe, he might, in all probability have preſerved both his Crown and his Life, ſince he loſt both only for want of a ſufficient force to ſup-

preſs

1724. that no encouragement or proviſion has hitherto been made in either of the Univerſities, for the ſtudy of modern hiſtory, or modern languages, the knowledge of which is highly neceſſary towards compleatly qualifying the youth committed to their care for ſeveral ſtations both in Church and State, to which they may be called; and having ſeriouſly weighed the prejudice, that has accrued to the Univerſities from this defect, perſons of foreign Nations being often employed in the education and tuition of youth, both at home and in their travels, and great numbers of the young Nobility and Gentry being either ſent directly abroad from ſchools, or taken away from the Univerſities before the courſe of their ſtudies can be there compleated, and opportunities frequently loſt to the Crown, of employing and encouraging Members of the two Univerſities, by conferring on them ſuch employments both at home and abroad, as neceſſarily require a competent ſkill in writing and ſpeaking the modern languages; in order therefore to remedy theſe and the like inconveniencies, we have determined to appoint two perſons of ſober converſation and prudent conduct, of the degree of Maſter of Arts, or Batchelor of Laws, or of ſome higher degree, in one of the Univerſities, ſkilled in modern hiſtory, and in the knowledge of modern languages, to be nominated by us to be our Profeſſors of modern hiſtory, one for the Univerſity of Cambridge, and the other for that of Oxford, who ſhall be obliged to read lectures in the public ſchools, at ſuch times as ſhall hereafter be appointed. And we have further determined, that each of the Profeſſors ſhall have a ſtipend of four hundred pounds per annum, and out of the ſtipend ſhall be obliged to maintain with ſufficient ſalaries, in the Univerſity where he ſhall be eſtabliſhed, two perſons at leaſt, well qualified to teach and inſtruct in writing and ſpeaking the languages, which Teachers ſhall be under the direction of the Profeſſors reſpectively, and ſhall be obliged to learn two at leaſt of the languages, both the Profeſſors and Teachers taking eſpecial care, that the times and hours for the inſtructing and teaching the Scholars be ſo ordered, as not to interfere with thoſe appointed for their academical ſtudies; which Profeſſors and Teachers ſhall be obliged, once every year, to tranſmit an atteſted account of the progreſs made by each Scholar committed to their care, to our principal Secretaries of State, to be laid before us, that we may encourage the diligence and application of ſuch amongſt them, as ſhall have qualified themſelves for our ſervice, by giving them ſuitable employments either at home or abroad, as occaſions ſhall offer.'

The two firſt Profeſſors were Mr. Gregory, of Chriſt-Church, Oxford; and Mr. Samuel Harris, Fellow of Peter-Houſe, Cambridge.

For a farther encouragement to the Univerſities, the King ordered that his Almoner ſhould chuſe, out of the Members of Oxford and Cambridge, twenty-four Preachers to officiate alternately in the Chapel at White-Hall, with a ſalary of thirty pounds a year each.

The inoculation of the ſmall-pox had now begun to be practiced in England, and ſucceeded very well with the two Princeſſes, Amelia and Carolina, and had the ſame good effect on Prince Frederick, the Duke of Bedford, and the Lady Mary Ruſſel, his ſiſter. But others are ſaid to ſuffer under it, particularly the Earl of Sunderland's ſon, who died in the operation, upon which Dr. Jurin, Secretary to the Royal Society, publiſhed a treatiſe in favour of inoculating.

The 21ſt of May died Robert Harley, Earl of Oxford, and Earl Mortimer, whoſe life and character is given at large, by the Author of the * Political State (1).

On

preſs faction, which was the principal ſource of all the calamities and enormities, in which the Nation was afterwards involved. That upon the Reſtoration of King Charles II. they, who at that time had the management of affairs, did not think it proper to keep up a great number of regular troops, and therefore choſe to reſtore to the Crown its antient power over the Militia of the Kingdom; but that there was a ſecret in that. That King James II, not truſting to the Militia, had an army of 20,000 men, which would have ſecured him the Crown, had he not given a general diſguſt to his people, by violating the fundamental laws, and endeavouring to ſubvert the Conſtitution in Church and State. That in the Reign of King William of glorious memory, when ſome leading men in the Parliament thought fit to diſband the army, after the peace of Ryſwick, they fell upon a project to ſecure the Government, which was to raiſe and diſcipline the Militia; but that they ſoon after perceived the unprofitableneſs of that ſcheme, the Militia proving a great burthen to the People, and of no ſervice to the Government. That the reduction of the army had then a double ill effect; for, on the one hand, it obliged King William, and his Miniſters, to enter into a treaty of partition; and, on the other hand, it very probably encouraged France to break that treaty, which occaſioned a ſecond war, and was the ſource of two thirds of that heavy debt, under which the Nation labours at this day. That the diſbanding of the army had almoſt the ſame ill effect in the Reign of the late Queen, having encouraged Lewis XIV. to furniſh the Pretender with a land-force and a fleet to invade theſe Kingdoms. That, if at preſent they weakened the hands of the Government, we ſhould be expoſed to the like inſults and attempts. That, if our enemies may be credited in an affair, in which it is their intereſt to ſpeak truth, they ſeemed confidently aſſured of ſucceſs in their deſign of overturning the Government, provided they had only an aſſiſtance of three or four thouſand men from abroad; and that, conſidering the method now practiſed in embarkations, how good, and how ſtrong ſoever our fleet may be, it was impoſſible to hinder a foreign Prince, who ſhould have a mind to undertake it, to throw ſuch a number of men upon England.' His Lordſhip concluded, 'That the conſtant tenour of his Majeſty's Adminiſtration, ſince his happy acceſſion to the Throne, ought to convince every body, that, by the continuing the number of regular forces now on foot, his Majeſty and Miniſters have nothing in view but the public ſafety and ſecurity, and thereby to give the people an opportunity to improve trade, and encourage induſtry, as the only means to retrieve their former loſſes.'

(1) The moſt material particulars, beſides what relates to his family and circumſtances, are as follows:

By his ſtrict conjunction with the Foleys and Winningtons, his relations and their friends, he gained at laſt ſuch an extenſive intereſt, as to be choſen Speaker of the Houſe of Commons.' When the Queen thought fit to lay aſide the Earl of Nottingham, Principal Secretary of State, Mr. Robert Harley was pitched upon to ſucceed him as her Favourite and Prime Miniſter, ſuppoſing he would be moſt agreeable to the Whigs, from his education among the Diſſenters. The Duke of Marlborough and the Earl of Godolphin's main deſign, in advancing him, was to ſecure his intereſt in the

Houſe

On the 15th of June died Dr. Henry Sacheverel. Though he had taken the oaths to the Government, his will ſhewed he perſevered to the end in the ſame ſentiments, for, amongſt his legacies, he left five hundred pounds to the late Biſhop of Rocheſter. It does not appear, that he was any way concerned in the plot.

As to foreign affairs, one of the moſt remarkable events, this year, was the abdication of Philip V, King of Spain. Having taken the reſolution to renounce his Crown, and retire with the Queen to the Monaſtery of St. Ildefonſo, he ſent from thence, the 15th of January 1723-4, the Marquiſs de Grimaldo, Principal Secretary of State, with a packet for the Prince of Aſturias, his Son, who, the day before, returned from St. Ildefonſo to the Eſcurial. The Marquiſs being arrived there, and having acquainted the Prince with his meſſage, his Highneſs ſent for the Infantes to come to his apartment; and alſo ordered the Count de Altamira, the Marquiſs de Valero, the Duke de San Pedro, the Count de Salazar, the Marquiſs de Magney, the Count de Safateli, and the Prior of San Lorenzo, to attend there, and be witneſſes of what ſhould paſs; who being all preſent, the Marquiſs delivered the packet to the Prince of Aſturias, who returned it to him opened, that he might read what was in it, which was the inſtrument of his Father's renunciation of the Crown, accompanied with a letter of advice to direct the new King's conduct. The Renunciation was alſo ſent to the Preſident of the Council of Caſtile, and ordered to be publiſhed throughout the Kingdom (1). Upon this it was reſolved in the Council of Caſtile, that King Lewis might immediately take the Government upon him without aſſembling the Cortes, as having been already ſworn to and acknowledged Prince of Spain. The penſion, which their Catholic Majeſties reſerved to themſelves, was about 100,000 piſtoles, and they likewiſe reſerved about 25,000 for each of the Infantes. 1724.

Perſecution in France.

The King of France, at the perſuaſion of the Biſhop of Frejus, and contrary to the ſentiments of the Duke of Bourbon, publiſhed a ſevere edict this year againſt his Proteſtant ſubjects: Whoever performed any exerciſe of the Reformed Religion, if a man, was to be ſent to the gallies; if a woman, to be ſhaved, and confined where the Judges thought fit: The Proteſtant Preachers to be put to death; and thoſe, who had any communication directly or indirectly with ſuch Miniſters, condemned to the gallies: To give their children foreign education, to be puniſhed with a fine of 6000 livres: The memory of thoſe, who died in the profeſſion of the Proteſtant Religion, to be proſecuted: All concealed Proteſtants, who diſſuaded ſick perſons from dying Catholics, to be ſent to the gallies, if men, and, if women, as before: To conſent, that children ſhould marry abroad without licence, to be puniſhed with the gallies; and Baptiſm and Schooling were forbidden to Proteſtants, under the like pains and penalties. To put a ſtop to theſe ſeverities, Mr. Horace Walpole had orders to ſollicit the French Court in behalf of the Proteſtants; but he could obtain no

---

Houſe of Commons, and they fondly imagined, that, as to the grand affairs, either he would not intermeddle, or would blindly follow their directions; but they ſoon after found, that a perſon of his ambitious ſpirit would not be contented to act an under part.

They, who extol his liberality and munificence to learned men, are no more to be depended upon, than when they tell us, that he diſcharged the office of Secretary to King William, with great addreſs; for, as it is certain on the one hand, that he never ſerved King William in that capacity, it is no leſs true on the other hand, that the only perſon, on whom he beſtowed any public mark of favour, was Dr. Jonathan Swift, the famous Author of the Tale of a Tub, whom he employed, with ſome other obſcure Writers, to banter and ridicule all that oppoſed his meaſures. He was the reverſe of his predeceſſor in the Treaſury, the Earl of Godolphin, who never kept ſuitors unprofitably in ſuſpence, nor promiſed any thing that he was not reſolved to perform. The Earl of Oxford, on the contrary, kept them, who had any pretenſions, in perpetual dependance, by feeding them with hopes. This maxim he practiſed in a moſt barbarous manner, with Mr. Rowe, Author of the tragedy of Tamerlane, the ſtory is too well known to be repeated. They who commend him for being a kind friend, and generous enemy, have forgot with what an unrelenting fury he purſued his Benefactor, the immortal Duke of Marlborough, and Mr. Stephens, the Miniſter, whom he cauſed to be proſecuted to the pillory, and that ignominious puniſhment was not remitted, till he was brought to the place of execution. His prodigious riſe and greatneſs was more owing to his cunning in finding out the weakneſſes of thoſe he had to deal with, than to his own bright parts. For he neither was maſter of eloquence in ſpeech, nor of ſtile in writing, but in both puzzled and intricate: His conſtant deſign being to diſcover other people's thoughts, and conceal his own. But he had at laſt the fate, which all ambidexters deſerve, to be diſtruſted and diſregarded by all parties; of which he was ſo ſenſible, that, for ſeveral years before his death, he ſeldom came to Parliament, but lived in a Country retirement, endeavouring to drown his melancholy thoughts in wine, which at laſt dozed his ſpirits, and certainly abridged his life.

(1) The renunciation was as follows:

Having theſe four years conſidered with due reflection, and maturely, the miſeries of this life, through the infirmities, wars, and troubles, with which God has been pleaſed to viſit me during the twenty-three years of my Reign; and having likewiſe conſidered, that my eldeſt Son Don Lewis, ſworn Prince of Spain, is of ſufficient age, is married, and has capacity, judgment, and the qualities fit for ruling and governing juſtly and happily this Monarchy; I have determined abſolutely to quit the poſſeſſion and adminiſtration of it, renouncing the ſame, with all its Dominions, Kingdoms, and Lordſhips, in favour of the ſaid Prince Don Lewis, my eldeſt Son; and to retire with the Queen, in whom I have found a ready diſpoſition and voluntary inclination, to accompany me to this place and ſeat of St. Ildefonſo, here to ſerve God, diſengaged from all other cares, to meditate on death, and to ſeek my ſalvation. This I communicate to the Council for their information, to be notified to the proper perſons, that my reſolution may be made known to all.

His letter to his Son was remarkable neither for ſtile nor ſentiments: Amongſt his inſtructions, he ſays: 'Preſerve ever a great devotion to the moſt Holy Virgin, and put yourſelf, as well as your Kingdoms, under her protection, ſeeing you cannot, by any other means, better obtain what may be needful for you, and for them. Be always, as you ought, obedient to the Holy See, and to the Pope, as the Vicar of Jeſus Chriſt. Protect and defend ever the Tribunal of the Holy Inquiſition, which may be called the bulwark of the faith, and to which it owes its preſervation in all its purity in the Dominions of Spain; ſo that the hereſies which have afflicted the other parts of Chriſtendom, and produced ſuch horrid and deplorable ravages in them, could never be able to get footing here.'

1724. no other anſwer, than that the King's edicts muſt be obeyed.

However, the Court of France declared, that the edict againſt the Proteſtants ſhould not affect the inhabitants of Alſatia, their religious rights being founded on treaties of peace. This was done to prevent the Alſatians, terrified with this edict, from putting themſelves under the protection of Germany.

and at Thorn.

The Proteſtants at Thorn, in Royal Pruſſia, belonging to Poland, were likewiſe treated with great cruelty, on account of a pretended riot in July, which was really begun by a Student of the Jeſuits College, and for which, the Preſident and Vice-Preſident of that City, with thirteen others, were condemned to be beheaded, and others quartered and burnt, and the Proteſtant Counſellors at Thorn to be removed from the Magiſtracy, and Papiſts put in their places; and the Church of St. Mary to be taken from the Proteſtants, and given to the Franciſcan Friars. Mr. Finch, the Britiſh Miniſter at Dreſden, had orders to go to Poland, and inſiſt upon ſatisfaction for the Proteſtants of Thorn, and other places in that Kingdom, oppreſſed by the Papiſts; but the Poles could not be prevailed upon to do the Proteſtants juſtice (1).

Commotions in Scotland.

A ſet of enthuſiaſtical Levellers roſe in the Weſt of Scotland, who, under pretence of eſtabliſhing equality among Chriſtians, pulled down incloſures, and committed great ravages and depredations. But, the Royal regiment of Scots Fuzileers being ordered to march againſt them, about the latter end of June, and three other regiments of foot landing at Galloway at the ſame time, they ſoon ſuppreſſed thoſe diſorders.

The third Seſſion of the ſecond Parliament of King George.

The Parliament met again the 12th of November, when his Majeſty made the following ſpeech to both Houſes by the mouth of the Lord-Chancellor:

My Lords and Gentlemen,

" I AM perſuaded you ſhare with me in the " ſatisfaction I feel at the proſperous ſitua- " tion of affairs: Peace with all powers abroad; " at home perfect tranquillity, plenty, and an " uninterrupted enjoyment of all civil and reli- " gious rights, are moſt diſtinguiſhing marks " of the favour and protection of the Divine " Providence: And theſe, with all their hap- " py conſequences, will, I doubt not, by the " bleſſing of God upon our joint endeavours, " be long continued to my people.

" The ſame proviſion by ſea and land, for " the defence and ſafety of the Nation, will " continue to make us reſpected abroad, and " conſequently ſecure at home. The ſame at- " tention to the improvement of the public re- " venues, and to the eaſe and encouragement of " trade and navigation, will eſtabliſh credit up- " on the ſtrongeſt baſis, and raiſe ſuch a ſpirit " of induſtry, as will not only enable us gradu- " ally to diſcharge the national debt, but will " likewiſe greatly increaſe the wealth, power, " and influence of this Kingdom.

Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons,

" I have ordered the proper Officers to pre- " pare and lay before you eſtimates of the ex- " pences for the ſervice of the enſuing year; " and, as they do not exceed what has been found " by experience to be abſolutely neceſſary for " the ſecurity of the Kingdom, I make no " queſtion, but I ſhall have your ready concur- " rence in raiſing the Supplies in ſuch manner, " as ſhall be moſt eaſy to my people.

" There is one thing, that I cannot but men- " tion to you, as deſerving your particular con- " ſideration,

(1) The affair of Thorn was thus: On the 16th of July, the ordinary proceſſion at Thorn being arrived at St. James's Church-yard, a great number of the Citizens children reſorted thither to ſee it, with their hats under their arms, according to cuſtom; but a Student of the Jeſuits College, not ſatisfied with that mark of civility and reſpect, would needs have them kneel down, and gave them bad language and blows. About two hours after the proceſſion was over, this ſame Student, with ſome of his comrades, inſulted ſeveral young people, without the leaſt provocation on their part; but, in the end, this troubleſome young fellow was ſeized by the ſoldiers of the garriſon, and brought to the guard, after he had wounded ſeveral Citizens with ſtones. Next day the Jeſuits Students got together again, and meeting one of the Citizens, whom they had abuſed the day before, they would oblige him to get their comrade ſet at liberty; but the Citizen had the good fortune to get out of their hands, and ran to his own houſe for ſafety, whither they purſued him ſword in hand. In the mean time the Preſident of the City had given order for ſetting him at liberty, at the requeſt of the Rector of the Jeſuits College, but, another Student being likewiſe carried to the guard-room, his comrades would oblige the Preſident to ſet him at liberty alſo, which he refuſed to do, till he had ſpoke to the Rector. Upon this the Jeſuits Students ran furiouſly to the guard-room to reſcue their comrade, but, being repulſed, they thought to revenge themſelves upon a townſman, whom they purſued with drawn ſwords to the Burgrave's houſe, where he took ſhelter. They then attacked a Lutheran Student, who was in his night-gown at the door of his lodgings. They dragged him by the hair as far as their own College, threw him into the canal, and beat him unmercifully; which being done, they ſallied again into the City, and wounded ſeveral people with their ſabres, who were coming to the aſſiſtance of the Lutheran Student. But, the Preſident having ſent thither the town-guard, they were obliged to betake themſelves to their College, where they kept the Lutheran Student, till the Jeſuits Student was firſt ſet at liberty. While this exchange was making, ſome of the trained-bands of the town were ordered to poſt themſelves before the Jeſuits College, to protect them from the enraged populace. But, the Students throwing ſtones at them, and firing upon them, it was not poſſible to reſtrain the people, who forced open the gate, and were doing what they could to revenge the cruelty of the Jeſuits Students, when, in that very inſtant, the Town-Clerk, who had got the Lutheran releaſed, came and obliged them to retire. The riot was then thought to be over, but the guards, that were poſted before the College, were ſcarce marched off, when the Jeſuits Students from within fired again, and threw ſtones at the people, who again forced open the gate, plundered the College, and committed great diſorders, till a detachment of the garriſon and trained-bands came to the Jeſuits aſſiſtance, and diſperſed the people.

The bloody decree (notwithſtanding the interpoſition of ſeveral Proteſtant Princes and States) was put in execution, only the Vice-Preſident was reprieved. As many were exorbitantly fined, with the money ariſing from thence, a ſtone pillar with the Virgin Mary's ſtatue was erected where her picture was burnt.

724. " ſideration. It is too manifeſt, that the funds " eſtabliſhed for the finiſhing the works at " Greenwich Hoſpital, and providing for a com- " petent number of ſeamen there, cannot, in " time of peace, be ſufficient to anſwer the " expences of this great and neceſſary work. It " is therefore very much to be wiſhed, that ſome " method could be found out to make a farther " proviſion for a comfortable ſupport to our ſea- " men, worn out in the ſervice of their Coun- " try, and labouring under old age and infir- " mities.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

" You muſt all be ſenſible how much our " preſent happineſs is owing to your union and " ſteady conduct. It is therefore wholly un- " neceſſary to recommend to you unanimity and " diſpatch in all your deliberations. The zeal " and abilities you have on all occaſions ſhewn " in ſupporting the intereſt of your Country, " even under the greateſt difficulties, leave me no " room to doubt of my having your intire and " effectual concurrence in every thing, that can " tend to the ſervice of the public, and to the " good of my people."

ate on rmy. After the addreſſes of thanks from both Houſes, the Commons proceeded upon the Supplies for the next year. This brought on a debate about the land-forces, particularly the additional four thouſand men; but at length it was voted, that the number ſhould be as the laſt year 18,264 effective men, and the ſum of 654,488 l. 17 s. 8 d. was granted for their maintenance. For raiſing this and the other Supplies, two ſhillings in the pound on lands and the malt tax were voted.

Great part of this Seſſion was taken up in the trial of the Earl of Macclesfield, and the repeal of the late Lord Bolingbroke's attainder. There had been for ſome time a murmuring againſt the inſufficiency of the Maſters in Chancery to anſwer the great ſums lodged in their hands by the Suitors in that Court; and it was ſuſpected, that the large ſums, which they paid for admiſſion into their places, made their way more eaſy than it ought to have been, and very much leſſened the inquiry into their qualifications. This abuſe had indeed been long growing up to this degree; and there was ſcarce any thing bought and ſold more freely and openly than a Maſter in Chancery's place. The Suitors money, for which the Maſters paid no intereſt, brought them in great intereſt from the funds; and, the profits of the place being conſequently doubled or trebled to what they had been before, there was ſuch an opportunity to inrich themſelves by the advantages they made of the money they had in their hands, that it is not ſurprizing, that the Lord-Keepers and Lord-Chancellor doubled and trebled the price, which the Maſters were to pay for admittance. But, the complaints againſt this practice growing ſtrong and public, and the Lord-Chancellor Macclesfield finding it impracticable for him to put a ſtop to thoſe complaints, or keep the Great Seal under them, he reſigned it the beginning of January, 1724-5; and it was committed to the cuſtody of Sir Joſeph Jekyll, Maſter of the Rolls, Sir Jeffery Gilbert, and Sir Robert Raymond, who having in in Council taken the oath as Lords Commiſſioners of the Great Seal, the King ſaid to them as follows: 1724.

' I have had ſuch experience of your integrity and ability, that it is with pleaſure I now put the Great Seal into your hands. You are fully informed of the ſtate of the accounts of the Maſters in Chancery. I earneſtly recommend to you the taking effectual care, that intire ſatisfaction be made to the Suitors of the Court; and that they be not expoſed to any dangers for the future; and I have ſuch confidence in the faithful diſcharge of the truſt I now repoſe in you, that I am perſuaded you will look narrowly to the behaviour of all the Officers under your juriſdiction, and will ſee, that they act with the ſtricteſt regard to juſtice, and to the eaſe of my ſubjects.'

On the 9th of February, Mr. Comptroller delivered the following meſſage to the Houſe of Commons:

George R.

' His Majeſty having reaſon to apprehend, that the Suitors of the Court of Chancery were in danger of loſing a conſiderable ſum of money from the inſufficiency of ſome of the Maſters, thought himſelf obliged, in juſtice and compaſſion to the ſaid Suitors, to take the moſt ſpeedy and proper method the law would allow, for inquiring into the ſtate of the Maſters accounts, and ſecuring their effects for the benefit of the Suitors: And his Majeſty, having had ſeveral reports laid before him in purſuance of the directions he had given, has ordered the reports to be communicated to the Houſe, that they may have as full and as perfect a view of this important affair, as the ſhortneſs of the time, and the circumſtances and nature of the proceedings, would admit of.'

Theſe reports, and the papers referred to in them, being taken into conſideration by the Commons, Sir George Oxenden roſe up, and ſaid, ' That it manifeſtly appeared by theſe reports, which after the ſtricteſt enquiry, and upon the matureſt deliberation, had been drawn up by perſons of the greateſt weight and authority for their abilities, experience, high ſtations, and integrity, that enormous abuſes had crept into the High-Court of Chancery, chiefly occaſioned by the Magiſtrate, who was at the head of that Court, and whoſe duty conſequently it was to prevent the ſame. That the crimes and miſdemeanors of the late Lord Chancellor were many, and of various natures, but might be reduced to theſe three heads: 1. That he had taken into his own hands the eſtates and effects of many widows, orphans, and lunatics, and either had diſpoſed of part of them arbitrarily to his own profit, or connived at the Officers under him, making advantage of the ſame. 2. That he had raiſed to an exorbitant price the offices and places of the Maſters in Chancery, and, in order to enable them to pay to him thoſe high prices and gratuities for their admiſſion, had truſted in their hands large ſums of money belonging to Suitors in Chancery. 3. That in ſeveral caſes he had made divers irregular orders. So that, in his opinion, that firſt Magiſtate in the Kingdom was fallen from the height of the dignities and honours, to which he had been raiſed by the King's Royal bounty and favour, to the depth of infamy and diſgrace. And therefore he moved, 1724-25. moved, that Thomas Earl of Macclesfield be impeached of high crimes and misdemeanors.' This motion was seconded by Mr. Strickland, and supported by Mr. Doddington, one of the Lords of the Treasury, who failed not to aggravate the Earl's misdemeanors, which, they said, were of the greatest and most dangerous consequence, since most of the estates in England, once in thirty years, pass through the Court of Chancery. Mr. Pulteney, who spoke next, said, 'That it was far from his thoughts to endeavour to abate the just resentment, which the Gentlemen, who spoke last, shewed against the great abuses, that had been committed in the Court of Chancery: But that, in his opinion, they went a little too fast in so weighty and important an affair, by which means they might lose the very end they aimed at, the effectual punishing the person, by whose neglect at least, those abuses had been committed. That whatever deference they ought to pay, on this occasion, to the capacity, experience, integrity, and authority of the persons, who had drawn up the reports, that had been laid before them, yet it little became the dignity, and was even derogatory to the prerogative of that House, which is the grand inquest of the Nation, to found an impeachment upon those reports, without a previous inquiry and examination into the proofs, that were to support it. And therefore he moved, that this affair might be referred to the consideration of a select Committee.' Sir William Wyndham urged, 'That, by proceeding by way of impeachment upon reports laid before them from above, the Commons would make a dangerous precedent, and seem to give up the most valuable of their privileges, the inquest after State-criminals.' These reasons had great weight with several Members, particularly on Sir Wilfred Lawson and Sir Thomas Pengelly, who supported Mr. Pulteney's motion. But, Mr. Yonge and Sir Clement Wearg having answered those objections, the question was put, and it was carried by a majority of 273 against 164, That Thomas Earl of Macclesfield should be impeached of High Crimes and Misdemeanors; and Sir George Oxenden was ordered to go up to the Lords, and at their bar to impeach him in the name of the House of Commons. This being done, a Committee was appointed to draw up the articles. Then a bill was ordered to be brought in, to indemnify the Masters in Chancery from the penalties of the act of the 5th and 6th years of King Edward the Sixth (against buying and selling of offices) upon their discovering what consideration, price, or gratuity they paid, or agreed to pay, for the purchase of, or for their admission to their respective offices; which bill passed both Houses, and had the Royal Assent.

Trial of the Earl of Macclesfield. May 6.

The Earl of Macclesfield's trial lasted twenty days. The eight first articles against him were, for taking large sums of the Masters in Chancery for admission or purchase. By the other articles, he was accused of admitting persons of small substance, and of suffering an unjust and fraudulent practice to continue, of paying for their places out of the Suitors money, by means of which great deficiencies happened: Of neglecting to secure Fleetwood Dormer's person or effects, who, by disposing Suitors money to his own use, had caused a deficiency of 24,000 l.: Of neglecting to prevent the like abuses for the future, by taking security upon admission: Of borrowing money of the Masters out of the Suitors cash, and making use of the same so long as he pleased. Upon these and other accounts, sentence was passed upon him by the mouth of Sir Peter King, Speaker of the House of Lords: That he should be fined 30,000 l. and imprisoned in the Tower till the sum was paid. 1725.

After the trial, it was moved that the Earl should be for ever rendered uncapable of any office in the State; but the motion was rejected, as well as another for his not sitting in Parliament, or coming within the verge of the Court. The Earl was carried to the Tower, and confined in the same apartment as was formerly the Earl of Oxford's; and, three days after, the King in Council ordered his name to be struck out of the list of Privy-Counsellors. The Earl paid his fine about six weeks after, and was discharged from his confinement. Sir Peter King, being created Baron of Oakham in Surry, succeeded him in the Chancellorship (1).

The debts of the civil list being increased to above 500,000 l. the King, on the 8th of April, sent by Mr. Walpole the following message to the Commons: Debts of the civil list discharged.

'The necessities of his Majesty's Government having rendered it impracticable for his Majesty to make any considerable retrenchments in the expences of his civil list; and having engaged his Majesty in some extraordinary expences, which he is persuaded his loyal Commons will believe have been employed, not only for the honour and dignity of the Crown, but for the interest and prosperity of his People, his Majesty hopes, from the known zeal and affection of his Parliament to his Person and Government, that he may be enabled to make use of the funds, lately settled for the payment of the civil list annuities, and for replacing the same to his Majesty in the most advantageous manner, and, upon the credit thereof, to raise a sum of money sufficient to redeem those annuities, and to discharge the present debts contracted in his civil Government.' Mr. Pulteney, Cofferer of the Houshold, who, about this time, began to be dissatisfied, moved for an address, that an account should be laid before the House of all monies paid for secret service, pensions, bounties, &c. from the 25th of March, 1721, to the 25th of March, 1725. This address being voted, a motion was made for

(1) This great Lawyer was designed by his father to follow his own trade, that of a Salter, or Grocer, in the City of Exeter; and did actually serve several years, as (or in the nature of) an apprentice to it; but his genius to learning, breaking through the disadvantages of education, discovered itself in two or three very learned treatises, of the Ecclesiastical Constitution, of the Creed, and Primitive Christianity, which he wrote even while he was breeding up in the trade of his father; who, being related to the famous Philosopher Mr. Locke, did, doubtless, by the advice of that great man, enter his son in the Temple, where he soon distinguished himself in the study and practice of the law. His father was a native of Glastonbury in Somersetshire; and, when the charter of that antient Corporation was revived, in the year 1705, Sir Peter King was appointed their Recorder by it, and continued so to his death.

25. for the Houſe to go into a Grand Committee, to conſider of the King's meſſage; but Mr. Pulteney repreſented, 'That, the Houſe having ordered an addreſs for ſeveral papers relating to the Civil Liſts and other expences, they ought, in his opinion, to put off the conſideration of the meſſage, till thoſe papers were laid before the Houſe; it being natural to inquire into the cauſes of a diſeaſe, before one applies remedies to it.' This being oppoſed by Mr. Walpole, Mr. Pulteney replied, 'That he wondered how ſo great a debt could be contracted in three years time, but was not ſurprized ſome perſons were ſo eager to have the deficiencies of the Civil Liſt made good, ſince they and their friends had ſo great a ſhare in it; and deſired to know, whether this was all that was due, or whether they were to expect another reckoning?' To this it was anſwered in general, 'That there was indeed a heavy debt on the Civil Liſt, and a great many penſions; but that moſt of theſe had been granted in King William's and Queen Anne's Reigns, ſome by King Charles the Second, and very few by his preſent Majeſty. That, ſince the Civil Liſt was firſt ſettled for his Majeſty, an expence of above 90,000 l. per ann. had happened, which could not then be foreſeen, and therefore was left unprovided for. That, upon examination of the account of the Civil Liſt debts, it would appear, that moſt of thoſe expences were either for the neceſſary ſupport of the dignity of the Crown and Government, or for the public good. That there was indeed a penſion of 5,000 l. of another nature, upon the account of the Cofferer's place, but which could not well be avoided; for both Lord Godolphin, who was in that office, and his father, had ſo well deſerved of the Government, that they could not handſomely remove him without a gratuity, and therefore they gave him a penſion of 5,000 l. to make room for the worthy Gentleman, who now enjoys the poſt.' Then the Commons, in a Grand Committee, took the meſſage into conſideration, and a motion was made, 'That, for the redeeming the annuities of 25,000 l. per ann. charged on the Civil Liſt revenues by an act of Parliament of the 7th year of his Majeſty, and for diſcharging the debts and arrears due from his Majeſty to his ſervants, tradeſmen, and others, his Majeſty be enabled to raiſe any ſum not exceeding one million, by Exchequer bills, loans, or otherwiſe, on the credit of the deductions of ſix-pence per pound, directed by that act, and of the Civil Liſt revenues, at an intereſt not exceeding 3 l. per cent. till repayment of the principal.' This motion, after ſome further debate, being carried by a majority of 239 againſt 119, a bill paſſed for that purpoſe, and received the Royal Aſſent the 20th of April.

Bo- The ſame day a petition was preſented to the ke Houſe of Commons in behalf of Henry St. John, late Viſcount Bolingbroke, attainted for High-Treaſon. The purport of the petition was to ſuſpend the execution of the law, with reſpect to his forfeitures, as a pardon ſuſpended it, with reſpect to his life. After the petition had been offered to the Houſe by the Lord Finch, Mr. Walpole * acquainted the Houſe, that he had received his Majeſty's commands to inform them, that the Petitioner had ſeven years ſince made his humble application and ſubmiſſion to the King, with aſſurances of duty, allegiance, and fidelity, which his Majeſty ſo far accepted, as to give him encouragement to hope for ſome future marks of his grace and goodneſs; and that his Majeſty is ſatisfied, that the Petitioner's behaviour has been ſuch, as convinces him, that he is an object of his mercy; and his Majeſty conſents, that this petition be preſented to this Houſe. Then the petition was read, ſetting forth, that the Petitioner is truly concerned for his offence, in not having ſurrendered himſelf, purſuant to the act (whereby the Petitioner was attainted of High-Treaſon, and forfeited all his real and perſonal eſtate) and, by reaſon thereof, hath ſuffered very great loſſes. That, upon the Petitioner's marriage in 1700, Sir Walter St. John, Bart. and the Right Honourable the Lord Viſcount St. John (the Petitioner's grandfather and father) together with the Petitioner, made a ſettlement of the family-eſtates in the Counties of Wilts, Surrey, and Middleſex, all which premiſes (except a very ſmall part thereof) are now in the poſſeſſion of the Petitioner's father, and the Petitioner cannot become intitled thereto for his life, until after his father's deceaſe: That the Petitioner hath, in a moſt humble and dutiful manner, made his ſubmiſſion to his Majeſty, and given him the ſtrongeſt aſſurances of his inviolable fidelity, and of his zeal for his ſervice, and for the ſupport of the preſent happy Eſtabliſhment, which his Majeſty hath been moſt graciouſly pleaſed to accept; and praying, that leave may be given to bring in a bill for enabling the Petitioner, and the Heirs-male of his body (notwithſtanding his Attainder) to take and enjoy the ſettled eſtate, according to the limitations of the ſettlement, or other aſſurances therein mentioned, and for enabling the Petitioner to hold and enjoy any perſonal eſtate or effects, whereof he now is, or hereafter ſhall be poſſeſſed, and to inveſt the ſame in the purchaſe of any real or perſonal eſtate within this Kingdom. After the reading of this petition, the Lord Finch moved for a bill, which was ſeconded by Mr. Walpole, who, having repeated part of what he had before laid before the Houſe by the King's command, added, 'He was fully ſatisfied, that the Petitioner had ſufficiently attoned for his paſt offences, and therefore deſerved the favour of that Houſe, ſo far as to enable him to enjoy the family-inheritance, that was ſettled upon him; which, according to the opinion of the beſt Lawyers, he could not do by virtue of his Majeſty's pardon, without an act of Parliament.' This was confirmed by the Attorney and Sollicitor-General. But, after a ſhort diſpute among the Lawyers about the validity of ſuch a pardon in the preſent caſe, Mr. Methuen, Comptroller of the Houſhold, ſtrenuouſly oppoſed the Lord Finch's motion, and ſaid, 'That, as he had the honour to be one of the King's immediate ſervants, it might perhaps by ſome be thought unbecoming his ſtation to appear againſt a petition, to the preſenting of which his Majeſty, in his Royal clemency and goodneſs, hath graciouſly been pleaſed to give his conſent. But that, being at liberty to follow the dictates of his conſcience in this matter, he would freely declare his opinion, that the public crimes, for which this Petitioner ſtood attainted, were ſo heinous, ſo flagrant, and of ſo deep a dye, as not to admit of any expiation or attonement; and whatever he might have done to deſerve his Majeſty's private grace and pardon, yet he thought him altogether unworthy of any national favour.'

1725.

1725. favour.' Then he went through the late Lord Bolingbroke's conduct, while he had a ſhare in the Adminiſtration of affairs in Queen Anne's Reign; 'how he was the principal adviſer of, and actor in the wicked meaſures, that were then purſued; his clandeſtine Negotiation of peace, without the privity of the Queen's Allies, contrary to the expreſs tenor of the Grand Alliance; his inſolent behaviour towards all the Confederates in general, and the Dutch in particular; his ſacrificing the intereſt of the whole Confederacy, and the honour of his own Country, particularly in the baſe abandoning of the poor and brave Catalans; a tranſaction, with which he had an opportunity to be intimately acquainted, as having had the honour, at that juncture, to ſerve the Nation as the Queen's Miniſter in Portugal: And, to ſum up all his crimes in one, his traiterous deſign of defeating the Proteſtant Succeſſion, the foundation of both our preſent and future happineſs; and of advancing a Popiſh Pretender to the Throne, which would have involved his native Country in endleſs miſery.' Though this ſpeech made a great impreſſion on the Aſſembly, and ſeveral other eminent Members ſpoke to the ſame purpoſe, particularly Mr. Onſlow and Lord William Pawlet, the motion for a bill was carried by 231 againſt 113. When the bill was was brought in, it was moved, that a clauſe ſhould be inſerted, to diſable him to ſit in Parliament, or enjoy any place under the King; but, upon Mr. Walpole's oppoſing it, the clauſe was rejected, and the bill paſſed both Houſes, and received the Royal aſſent.

Bill paſſed in his favour, May 31.

Acts paſſed this Seſſion The moſt material acts paſſed this Seſſion, beſides what have been mentioned, were theſe, an act for diſarming the Highlands, and ſecuring the peace of Scotland. A proteſt was entered againſt this act in the Houſe of Lords, alledging, That the diſorders in the preamble were not proved: Too great power was given to the Lord-Lieutenants and Juſtices of the peace, and that the behaviour of the Highlanders had of late been inoffenſive.

Another act paſſed for regulating elections within the City of London, and for preſerving the peace, good order, and government of the City. This law, which is now the rule for all elections in the City, raiſed ſo great a ferment in London, that a printed ſummons was diſperſed inviting the Citizens to aſſemble at Guild-Hall to conſider of it. This attempt being reſented by the Lord Mayor and Aldermen, the gates of Guild-Hall were ordered to be ſhut, and the Government was acquainted with what had paſſed. Upon this the guards were doubled at St. James's, Leiceſter-Houſe, and Somerſet-Houſe, and ſuch precautions taken as kept all things quiet. This ſpirit was ſuppoſed to have been raiſed by that majority of the Common-Council, who had voted thanks to Mr. Francis Child and Mr. John Barnard, for ſtrenuouſly oppoſing the bill. By a clauſe of this act, the right of election of Aldermen and Common-council-men belongs to Freemen, being houſholders, paying ſcot and lot to the amount of 30 s. provided they have been in houſes of 10 l. a year, twelve Kalendar months. This, and ſome other particulars, occaſioned a petition from the Freemen of London againſt the bill, whilſt it was depending.

A motion was made in the Houſe of Commons for inſerting a clauſe in a bill about the 50 new Churches, to diſable bodies corporate to purchaſe advowſons or other eccleſiaſtical preferments. This motion made by Mr. Arthur Onſlow was chiefly intended to reſtrain the Univerſities from purchaſing advowſons, but it was rejected.

Thomas Guy, formerly a Bookſeller of London, and afterwards Member of Parliament for Tamworth, dying in the 80th year of his age, left a benefaction of 200,000 l. to a Hoſpital for Incurables erected by himſelf, and near finiſhed in his life-time, beſides many other charities. In order to the better management and diſpoſition of his charities, an act paſſed the 24th of March, for incorporating the Executors of the laſt will and teſtament of Mr. Thomas Guy.

Two acts likewiſe paſſed to diſſolve the marriages of William Yonge with Mary Heathcote, and of Francis Anneſly with Elizabeth Sutton.

The Princeſs of Wales was delivered on the 5th of December of a Princeſs at Leiceſter-Houſe, who was afterward chriſtened by the name of Louiſa, and is now married to the Prince of Denmark.

The King put an end to the Seſſion with the following ſpeech:

My Lords and Gentlemen,

" I AM come to put an end to this Seſſion " of Parliament, which, though it has been " extended to an unexpected length, has been " ſo well employed for the ſervice and intereſt " of the Public, that I aſſure myſelf it will be " to the general ſatisfaction of the Nation.

Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons,

" The prudent uſe you have made of the preſent flouriſhing ſtate of credit, by a certain " reduction of more than three millions ſeven " hundred thouſand pounds to an intereſt of " four per cent. and by a wiſe proviſion for the " redemption thereof by Parliament, without " further notice, on payment of ſuch ſums, as " the circumſtances of the Government will " from time to time admit, has ſecured a conſiderable addition to the ſinking fund, not ſubject to the hazard of future events (1).

" You have not only raiſed the Supply for the " ſervice of the current year at the loweſt rate of " intereſt, that has been ever known, but, without laying any new burden on my people, " you have enabled me to diſcharge the debts " of my Civil Government; debts contracted " by neceſſary and unavoidable expences, and in " ſupport of ſuch meaſures of Government, as " have greatly increaſed the happineſs of my " people. You have thereby ſhewn your juſt " regard to my honour, and the dignity of the " Crown.

My

(1) An act paſſed this Seſſion, for continuing to the Bank the ſeveral annuities of 80,751 l. 7 s. 10 d. ½, and of 100,000 l. until Midſummer 1727, and from thence for reducing the ſame to 71,001 l. 2 s. 3 d. ½, and 80,000 l. redeemable by Parliament (that is, from 5 l. per cent. to 4 l. per cent.)

(1) Lords

1725. My Lords and Gentlemen,

" As all our public bleſſings are the happy " effects of the general tranquillity we now en- " joy, I cannot but expreſs my ſatisfaction in the " proviſion you have made for ſuppreſſing and " preventing diſturbances and commotions in " thoſe parts, where the peace of the Kingdom " might have been moſt indangered.

" Nothing more remains neceſſary, than to " tell you, that I intirely depend on the faithful " diſcharge of your duties in your ſeveral ſta- " tions, and on your conſtant care, in your re- " ſpective Countries, to preſerve the peace and " quiet of the Public. But I know not how to " part with you without firſt returning you my " very hearty thanks for the many repeated in- " ſtances you have, in this Seſſion, given me of " your duty and affection. All ſuch returns may " be expected from me, as can be made by the " moſt indulgent Prince to an affectionate and " loyal people."

Knights of the Bath created.

Preſently after the end of the Seſſion, the King revived the order of Knights of the Bath, of whom Prince William was the firſt, and the Duke of Mountague was appointed Grand-Maſter. Among the Knights were Sir Robert Walpole, and his ſon the Lord Walpole. The whole number was 38, including the Sovereign. Several promotions were likewiſe made. Mr Methuen was appointed Treaſurer of the Houſhold, and the Earl of Lincoln, Cofferer in the room of Mr. Pulteney. William Bateman was created Baron of Calmore, in Ireland, and Viſcount Bateman. Soon after Sir Robert Walpole was made Knight of the Garter (1).

The King having ſettled his affairs in England, and appointed the Lords Juſtices, ſet out for Hanover the 3d of June, and arrived the 14th at Heren-Hauſen.

The Scots, ever ſince the Union, had very unwillingly paid any of the taxes that had been laid on the united Kingdom; and had behaved on all ſuch occaſions, as if they thought themſelves injured, when they were obliged to contribute any thing towards the public expence. The enemies to the Government failed not to feed this ill humour, and, under colour of zeal for the old Conſtitution, to ſet the people againſt that, which was now eſtabliſhed. The malt-tax was moſt clamoured againſt; and it was foreſeen, that it would not be collected without peril to the Officers. At Edinburgh indeed, the Exciſemen were ſuffered to take an account of the Maſter's ſtock in hand; but thoſe at Glaſgow were obliged to apply to the Commiſſioners of the Exciſe at Edinburgh for protection and aſſiſtance, their lives being threatened, if they offered to viſit the malt-houſes. The Commiſſioners applied to Major-General Wade, Commander in Chief of the forces in Scotland, who, on the 23d of June, ſent Captain Buſhel, with two companies of ſoldiers to Glaſgow, where they arrived the next day in the evening. At their entrance into the town, they found a great mob of men, women, and boys, who gave them abuſive language, and threw ſtones at them, as they marched along the ſtreets, crying aloud, No malt tax. The Officer deſired them to forbear, for he meant them no harm. The Provoſt gave him billets for quartering his men, but told him, he could not put him in poſſeſſion of the guard-room, becauſe the rabble had locked it up, and carried away the key, as ſoon as they heard the ſoldiers were coming. The Officer, unwilling to exaſperate them, by forcing open the door, ordered the guard to be kept at a public houſe, which they hired for that purpoſe. About eleven o'clock that night, ſeveral thouſands of the mob got together about the houſe of Mr. Daniel Campbel, Repreſentative in Parliament for Glaſgow, threatening to plunder it. Upon which Captain Buſhel ſent an Officer to the Provoſt, letting him know the miſchief they deſigned to commit; and that he was ready with his men to aſſiſt him in preventing it. But his anſwer was, He thought the number of his ſoldiers too few, and therefore he would make no uſe of them. Thus the rabble, finding no oppoſition, nor even the appearance of a Magiſtrate to reſtrain their fury, with hatchets and other inſtruments forced into the houſe, and turned out two or three of Mr. Campbel's ſervants (he, with his wife, having the day before retired to his Country-houſe) and fell to plundering every thing they could carry away, and deſtroying what was not portable. This riot continued till nine the next morning, when ſeveral of the mob were lying drunk in the houſe, with the wine and liquors they found in the cellars, but the Magiſtrates did not get any of them ſecured. The Officers of the Exciſe hid themſelves as well as they could: Some of them fell into the hands of the mob, and with great difficulty eſcaped with their lives, after having been unmercifully beaten. The rabble were then pretty quiet, till about four in the afternoon, when they began to meet again; women, or men in women's cloaths, beating drums about the ſtreets to call them together. Captain Buſhel, not knowing what their deſigns might be, ordered the ſoldiers to be near the guard-room, which the Provoſt had now cauſed to be opened: But the mob did not long keep their ſecret; for they advanced towards the guard, crying, Drive the dogs out of town: We will cut them to pieces. The Officer ſaid again, We mean you no hurt, but, if you continue to provoke the ſoldiers, we ſhall not be able to reſtrain them from firing at you. The rabble anſwered, You dare not fire with ball; and continued throwing ſtones in ſuch quantities, and ſo large, that they

(1) Lords of the Treaſury.

Sir Robert Walpole,
Sir Charles Turner,
Sir William Yonge,
George Doddington, Eſq;
Sir William Strickland.

Lords of the Admiralty.

James Earl of Berkeley,
Sir John Jennings,
John Cockburn, Eſq;
William Chetwynd, Eſq;
Sir John Norris,
Sir Charles Wager,
Sir George Oxenden.

1725. they broke ſome of the locks of the ſoldiers pieces, and their bayonets, and wounded ſeveral men. Upon which they were ordered to fire over the heads of the mob to frighten them; but they advanced ſtill upon the ſoldiers, and, throwing ſtones in greater quantities, the ſoldiers at laſt fired on them, and killed or wounded three or four, which made them retire to ſome diſtance. In this ſhort interval, the Provoſt ſent to Captain Buſhel, deſiring him to ſave himſelf and his men, by retreating out of the town; for the Rioters were collecting all the arms they could; and, if he did not march away, there would be more blood ſhed. The Captain, taking his advice, marched immediately for Dunbarton, being followed by great numbers of the mob, and that ſo cloſely, that he was forced to fire now and then to ſecure his retreat out of the town. Three or four hundred of them followed him ſix miles, but they durſt not come up with him. He ſent an Officer from Dunbarton to Edinburgh, to give General Wade an account of what had happened; and, on the 8th of July, the General, accompanied by Duncan Forbes, Lord Advocate, ſet out from Edinburgh, and at noon the next day joined a body of forces, that had been ordered to draw together on a moor within two miles of Glaſgow, conſiſting of four troops of horſe, and a detachment of Colonel Campbel's Dragoons; eight companies of the Earl of Deloraine's regiment of foot; the Earl of Stair's regiment, and one of the new-raiſed Highland companies. The General wrote a letter to the Magiſtrates to let them know he was coming; and the next day, about two o'clock in the afternoon, entered the town; the troops advancing with ſilence and good order; and they were diſtributed into quarters without any diſturbance. The two following days the Exciſemen were ſet to take an account of the Maltſters ſtock in hand, and had quiet admittance. The Rioters having endeavoured by circular letters to every town of any note to excite tumults, the mob roſe July the 9th, at Elgin, attacked in the night-time three ſoldiers, who were poſted centinels at a ſhop, wherein was lodged a quantity of brandy, that had been ſeized by the Cuſtom-Houſe Officers, and obliged the ſoldiers to fire in their own defence, by which one of the rabble was killed. The ſoldiers being overpowered were put in priſon by the Magiſtrates; and the mob immediately carried off the brandy. The Maltſters at Glaſgow complied with the terms of the act of Parliament. Many of the Rioters were ſeized; moſt of them mean perſons. Near an hundred witneſſes were examined, but little or nothing was found againſt any of them: It was all laid on thoſe, who fled, and on ſtrangers. The General and the Lord Advocate, having ſtaid a week at Glaſgow, returned to Edinburgh. The Lord Advocate committed ſeventeen men and boys, and four women, to priſon. The Provoſt, Bailiffs, Dean of Guild, and Deacon Conveener were alſo apprehended, and the next day, under a ſtrong guard of dragoons, ſent to Edinburgh. When they came near the City, there was a vaſt concourſe of people at ſuch an unuſual and unexpected ſight, beſides a great many Merchants and men of note on horſeback, who went out to meet them, and accompanied them to the priſon-doors, the Glaſgow Magiſtrates being in coaches. They did not continue long under confinement; for, this affair being brought before the Lords Juſticiary, they were unanimous in their opinions, that they were innocent; upon which they were immediately ſet at liberty. It was reported, that the whole Royal Boroughs of Scotland had come to a reſolution to ſtand out againſt payment of the malt-tax. But they were ſo far from doing it, that, the Convention being aſſembled at Edinburgh on the 7th of July, they reſolved to write a circular letter to each of the Royal Boroughs, to be ſent by expreſs, teſtifying the falſhood of that report, and their abhorrence of the thought of reſiſting or not paying due obedience to the law, which has enacted the levying of that tax, exhorting the Magiſtrates and Governors of each Royal Borough, to concur vigorouſly with the Officers of the Revenue, in the execution of the laws relating thereto, and in ſuppreſſing of all mobs, riots, and tumultuous aſſemblies; and requiring them every where to uſe all diligence for the diſcovery of the Authors of ſuch malicious reports and ſeditious practices; and to acquaint the annual Committee of the Convention therewith, that the Offenders might be proſecuted, and brought to deſerved puniſhment at the ſuit of the Convention, as diſturbers of the public peace. The Rioters at Glaſgow were brought to their trial before the Court of Juſticiary, of which the Earl of Ilay was chief; and, Walter Buchanan, William Hamilton, George Macfarlane, Patrick Mitchel, and Janet Balleny being found guilty of the riot, the four men were, the next day, ſentenced to be tranſported, after they had been ſcourged at Glaſgow by the common hangman; and Balleny, the woman, was ſentenced to ſtand twice in the pillory there; ſo that no capital puniſhment was inflicted on any of theſe Offenders.

General Wade did likewiſe another very important ſervice to the Public, by diſarming, purſuant to the act of Parliament, the Highlanders, Mackenzies, Macdonalds, Grants of Glenmoriſton, Macleods, Chiſholms, Stewarts, Camerons, Macphерſons, Mackintoſhes, Macgregors, Gordons, Farquharſons, Macfarlans, and other Clans, their Tribes and Followers; as alſo the Inhabitants of the Iſles of Sky and Mull; the arms amounting to between two and three thouſand. The Companies of the ſoldiers left in the Highlands were ſo poſted, that they poſſeſſed all the conſiderable paſſes, and thereby prevented the ſtealing of cattle.

As to foreign affairs, there were great alterations abroad this year. Mention has been made of the marriage of Lewis, Prince of Aſturias with the Duke of Orleans's ſecond daughter, and of King Philip's reſignation of the Crown to his Son. It has been alſo related, how Lewis XV of France was married to the Infanta of Spain; and Madamoiſelle de Beaujolois, another of the Duke of Orleans's daughters, to Don Carlos, Infant of Spain by King's Philip's ſecond wife. The firſt marriage was conſummated, but ſoon after diſſolved by the death of Lewis King of Spain. Upon his deceaſe, his Father, King Philip, reſumed the Crown. In the beginning of March 1724-5, the French King, who could never gain upon himſelf to be tolerably civil to the young Infanta, declared his reſolution to ſend her back into 25. Spain (1). This was ſo highly reſented by the Court of Spain, particularly by the Queen, that it was reſolved to ſend back to France Madamoiſelle de Beaujolois, whoſe marriage with Don Carlos was yet unconſummated; which was accordingly done, and at the ſame time the Infanta was ſent to Madrid, the Spaniſh Miniſters, the Marquiſs de Monteleone, and Patrick Lawleſs (the Pretender's agent in England in Queen Anne's Reign) returning with her.

ſole
ation
Cam-re-by ge.

The Queen of Spain's reſentment did not end here. She reſolved the French ſhould meddle no more in the Spaniſh affairs, and offered to adjuſt her differences with the Emperor (for which the Congreſs of Cambray had been appointed) under the ſole mediation of Great-Britain. This offer was refuſed by King George upon many accounts. The Emperor was ſo far from ſeeking the ſole mediation of Great-Britain, with the ſame warmth as Spain, that he ſhewed ſuch a coolneſs on the occaſion, as not only indicated a jealouſy, but foretold an unſucceſsful iſſue in caſe it was aſſumed. Beſides, the accepting it, in order to gratify the paſſions of the Queen of Spain, muſt have diſobliged France, with whom, ever ſince the death of Lewis XIV, the Britiſh Court had contracted the ſtricteſt friendſhip. The ſame motive ſtill ſubſiſted, that had induced King George to enter into a reciprocal confidence with that Crown; the title of the Houſe of Orleans to that Monarchy in virtue of the treaty of Utrecht. The young King was as yet a minor, and unmarried, and the Duke of Bourbon Prime Miniſter of France, who ſolely guided the Helm, was next in reverſion to the Crown, after the young Duke of Orleans, then unmarried, and of a weak conſtitution. The coolneſs therefore of the Emperor, the engagement with France, and the proſpect of diſuniting for ever the Houſe of Bourbon, by means of the branches of Orleans and Condé, induced King George not to accept the ſole mediation at the hazard of loſing France, without any appearance of gaining, or, if gained, of keeping Spain one moment fixed to his intereſt or alliance. Upon the King's refuſal of the ſole mediation, the Emperor and Queen of Spain reſolved to adjuſt their differences by a private Negotiation. This was managed on the part of Spain by the Baron de Ripperda, a Dutchman, who had abandoned the Proteſtant Religion, and entered into the Spaniſh ſervice. The firſt treaty of Vienna was ſoon concluded, and ſigned the 30th of April, and, the next day, a treaty of commerce was alſo ſigned. It was urged, that, the Mediators having for ſeveral years in vain endeavoured to reconcile the Emperor and King of Spain, they reſolved to do it by themſelves without the intervention of any other power, eſpecially ſince France had affronted Spain, by ſending back the Infanta, and England had refuſed to continue her mediation at Cambray without France (2). 1725.

Treaty of Vienna.

By theſe treaties the Emperor acknowledges Philip V. as lawful King of Spain and the Indies, and promiſes not to moleſt him in the poſſeſſion of the Dominions ſecured to him by the treaty of Utrecht, nor to appropriate to himſelf any right to them. King Philip on his part renounces all his pretenſions to the Dominions in Italy and the Netherlands, adjudged to the Emperor by the treaty of London, in July 1722. The Emperor grants (without the conſent of the Empire) the inveſtiture of the Dukedoms of Tuſcany, Parma, and Placentia, to the Queen of Spain's eldeſt ſon, in caſe theſe Dukedoms ſhould be vacant for want of heirs; the determination of King George and the Regent of France in the treaty of London, that they are maſculine fiefs of the Empire, being taken for granted. Spain agreed to guaranty the ſucceſſion of the Auſtrian Dominions according to the Pragmatic Sanction (3). By the treaty of commerce, the Emperor's ſubjects were to have commercial advantages in Spain, to which no others were entitled: Spain was to guaranty the Oſtend trade to the Eaſt-Indies, and pay an annual ſubſidy of about four millions of pieces of eight.

The treaty of peace was not liable to any great objection, though the article, by which Spain agreed to guaranty the Succeſſion of the Auſtrian Dominions, according to the Pragmatic Sanction, gave ſome room to ſuſpect, it was

---

(1) The French King being taken very ill, and in great danger of his life, by a fever, in February 1725, N. S. it alarmed the whole French Nation, and made them cry aloud for his marrying immediately after his recovery, to prevent the fatal conſequences of a civil war, in caſe of his dying without iſſue. It was thereupon ſuddenly reſolved in Council to ſend back the Infanta. Upon this unexpected turn the Court of Spain propoſed the ſole mediation to Mr. Stanhope, the Engliſh Miniſter at Madrid, which, as will be ſeen, was refuſed.

(2) It appears by ſtating and comparing the dates of theſe tranſactions, that the ſending back the Infanta, or the refuſal of the ſole mediation, could have no ſhare in the motives for Negotiating. The Courier, diſpatched from France to ſignify the reſolution of ſending back the Infanta, March 13, 1725, did not arrive at Madrid till the 19th, and King George's anſwer, declining the ſole mediation, came to Spain the 24th of April, 1724, N. S. Ripperda's full powers were ſigned in November, 1724; and the Court of Madrid received advice from him in March, 1725, that the principal articles were then agreed at Vienna. In conſequence of this agreement, the treaty of peace and friendſhip between the Emperor and Spain was ſigned at Vienna the laſt of April, and that of commerce the firſt of May, 1725. Now could the reſolution of ſending back the Infanta, which was not thought of in France till March, 1725, nor known at Madrid till the 19th of that month, be the occaſion of negociating at Vienna treaties of ſuch importance and long diſcuſſion, the principal articles of which were the very ſame month of March known at Madrid to have been agreed upon at Vienna? Or could the King's refuſal of the ſole mediation, which was not known at Madrid till the 24th of April, 1725, N. S. have poſſibly occaſioned the ſigning of treaties at Vienna the laſt of April, and firſt of May, 1725? To this it may be added, that the acceptance of the ſole mediation to accommodate the difference between the two Courts, who were already agreed in every reſpect, would have been as ridiculous and abſurd, as it is to imagine, that the declining of it could poſſibly be a motive for ſigning of treaties ſo injurious to the States-General, as well as to Great-Britain, when neither of them had given the leaſt reaſon for ſuch treatment.

(3) By the Pragmatic Sanction the order of Succeſſion to the Dominions of the Houſe of Auſtria is ſettled on the Emperor's heirs and ſucceſſors of either ſex, and declared to be a perpetual, indiviſible, and inſeparable feoffment to the primogeniture. This Pragmatic Sanction or perpetual law was publiſhed at Vienna, December 5, 1724.

1725. was to operate in favour of Spain. And therefore it did not alarm the other States, but it was not the ſame with the treaty of commerce, which was ſo much to the diſadvantage of England and Holland, particularly with regard to the privileges granted to the Oſtend India Company.

Private treaty between Spain and the Emperor.

But, beſides theſe treaties, King George had reaſon to ſuſpect that another, much more repugnant to the intereſt of Great-Britain, was alſo concluded. This ſuſpicion was afterwards confirmed, not only by ſome indiſcrete expreſſions of Ripperda, but by the moſt poſitive intelligence from different perſons, all capable of knowing the truth, and all concurring in the moſt material facts. By this third treaty, which was carefully concealed, it was declared, that the Spaniſh Miniſter having repreſented that the King of Great-Britain had promiſed the reſtitution of Gibraltar and Port-Mahon, and that the King of Spain did inſiſt upon it, the Emperor would concur in employing force for reſtoring Gibraltar to Spain, if it could not be amicably effected. King George had moreover cauſe to believe, that ſeveral other points of ſtill more dangerous conſequence were ſettled between the Emperor and Spain, particularly that the two Archducheſſes ſhould be married to the Infants of Spain, and that means ſhould be taken for placing the Pretender on the Throne. This laſt article the King was informed of by a perſon of great rank, veracity, and credit, though the Emperor himſelf ordered his Miniſters to give, in his name, the moſt ſolemn denial of the fact. It muſt indeed be owned, that the Duke of Bavaria received likewiſe aſſurances equally ſtrong from the Miniſters of Vienna, that nothing had been tranſacted between the Emperor and the Court of Madrid, relating to the marriage of an Archducheſs to a Prince of Spain, though it was afterwards owned by the Imperial Miniſters, and the execution of it openly demanded by thoſe of Spain. And it may here be obſerved, that, if thoſe marriages had taken place, and the French King and the Prince of Aſturias at that time, both Princes of weak conſtitutions, had died without iſſue, it would have laid the foundation for the moſt formidable power ever known in Europe, by uniting together in one Sovereign all the Dominions belonging to the Houſes of Auſtria and Bourbon.

In conſequence of theſe treaties between the Emperor and Spain, great ſums, amounting to about a million ſterling, were remitted in ſix months, from the ſigning of them by Spain, to Vienna. The Court of Vienna gave immediately the neceſſary orders for an augmentation of their own forces, with thirty thouſand men, and took immediately into their pay thirty thouſand more. Negotiations were ſet on foot for engaging other powers in ſupport of their cauſe; and particularly Ruſſia, by her Acceſſion, was to furniſh thirty thouſand men.

Treaty of Hanover.

King George, juſtly alarmed at theſe proceedings, reſolved to take ſuch precautions, as were likely to defeat the pernicious deſigns of the new Allies. The Court of Vienna had behaved with uncommon coolneſs towards the Court of London, ever ſince the Acceſſion of King George. The Emperor, whether out of ſome old perſonal enmity to the King, or from his jealouſy of ſeeing a Proteſtant Prince of Germany become Sovereign of a powerful Nation, behaved with great indifference, and in a very contradictory manner, towards him on many occaſions. He refuſed to guaranty the Succeſſion in his Line, and denied him the inveſtiture of the Duchies of Bremen and Verden, which he had a right to demand and expect, as a Purchaſer and Member of the Empire. To this may be added, the late erection and ſupport of the Oſtend India Company in violation of treaties, which greatly affected the Britiſh commerce to the Eaſt-Indies, and againſt which the whole Nation made loud complaints. Led by theſe motives, the treaty of Hanover was projected by King George, to check the ambitious views of the Emperor and King (or rather Queen) of Spain, who, from being irreconcileable enemies, ran into each other's arms voluntarily, tying themſelves down by treaty to the cloſeſt and ſtricteſt friendſhip. The King ſucceeded in his deſign, and a treaty was concluded in September between England, France, and Pruſſia, in the uſual forms of a defenſive Alliance, with a mutual guaranty to protect the reſpective Countries rights and privileges, thoſe of commerce in particular, which the parties enjoyed or ought to enjoy, as well out of as in Europe; which had a view to the Oſtend Company. There was nothing in the treaty that reflected directly or implicitly upon the conduct of any other power: Nor was there any expreſſion to be found in it, nor inference from it, or from the conſequent meaſures, to ſhew it was projected to increaſe the dominions and claims of the Electorate of Hanover, or to involve Great-Britain in the quarrels of that Electorate, or could give offence to any but thoſe who intended to offend. The treaty was to laſt fifteen years. There were three ſeparate articles: The firſt related to the affair of Thorn, and was an engagement to procure ſatisfaction for what had been done contrary to the treaty of Oliva. By the ſecond, the two Kings Electors engaged, in caſe the Emperor declared war againſt France, not only not to furniſh their quota of troops, but to act in concert with his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty. By the third, France conſented, that, if the Empire declared againſt her, the two Electors Kings might furniſh their quota, provided they furniſhed no more, and fulfilled their engagements to his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty.

Thus was concluded the treaty of Hanover, which has been painted in more invidious colours, than any tranſaction during the Reign of King George.

In the mean time the Duke of Bourbon was removed from the Adminiſtration of affairs in France; having received, as he was preparing to follow the King to Ramboüillet, an order to go to Chantilli, his country ſeat, and there to ſtay till further orders. Preſently after, the Count de St. Florentine, Secretary of State, went to acquaint him, that the King had reſolved to take the Government into his own hands; which he did on the 10th of June, in a Council of State at Verſailles, to whom he made a ſpeech ſuitable to the occaſion. This revolution in the Miniſtry of France was generally ſuppoſed to be owing to the intrigues of the Court of Spain, who could never forgive the ſending back the Infanta, which they imputed to the influence of the Duke of Bourbon on the counſels of France. The Biſhop of Frejus, the young King's Preceptor, and afterwards Cardinal, had a great hand in this meaſure, in order to aſſume the poſt of of Prime Miniſter himſelf; but he aſſured Mr. Horace Walpole, the Britiſh Ambaſſador at the Court of France, 'That the alterations in the Court of France, inſtead of making any in the meaſures taken with the King of Great-Britain, purſuant to the treaty of Hanover, would rather tend to the execution of that treaty.'

The King of France ſoon after married the Princeſs Mary, Daughter of Staniſlaus, once King of Poland; the contract for the marriage being ſigned by proxy in July.

The Duke of Wharton, who had acted with great extravagance and licentiouſneſs of all kinds in England, and ruined his eſtate there, having left his Country, went to Vienna, whence he proceeded to Rome, where he was introduced by the Spaniſh Miniſter to the Pretender, in whoſe houſe he was concealed for ſix days, and then poſted away to Madrid, where the Baron de Ripperda, his great and intimate friend, was now in high credit and favour. Thither he came with credentials from the Pretender; and, as a public mark of confidence in him, adorned with a Garter, and the title of Northumberland. King George being informed of theſe proceedings, ſent a letter under the Privy Seal to the Duke, commanding him, upon his allegiance, to return forthwith to Great-Britain. This letter being carried to Madrid by Mr. Crew, the Meſſenger, it was delivered, on the 31ſt of June, to the Duke in a coach, as he was paſſing through one of the ſtreets of the town; but, as ſoon as he was told the contents of it, he threw the letter out of the coach, and made great clamour at the executing a ſummons upon him by a Britiſh Officer of Juſtice, even in the ſight of his Catholic Majeſty's Palace. He likewiſe gave out, that he would preſent a memorial upon it to the King of Spain, and demand juſtice againſt the King's Meſſenger, who brought him the letter. Colonel Stanhope, the Britiſh Miniſter at Madrid, hearing of this, ſent his Secretary to the Marquiſs de Paz, to acquaint him with it. The Marquiſs promiſed to repreſent the matter to his Catholic Majeſty, and deſired the Secretary to return to him the next morning, when he aſſured him, that the King of Spain knew nothing of the memorial, but had been informed of what had paſſed with relation to the delivery of the letter of Privy Seal, and would not in any manner interpoſe his authority in oppoſition to that proceeding. The Duke, about that time, openly profeſſed himſelf a Roman Catholic, by making his public abjuration of the Proteſtant Religion; and, on the 23d of July, N. S. married one of the Ladies of the Queen of Spain's Bed-Chamber, by whoſe intereſt he obtained the pay of a Lieutenant-Colonel.

The King, having ſettled affairs abroad, ſet out from Hanover on the 18th of December, O. S. and came to Helvoet-Sluyce, where Sir John Norris waited with the convoy and yatchts, and where he embarked on board the Carolina yatcht on New-Year's-Day, about one in the afternoon. Towards ſeven that evening there aroſe a moſt violent ſtorm with rain and hail, which ſeparated the ſhips one from another, except one man of war, commanded by Captain Dancey, who kept company with the King's yatcht, on board which was Sir John Norris. The tempeſt continued ſo high, and the ſea ſo boiſterous, for thirty-ſix hours, that the whole fleet was in the utmoſt danger. On the 3d of January, the yatchts and men of war were near Dover; and one of the yatchts, with ſome of the King's attendants, entered the river; but it was thought more adviſeable, that the King ſhould land at Rye, where he arrived about noon. The King went immediately into the ſmall boat, the tide being down; and, as ſoon as he could reach a horſe, which Captain Pigram had brought him, he mounted it, rode by the wall, and over the new bridge. The Mayor, Mr. Lambe, and the Jurats, in their formalities, with the neighbouring Gentlemen, attended the King, who alighted at the Mayor's houſe, being ſaluted all the way with loud huzza's and acclamations. He was extremely fatigued, having eat nothing ſince the day he embarked. The Lord Townſhend and his Lady, who were in the Mary yatcht, kept company with the King, and with ſome difficulty landed at the ſame place. On the 4th of January, a meſſenger, diſpatched by the Lord Townſhend, arrived at the Cock-pit, with the agreeable news of the King's ſafe landing at Rye, from whence he intended to have ſet out for London on the 6th; but, the roads in that part of the Country being unſafe from the fall of ſnow, it was found neceſſary to give orders for the clearing of the ways; which done, the King began his journey the next day, and having croſſed the water from Rye, at a place called the Point, lay that night at Hythe, the next at Sittingburne; and on the 9th arrived in good health at St. James's. 1725-26.

The fourth Seſſion of the ſecond Parliament.

On the 20th of January the Parliament met, when the King made the following ſpeech to both Houſes by the mouth of the Lord-Chancellor:

My Lords and Gentlemen,

"I Have had ſuch frequent experience of the "wiſdom and zeal of this Parliament on "many important occaſions, that it is with plea-"ſure I now meet you again; and I make no "doubt, but that your endeavours for the good "and ſervice of your Country will be as ſuc-"ceſsful, as they have hitherto been.

"The diſtreſſed condition of ſome of our "Proteſtant Brethren abroad, and the Negotia-"tions and engagements entered into by ſome "foreign powers, which ſeem to have laid the "foundation of new troubles and diſturbances "in Europe, and to threaten my ſubjects with "the loſs of ſeveral of the moſt advantageous "branches of their trade, obliged me, without "any loſs of time, to concert with other powers "ſuch meaſures, as might give a check to the "ambitious views of thoſe, who are endeavour-"ing to render themſelves formidable, and put "a ſtop to the farther progreſs of ſuch danger-"ous deſigns. For theſe ends I have entered "into a defenſive Alliance with the moſt Chri-"ſtian King and the King of Pruſſia, to which "ſeveral other powers, and particularly the "States-General, have been invited to accede; "and I have not the leaſt reaſon to doubt of "their concurrence. This treaty ſhall in a ſhort "time be laid before you. By theſe means, "and by your ſupport and aſſiſtance, I truſt in "God, I ſhall be able not only to ſecure to my "own ſubjects the enjoyment of many valuable "rights and privileges long ſince acquired for "them by the moſt ſolemn treaties, but effectu-1725-26. " ally to preſerve the peace and balance of Eu-

"ally,

" rope, the only view and end of all my en-
" deavours.

Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons.

" I have ordered the eſtimates for the ſer-
" vice of this year to be prepared and laid be" fore you, which, from an unwillingneſs I al-
" ways have to put my ſubjects to an extraordi-
" nary expence by any unneceſſary precautions,
" are formed upon the foot of employing no
" greater number of forces, than was thought
" neceſſary the laſt year; for which, if the Sup-
" plies you give, ſhall be fully and effectually
" raiſed, I ſhall be enabled to have a ſtrong
" fleet at ſea early in the ſpring. If the poſture
" of affairs ſhall at any time make it neceſſary
" to augment our maritime force, I confide ſo
" intirely in the zeal and affection of my Par" liament, that I aſſure myſelf you will enable " me to make ſuch an addition to the number
" of ſeamen, as ſhall be found requiſite.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

" It is not to be doubted, but the enemies to
" my Government will conceive hopes, that
" ſome favourable opportunity for renewing
" their attempts may offer from the proſpect of " new troubles and commotions. They are al" ready very buſy by their inſtruments and
" emiſſaries in thoſe Courts, whoſe meaſures
" ſeem moſt to favour their purpoſes, in ſollicit-
" ing and promoting the cauſe of the Pretender.
" But I perſuade myſelf, notwithſtanding the " countenance and encouragement they may
" have received, or flatter themſelves with, the " proviſion you ſhall make for the ſafety and
" defence of the Kingdom, will effectually ſecure
" us from any attempts from abroad, and ren-
" der all ſuch projects vain and abortive.
" When the world ſhall ſee, that you will " not ſuffer the Britiſh Crown and Nation to be
" menaced and inſulted, thoſe, who moſt envy
" the preſent happineſs and tranquillity of this
" Kingdom, and are endeavouring to make us
" ſubſervient to their ambition, will conſider
" their own intereſt and circumſtances, before
" they make any attempt upon ſo brave a peo-
" ple, ſtrengthened and ſupported by prudent
" and powerful Alliances, and, though deſirous
" to preſerve the peace, able and ready to de-
" fend themſelves againſt the efforts of all ag-
" greſſors. Such reſolutions, and ſuch meaſures,
" timely taken, I am ſatisfied, are the moſt ef-
" fectual means of preventing a war, and con" tinuing to us the bleſſings of peace and proſ-
" perity."

Proceed-ings of the Commons. Addreſſes ſuitable to the ſpeech were preſent-ed by both Houſes, and the Commons proceed-ed to conſider of the Supply. The reduction of the four thouſand additional troops was again inſiſted on, and particularly by Mr. Pulteney, who now ſet himſelf up to oppoſe every motion of the Court; but, after a warm debate, the ſame number of land-forces 18,264 men, and the ſame proviſion for them, were voted. A motion by Mr. Pulteney for a Committee to ſtate the public debts, from the year 1714 to 1725, was rejected by 262 againſt 89. It was obſerved, that moſt of the Tories then in the 172- Houſe were againſt it.

The treaties of Hanover and of Vienna being Debat- laid before the Commons, they were debated by the tr- a full Houſe of 420 Members. No ſtranger ties of was admitted except the Earl of Marchmont, who Hano- had been a Plenipotentiary at Cambray. Mr. and V- Horace Walpole, Ambaſſador at the Court of enna. France, opened the debate with a long ſpeech, ſetting forth the ſtate of affairs in Europe from the peace of Utrecht to the preſent time. He took notice, 'That, ſince his Majeſty's Acceſſion to the Throne, his conſtant care and endeavours had been to ſettle the balance of power on a ſolid foundation, and to preſerve and ſecure the tranquillity of Chriſtendom; to protect and defend the Proteſtant cauſe, and promote the honour and intereſt of his Britiſh ſubjects. That, with theſe great views, his Majeſty was become Mediator and Guarantee, both of the Barrier Treaty concluded in 1715, and of a Convention made in 1718, for the execution of that treaty, between the Emperor and the States-General of the United-Provinces. In the year 1716, his Majeſty concluded a defenſive Alliance with the Emperor; and, in 1717, another with the moſt Chriſtian King and the States-General; the genuine deſign of both which treaties was only to preſerve the public repoſe of Chriſtendom, eſtabliſhed by the peace of Utrecht, to guaranty the Succeſſion to the Crown of Great-Britain in the Proteſtant line. In order to fortify all theſe treaties, and to extinguiſh the war, the Spaniards had kindled in Italy, his Majeſty, in 1718, made a Convention with the moſt Chriſtian King, for propoſing ultimate conditions of peace between the Emperor and the King of Spain, and between his Imperial Majeſty and the (then) King of Sicily. This Convention was, a few days after, followed by a treaty of Alliance between the Emperor, the King of Great-Britain, and the moſt Chriſtian King, which, by their Miniſters, was concluded at London, and ſigned on the 22d of July 1718, and in which the States-General were named as one of the contracting parties (upon a ſuppoſition that they would come into it) from whence this treaty was named the Quadruple Alliance. A few months after, the King of Sicily was admitted into this treaty; and at length the King of Spain himſelf was forced to accede to it, which was mainly owing to the generous aſſiſtance, which his Britannic Majeſty gave the Emperor in the Mediterranean. There remaining ſome points ſtill controverted between the Emperor and King of Spain, the ſame were referred to be amicably determined in a Congreſs, which was afterwards opened at Cambray, under the Mediation of his Britannic Majeſty and the moſt Chriſtian King. By reaſon of ſeveral difficulties induſtriouſly raiſed by the Courts of Vienna and Madrid, the great pains taken for three years by the Miniſters Mediators proved unſucceſsful, and at laſt the Congreſs was ſuddenly diſſolved, upon advice, that the Emperor and the King of Spain had ſecretly adjuſted the differences between them, and concluded a treaty of peace at Vienna. This unexpected event occaſioned no ſmall ſurprize, and raiſed jealouſies, which appeared to be the better grounded, when it was known, that the treaty of peace was ſoon followed by a treaty of commerce, the main deſign

-26. ſign of which was to ſupport and countenance the Eaſt India Company, ſome years before eſtabliſhed at Oſtend, by granting to the inhabitants of the Auſtrian Netherlands greater privileges, both in the Eaſt and Weſt-Indies, than were ever granted either to the Engliſh or Dutch, which viſibly tended to the intire ruin of many valuable branches of our trade, and was contrary to ſeveral ſolemn treaties ſtill in force. His Majeſty, ever watchful for the intereſt of his Britiſh ſubjects, had cauſed lively repreſentations to be made againſt the treaty of commerce, both to the Emperor and King of Spain. At the Court of Madrid, theſe complaints were received with coldneſs; and at that of Vienna, with ſtiffneſs and haughtineſs, even to ſuch a degree, that the Imperial Miniſters did not ſtick to inſinuate, that, if his Britannic Majeſty perſiſted in his reſolution to take meaſures in oppoſition to the treaties of Vienna, his Imperial Majeſty would not only think himſelf diſengaged from the guaranty of the Proteſtant Succeſſion to the Crown of Great-Britain, but that the ſame might be attended with conſequences in relation to his Majeſty's Dominions in Germany. Theſe inſulting menaces made no impreſſion on his Majeſty's firmneſs, nor deterred him from his fixed reſolution of concerting with other powers ſuch meaſures, as might give a check to the ambitious views of thoſe, who endeavoured to render themſelves formidable. Theſe meaſures ſeemed to be the more neceſſary, becauſe there were juſt grounds to believe, that the unforeſeen reconciliation of the Emperor and King of Spain was owing to the conſtant view of the Houſe of Auſtria, of rendering the Imperial dignity hereditary in their family. In order to that, it might reaſonably be ſuppoſed, that the treaties of Vienna were to be cemented by a match between the Emperor's eldeſt Daughter and the Infant Don Carlos. It was eaſy to foreſee the conſequences of ſuch a marriage. For the iſſue male, that might come from it, might, in time, be poſſeſſed not only of all the hereditary Dominions belonging to the Houſe of Auſtria, and of the Imperial dignity, but alſo of all the Dominions of the Spaniſh Monarchy; which would intirely overthrow the balance of power, and render the liberties of all the reſt of Europe very precarious. This ſuppoſition would appear more than probable to any one, who conſidered that there was ſcarce any other way of accounting, either for the King of Spain's breaking through ſolemn treaties with Great-Britain, in favour of the Emperor's ſubjects in the Netherlands; or for the Emperor's forgetting ſo far the obligations he had to Great-Britain and Holland, as to enter into engagements to aſſiſt Spain towards the recovery of Gibraltar and Minorca, and to perſiſt in ſupporting and countenancing the Oſtend Company, eſtabliſhed with no other view, than to deprive the ſubjects of the Maritime Powers of ſeveral of the moſt advantageous branches of their trade. In order to give a timely check to the further progreſs of ſuch dangerous deſigns, his Majeſty, in his great wiſdom, had entered into a defenſive Alliance with the moſt Chriſtian King and the King of Pruſſia, to which ſeveral other powers, and particularly the States-General, had been invited to accede. The States of Holland had already done it; and it was not to be doubted, but their example would ſoon be followed by the other United-Provinces. The main view of this Alliance was 1725-26.
to maintain and preſerve the public repoſe and tranquillity of Chriſtendom, and to ſecure to each contracting party the poſſeſſion of their reſpective Dominions and Territories, with the rights, immunities, and advantages, particularly thoſe relating to trade, which their ſubjects enjoyed, or ought, by treaties, to enjoy. And, as his Majeſty ever had a particular concern for the Proteſtant intereſt, ſo, out of his Royal and tender compaſſion for the diſtreſſed condition of ſome of our Proteſtant Brethren in Poland, his Majeſty had not only interpoſed his good offices in the moſt preſſing manner in their favour, but had taken the occaſion of the defenſive Alliance made at Hanover, to engage, by a ſeparate article, the moſt Chriſtian King and the King of Pruſſia, who, together with his Majeſty, are guarantees of the treaty of Oliva, to ſee it maintained and obſerved in its full extent, and to cauſe reparation to be made for what may have been done at Thorn contrary to that treaty. He concluded with an encomium upon his Majeſty's wiſdom, care, vigilance, ſteadineſs, and reſolution in the conduct of all theſe weighty and important affairs.'

Mr. Walpole's ſpeech occaſioned a great debate. A Member having ſuggeſted, that it was to be ſuppoſed, the King of Spain did not ſeem to grant any further privileges to the Emperor's ſubjects in the Netherlands, than what had been granted to the Engliſh, and other moſt favoured Nations; he was anſwered by Colonel Bladen, who pointed to the ſecond article of the treaty of commerce of Vienna, whereby it was expreſsly ſtipulated, 'That the ſhips of war, and merchant-ſhips belonging to the contracting parties, or their ſubjects, ſhould be allowed full liberty to frequent the harbours, coaſts, and provinces of each other;' naming particularly the Eaſt-Indies, and without any exception as to the Spaniſh Weſt-Indies, or any reſtraint on the ſhips of war and merchant-ſhips, than not to buy any thing beſides victuals and materials for repairing their ſhips; which implied a permiſſion to vend their merchandizes for ready money; ſo it was manifeſt, that the ſubjects of the Auſtrian Low-Countries were allowed more extenſive privileges than ever had been granted to any other Nation, contrary to ſeveral treaties in force between the Crowns of Great-Britain and Spain.

Colonel Bladen having cleared this important point, Mr. Daniel Pulteney made a long ſpeech, wherein having made his obſervations on moſt of the points mentioned by Mr. Horace Walpole, he inſinuated, that the ſubject-matter of this day's debate was of the greateſt importance, and therefore they ought maturely to conſider of it, before they came to any reſolution upon it. He was ſupported by Mr. Shippen, who raiſed the main objection to the treaty of Hanover, That it would engage the Britiſh Nation in a war for the defence of his Majeſty's Dominions in Germany, contrary to an expreſs proviſion made for the ſecuring our Religion, Laws, and Liberties, in the act for further limitation and ſucceſſion of the Crown in the Proteſtant line; which, being the baſis and foundation of the preſent ſettlement, was become part of our Conſtitution, and therefore ought to be ſacred and inviolable. They were anſwered by Mr. Pelham, who urged, that the true meaning and intent of that limitation was not wholly and for ever to deprive his Ma-

1725-26. jesty's foreign Dominions of any assistance from this Nation; for, if so, his Majesty, in that respect, would be in a worse condition upon his Accession to the British Throne than he was before; but only to restrain the Sovereign, for the future, from engaging the Nation, at his pleasure, in a war for the defence of any Dominions not belonging to the Crown of England, without the consent of Parliament; to whom the Legislature wisely left to judge and determine, Whether such a war was just and necessary or no? Concluding, that, for his own part, he was fully of opinion, that, if, in the present juncture and circumstances of affairs, his Majesty's foreign Dominions should be attacked or insulted, this Nation ought to stand by and support his Majesty against all his enemies whatsoever. And therefore he moved, 'That an humble address be presented to his Majesty, to return his Majesty the thanks of this House for his great goodness in communicating the treaties of peace and commerce concluded between the Emperor and the King of Spain, and the defensive Alliance between his Majesty, the most Christian King, and the King of Prussia. To express our just sense of his Majesty's concern for the balance of power in Europe, and the Protestant Religion; and above all our unfeigned gratitude for his earnest and seasonable care of the particular interests of his British subjects, by forming and entering into the defensive Alliance with the most Christian King and the King of Prussia, in order to obviate and disappoint the dangerous views and consequences of the treaty of peace betwixt the Emperor and the King of Spain; and to preserve the many valuable rights and privileges of this Nation against the fatal tendency of the said treaty of commerce, calculated for the intire destruction of the British trade, in breach of several solemn treaties now in force. To acknowledge his Majesty's prudence and resolution, in not letting any attempts or insinuations whatsoever divert his Majesty from consulting and steadily pursuing the true interest of these his Kingdoms; and to assure his Majesty, that, in justice and vindication of the honour and dignity of the British Crown, this House will effectually stand by and support his Majesty against all insults and attacks, that any Prince, or Power, in resentment of the just measures, which his Majesty has so wisely taken, shall make upon any of his Majesty's Territories and Dominions, though not belonging to the Crown of Great-Britain (1).'

This motion being at last approved by a majority of 285 against 107, the address was presented on the 19th of February, to which the King returned this answer:

Gentlemen,

'I return you my thanks for this particular mark of your duty, affection, and confidence in me. Your assurances not to suffer my foreign Dominions to be exposed or insulted, on account of the measures I have taken for the interest of these Kingdoms, will, I hope, be a means to 1725. preserve the peace and tranquillity of Europe. I have no views of ambition to gratify; I have no thought of aggrandizing myself, or extending any parts of my Dominions at the hazard and expence of the other; and, as my honour is the common cause and concern of my subjects, their particular interests shall, upon all occasions, be my constant care.'

The Lords took likewise into consideration the three treaties, which had been laid before them: The Lord Townshend opened the debate, and concluded with a motion much to the same purpose with that of Mr. Pelham in the House of Commons. He was seconded by the Duke of Newcastle, who acquainted the House with a remarkable passage out of a letter from Mr. Stanhope, his Majesty's Minister in Spain, 'That, in a private conversation, the Duke of Ripperda had not scrupled to own, that, besides what had already been communicated to him about the late treaties of Vienna, there were still some other secret articles, which in due time should be made public, whereby the contracting parties mutually engaged to assist each other with a certain number of troops, in order to support the Ostend Company, and to recover Gibraltar.' The Duke being asked, Whether he would produce that letter? He said, He had not the King's commands for it, but was only left at liberty to take notice of what he had mentioned. Upon this the Lord Lechmere observed, that no stress could be laid on an information, that did not come regularly and in form before the House: That besides it was usual with Ministers of State sometimes to drop things, that have no reality, in common conversation, only to sound those, with whom they negotiate. That, the treaties, that had been communicated to them, being a matter of the greatest importance, they ought to proceed in it with the utmost caution and matureſt deliberation; and therefore he was of opinion, they ought to take some time to consider of it, and adjourn the debate to another day. He was answered by the Earl of Scarborough; and, the question being put upon the motion for an address, it was carried in the affirmative, by a majority of 1.

Debate them in the House of Lords.

After this the Lord Lechmere stood up, and declared, 'That he would go as far as any Member of that illustrious Assembly, in vindicating the honour and dignity of the British Crown, and in supporting and defending his Majesty's Person and Government. That, as their present and future happiness depended, next under God, on the settlement of the Crown of these Realms on his Majesty and his Royal Issue, they ought to be extremely cautious of any the least derogation from the act of Parliament, by which that happy settlement was made; and therefore he was of opinion, and moved, that to the resolution for an address the following words be added:

This House not doubting but your Majesty, in your great wisdom and justice to these your Kingdoms,

(1) Mr. Pulteney spoke against this motion, and, among other things, said, 'That the Imperial Court's backwardness in granting the investiture for Bremen and Verden, might have been one of the motives to some late measures.' Upon this, Sir Robert Walpole assured the House, that the King might long ago have had the investiture, if he would have paid the exorbitant fees, that were demanded for it.

doms, will always preſerve to them the full and entire benefit of the proviſion made for the further ſecuring our Religion, Laws, and Liberties, by an act paſſed in the 12th and 13th years of the Reign of his late Majeſty King William III. of glorious memory, whereby it is enacted, That, in caſe the Crown and Imperial Dignity of this Realm ſhall hereafter come to any perſon, not being a native of this Kingdom of England, this Nation be not obliged to engage in any war for the defence of any Dominions or Territories, which do not belong to the Crown of England, without the conſent of Parliament. But this motion was rejected.

The addreſs, in ſubſtance the ſame with that of the Commons, was preſented by the Houſe of Lords in a body, on the 18th of February, and received the like anſwer.

On the 2d of March, a petition from Richard Hampden, late Treaſurer of the Navy, and Knight of the Shire for the County of Bucks, was preſented to the Commons by Sir William Yonge, for leave to bring in a bill, to impower the Commiſſioners of the Treaſury to compound with the Petitioner for his debt to the Crown (1). Sir Robert Walpole having acquainted the Houſe, that the King had given his conſent that they might do as they thought fit, the petition was taken into conſideration. It was ſaid by Mr. Onſlow the Speaker, and ſome others, 'That, out of regard to his antient family, and, in particular, in conſideration of his great-grandfather, John Hampden, who made a moſt noble and courageous ſtand againſt arbitrary power, in oppoſing ſhip-money, and fell the firſt victim in the glorious cauſe of liberty, they were for having ſomething done for his relations.' His wife and brother preſented petitions, ſetting forth the diſtreſs they would be reduced to, by the deficiency Mr. Hampden was charged, without relief from the Houſe. Theſe petitions occaſioning a debate, Sir William Yonge took notice, 'That Mr. Hampden's deficiency had, in ſome meaſure, been occaſioned by a general calamity: That he had already done all that lay in his power to make it up: That, however, ſince neither his lady, nor his brother, had any ways been acceſſary to his misfortunes, it was unreaſonable and unjuſt to involve them in his offence and its puniſhment: That his real and patrimonial eſtate amounted to about 2200 l. a year, one full half of which was ſettled for a jointure to his wife, who brought him near 11,000 l. in marriage, beſides an annuity of 200 l. per annum during her life, for her ſeparate uſe; all which ſettlements ought to be ſecured to her: That either Mr. Richard Hampden, or his brother, may have iſſue male; and, in conſideration of the ſignal ſervices, at divers times, performed by their illuſtrious anceſtors, ſome proviſion ſhould be made for their poſterity out of the family eſtate.' And therefore he moved, that a bill be brought in for veſting the real and perſonal eſtates of Richard Hampden in Truſtees, for making ſome proviſion for his wife and family, and for the better ſecuring the debt due from him to the Crown. But Mr. Clayton and ſome other Gentlemen repreſented, that, if this affair went through the uſual tedious courſe of extents in the Exchequer, great part of Mr. Hampden's eſtate would be conſumed in law-expences, ſo that the Crown would not get 200 l. a year out of it. And therefore they propoſed, that the eſtate ſhould be divided into two equal parts, one of which ſhould be allotted as a proviſion for his wife and family, and the other half immediately ſold off, towards ſatisfying the debt due from him to the Crown. Many Members ſhewed their approbation of this propoſal; but the Majority were for Sir William Yonge's motion; and a bill was ordered to be brought in, which afterwards paſſed into a law. 1725-26.

Upon a petition of Daniel Campbell, Member of Parliament for Glaſgow, for ſatisfaction for his damages, by the Rioters in that City, a bill paſſed in his favour; and the ſatisfaction given him was laid upon the place, where the crime was committed, by an act for an impoſition of two pennies Scots, upon all ale and beer brewed in the City of Glaſgow. However, the malt-tax was thought ſo great a grievance in Scotland, that the Convention of the Royal Boroughs preſented an addreſs by John Campbell, Member for Edinburgh, in which, though they diſavowed the conduct of the Glaſgow men, they remonſtrated againſt that tax, as a burthen too heavy for their Country to bear; and afterwards petitioned the Commons concerning it; as did likewiſe the ſhires of Renfrew, Bamff, &c.

Campbell of Glaſgow voted ſatisfaction for his damages.

On the 24th of March, Sir Paul Methuen, Knight of the Bath, delivered the following meſſage from the King to the Houſe of Commons:

The King's meſſage for an extraordinary Supply.

'His Majeſty having nothing more at heart, than an earneſt deſire to ſecure to his own ſubjects the full and free enjoyment of their Trade and Navigation, and in the beſt manner to prevent and fruſtrate ſuch deſigns, as have been formed againſt the particular intereſt of this Nation, and the general peace of Europe, has found it neceſſary, not only to augment his maritime force, but to concert ſuch other meaſures, as may moſt effectually conduce to theſe deſirable ends: And, as theſe ſervices will require ſome extraordinary expence, his Majeſty hopes he ſhall be enabled, by the aſſiſtance of Parliament, to increaſe the number of ſeamen already voted and granted for the ſervice of this year, and to enter into, and make good ſuch engagements, as the circumſtances and exigency of affairs may require.'

This meſſage occaſioned a debate of ſix hours; but it was at laſt agreed to comply with it, by a majority of 270 againſt 89, and an addreſs to that purpoſe was preſented to the King.

This meſſage had not been communicated to the Houſe of Lords, though the King ſaid in it, that he hoped he ſhould be enabled, by the aſſiſtance of his Parliament, to increaſe the number of ſeamen already voted. Notice was taken of it, and the Earl of Strafford aſſerted, 'That the meſſage was unprecedented, and ſtruck at the antient privileges of the Houſe of Peers, who are the grand ſtanding Council of the Sovereign, the hereditary and perpetual Guardians of the liberties

(1) His debt was at firſt 95,256 l. but he had delivered in, by South-Sea ſtock, ſubſcriptions, and other ſecurities, about half the debt, ſo the remainder was about 48,000 l. His paternal eſtate was about 2000 l. a year.

1726. liberties and properties of the People, and, next the King, the principal part of the Legiſlature, and who therefore have a right to be conſulted in all matters of public concern.' He moved, therefore, 'That an addreſs be preſented to know, who adviſed his Majeſty not to ſend the ſame meſſage to the Houſe of Peers, as was ſent to the Houſe of Commons.' The Lord Trevor (who had been made Lord Privy-Seal on the 6th of March, in the room of the Duke of Kingſton) moved, that the further conſideration of that matter might be adjourned for a month. But the Lord Lechmere repreſented, 'That the ſubject-matter of this debate was of ſo great conſequence to his Majeſty's ſervice, to the honour of that noble and illuſtrious Aſſembly, to the antient conſtitution of Parliament, and to the proſperity and welfare of the Kingdom, that it ought not to be poſtponed at all, much leſs for ſuch a length of time, as amounted to a laying it intirely aſide. That it muſt be for the ſervice and ſupport of the Crown, upon all occaſions, to have the advice of both Houſes of Parliament; and as the meſſage in queſtion was only ſent to the Houſe of Commons, and there had not yet been any communication with their Lordſhips upon it, though it contained matters of the higheſt importance, it tended to undermine the very foundation of the Houſe of Peers, and of the antient Conſtitution of the Kingdom. That the rights of the people of England were, in ſome meaſure, invaded, whenever they were deprived of the aſſiſtance of that Houſe of Parliament, without whom no aid can be given to the Crown, nor any taxes laid upon the ſubjects. And therefore, if this debate ſhould be adjourned to ſo long a day, it might be inferred from ſuch a dilatory proceeding, that their Lordſhips were not as jealous of their own privileges, and of the rights and properties of the people, at this time, and as much determined to ſupport and defend them both, as any of their anceſtors and predeceſſors had formerly been. That it was the undoubted, inherent, and fundamental right of the Houſe of Peers to alter and amend all money-bills, which came from the Commons; and, though in ſome late inſtances the Commons had diſputed that right, yet the Lords had never failed to maintain and aſſert it. That, according to antient uſage, all demands of Supply ſhould come from the Throne in the Houſe of Peers; and therefore all other methods are unparliamentary, new, and dangerous to the Conſtitution.' All theſe aſſertions were corroborated with ſeveral precedents upon record, which he cauſed to be read. He was anſwered by the Lords Onſlow and Townſhend; who were replied to by the Lord Bathurſt, who took notice, 'That the appellation of Parliament being given to the Commons, and ſeparately from the Lords, was intirely new and unprecedented. That this was ſo far from being the language of former times, that, though of late the Commons took upon them to begin all money-bills, yet there was a time, when they were ſo inconſiderable, as to apply to the Lords, to deſire them to provide money for the public ſervice. That, if, at this time, the Lords ſuffered themſelves to be overlooked in this manner, they might come at laſt to be voted uſeleſs, as they had formerly been. And therefore, leſt any miſtake of this kind ſhould be attended with ſuch ill conſequence, as to encourage evil Miniſters hereafter to a total neglect of the Houſe of Peers, he was of opinion, that proper notice ſhould be taken of it immediately, inſtead of deferring the further conſideration of it for a month.' The Earl of Scarborough ſaid, 'He did not deny, that the Peers have a right to be adviſed with in all matters of importance, and to give their conſent to money-bills. But, in the caſe before them, it ſeemed needleſs to ſend the meſſage in queſtion to their Houſe, becauſe their Lordſhips had implicitly given their conſent to the augmenting the number of ſeamen, in their addreſs of thanks, wherein the augmentation was hinted at. As to what had been ſuggeſted, that formerly the Commons applied to the Lords to provide money for the public ſervice, the reaſon of it was, becauſe, at that time, none had any money to give but the Lords, moſt of the lands being then in their hands; whereas, ſince the Reigns of Henry VII and Henry VIII, the caſe is very much altered; and therefore they ought not to conſider, how things were formerly, but how they are at preſent, and ſo act as they find them.' After ſeveral other ſpeeches the affair was put off for a month, by 69 voices againſt 31. When the month was expired, it was again adjourned for a fortnight, and the Houſe was moved, 'That an humble addreſs be preſented to his Majeſty, repreſenting the fatal conſequences which muſt happen to this Kingdom, when any advice ſhall be given to the Crown, whereby the counſel and aſſiſtance of this Houſe ſhall not be aſked, at the ſame time that the counſel and aſſiſtance of the Houſe of Commons ſhall be aſked, in matters which concern the peace and ſafety of this Kingdom; and moſt earneſtly to beſeech his Majeſty, that he will for the future diſcourage all ſuch counſels as ſhall tend, in ſo unwarrantable and dangerous a manner, to the deſtruction of the rights of this Houſe.' But this addreſs was rejected.

Among the bills paſſed this Seſſion were theſe two: An act for building a bridge over the Thames, from the town of Fulham in Middleſex, to the town of Putney in Surrey.

An act for preventing frivolous and vexatious arreſts. By this act, no perſon ſhall be held to ſpecial bail on any proceſs from a ſuperior Court where the cauſe of action ſhall not amount to 10 l. nor from any inferior Court under 40 s. In ſuch caſes the Plaintiff ſhall not arreſt the body of the Defendant, but ſhall ſerve him perſonally with a copy of the proceſs.

The buſineſs of the Seſſion being over, the King diſmiſſed the Parliament with the following ſpeech:

My Lords and Gentlemen,

"I Cannot in juſtice put an end to this Seſſion, without returning you my hearty "thanks for the many inſtances you have given "me of your duty and affection to my Perſon "and Government, and of your zeal to maintain the honour and true intereſt of this King-"dom.

"The ſpirit and reſolution you have ſhewn "on this important occaſion, when our moſt "valuable rights and privileges have been ſtruck "at, are highly becoming the weight and au-"thority of a Britiſh Parliament: And the ſteps "that have been taken abroad, in ſupport of "the 1726. " the meaſures entered into againſt this Nation,

" muſt convince every body of your wiſdom
" and prudence in endeavouring to put an early
" ſtop to the further progreſs of them. I hope
" the precautions, you have enabled me to take,
" will be ſufficient, in conjunction with my
" Allies, to defeat the deſigns, which have " been formed againſt us; and that the Pro-
" moters of them, when they have fully weighed
" their own circumſtances, and better conſidered
" thoſe of the ſeveral powers united in defence
" of the tranquillity and liberties of Europe,
" will find it their own intereſt to preſerve the " peace, and think it moſt ſafe and prudent to
" deſiſt from their dangerous ſchemes.

Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons,

" I return you my particular thanks for the " Supplies, which you have ſo chearfully and " effectually raiſed; and you may be aſſured,
" that they ſhall be faithfully applied to the
" uſes, for which you intended them.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

" The conſtant employment of my thoughts,
" and the moſt earneſt wiſhes of my heart,
" tend wholly to the ſecuring to my ſubjects
" their juſt rights and advantages, and to the " preſerving to them, and to all Europe, the " enjoyment of a ſafe and honourable peace.
" And I muſt not conclude, without giving
" you the ſtrongeſt aſſurances, that the particu-
" lar confidence, you have placed in me, ſhall be " made uſe of in ſuch manner only, as may
" moſt effectually conduce to the attaining thoſe
" good and great purpoſes."

The Supplies, raiſed during this Seſſion of Parliament, were immediately employed in fitting out three different ſquadrons; one of ſeven men of war, deſigned for the Weſt-Indies, under the command of Vice-Admiral Hoſier; another of twelve or more ſhips of the line, for the Mediterranean, under the command of Sir John Jennings, Admiral of the White; and a third, deſigned for the Baltic, under the command of Sir Charles Wager, Vice-Admiral of the Red, and Sir George Walton, Rear-Admiral of the Blue, conſiſting of twenty-one ſhips and two fire-ſhips.

The Court of Great-Britain had evident proofs, that nothing could influence the Emperor and King of Spain to terms of reaſon, but to ſhew a vigorous ſpirit againſt a very pernicious or ſuſpicious part of the treaty of Vienna. And as all appearances convinced the Miniſtry, that nothing could ſo effectually guard againſt approaching evils, as the diſpatching ſufficient ſquadrons of ſhips to ſeveral places, they did with all poſſible diligence fit out the forementioned ſquadrons.

The ſquadron ſent to the Baltic was to prevent very great evils in thoſe parts, there being no room to doubt, that the Czarina's real view was to go with a fleet to Stockholm, and, under a pretence of demanding the uſe of the Ports, and the aſſiſtance of Sweden for the recovery of Sleſwick to the Duke of Holſtein, actually to dethrone the King of Sweden, and make that Nation dependent on Muſcovy. It was therefore judged of the utmoſt importance to prevent this. Accordingly, about the end of April, Sir Charles Wager, with his ſquadron, came to an anchor in the road of Copenhagen; and, on the 25th of that month, had an audience of the King of Denmark. On the 2d of May he ſailed to Stockholm, where, eight days after, he had an audience of the King of Sweden, being introduced by Mr. Poyntz, the Britiſh Envoy Extraordinary. A ſquadron of Daniſh men of war having joined the Britiſh ſquadron, the united fleet became ſo formidable, that the Court of Ruſſia thought proper to ſuſpend the fitting out their large ſhips, and only to equip ſome frigates; and the land-forces, which had been drawn together near Peterſburg, in order to be put on board the Ruſſian fleet, were ſent to work on the Ludoga canal, and the fortifications at Cronſlot. That Court was under the greateſt uneaſineſs, and immediately gave orders for reinforcing the garriſons of Wibourg, Cronſlot, Revel, and Riga. Mean while, Sir Charles Wager, having been joined by the Naſſau and Port-Mahon on the 20th of May, ſailed from Elſenal near Stockholm the 25th, and arrived, the 29th, near the Iſland of Nargen, three leagues from Revel, and, the next morning, ſent an Officer with a letter to Lieutenant-General Wulcoffe, who commanded at Revel, and ordered the Port-Mahon to ſail to Cronſlot, having on board Mr. Barnet, one of his Lieutenants, by whom he ſent his Majeſty's letter to the Czarina, incloſed in a packet to Admiral Apraxin (1). In this letter, which was dated the 11th of April, his Majeſty obſerved, 'That as the Czarina's great preparations both by ſea and land for war, in a time of peace, could not fail of giving Him, as well as his Allies in thoſe parts, great and juſt cauſe to be alarmed; ſhe would not be ſurprized, that he had ſent a ſtrong ſquadron into the Baltic, to obviate any danger, that might enſue from ſo extraordinary an armament.' He laid before her the ſeveral inſtances he had given of a ſincere diſpoſition to eſtabliſh a firm and laſting friendſhip with the Crown of Ruſſia; but that his intentions had been diſappointed by the delays of that Court; and he expreſſed his ſurprize, 'that, while he was carrying on amicable Negotiations, and had not given the leaſt provocations on his part, meaſures were taken at her Court in favour of the Pretender, and great encouragement to his Adherents. After what, ſays he, we have now ſet forth, your Majeſty will not be ſurprized, that we, being indiſpenſably obliged to provide for the ſecurity of our Dominions, to perform our engagements with our Allies, and to maintain the public tranquillity in the North, which ſeems to be very much in danger from your Majeſty's late preparations, have thought it neceſſary to ſend a ſtrong fleet of our men of war into the Baltic, and that we have given orders to our Admiral, who commands it, to endeavour to prevent freſh troubles in thoſe parts, by hindering 1726. Sir Charles Wager ſails to Ruſſia.

(1) The Czar of Muſcovy died the 28th of January 1725-6, and was ſucceeded by the Empreſs Catherina his wife.

1726. hindering your Majesty's ships from coming out, in case that you persist in your resolution to put your fleet to sea, to execute the designs, which you may have in view. But, as it is our firm intention to live in peace and friendship with your Majesty, we wish, from the bottom of our heart, that your Majesty, seriously reflecting upon the true interest of your subjects, would permit them to enjoy the blessings of that peace, which they purchased at the expence of so much blood and treasure, under the conduct of his late Majesty; and that, rather than enter into measures, which must inevitably plunge Russia into a war, and the whole North into confusion, your Majesty would please to give your people and all mankind convincing proofs of your inclination for peace, and of your good disposition to live in quiet with your neighbours.' The Czarina, in her answer dated June 15, declared her surprize at not receiving the King's letter till the very instant his fleet appeared on her coasts, and after it had cast anchor before Revel, 'since it had been more agreeable to the custom established among Sovereigns, and more consistent with the amity, that had so long subsisted between her Kingdoms and the Crown of Great-Britain, had his Majesty thought fit to expostulate with her about the umbrage he might have conceived from her armament; and to expect her answer thereupon, before he advanced to so offensive a step. That then his Majesty might have been assured by her, that it was so far from her thoughts to disturb the repose of the North, that, on the contrary, all her cares and attention were wholly bent on the security and preservation of it, both for the time present, and time to come, as being more concerned than his Majesty, in preventing whatever might indanger that tranquillity.' That, with regard to what was charged upon her, in relation to the Pretender, it 'was a frivolous and stale accusation, made use of as it had heretofore been, as the main pretence for all the unkind steps taken against her.'

Sir Charles Wager remained in his station near Revel till October, when, the year being so far advanced, and he having intelligence from Petersburg and Cronslot, that the Russian gallies were laid up in their winter harbour, and their fleet not in a condition to put to sea, he sailed from the bay of Revel for the coast of Denmark, and arrived at Copenhagen the same month. From thence, after a stay of a few days, he sailed for England, where he safely arrived in November.

Sir John Jennings put to sea.

Sir John Jennings, with his squadron, which was furnished with a considerable number of land-forces and artillery, visited the coasts of Spain, and shut up the ports of that Kingdom. His orders were to cruise between Cadiz and Cape St. Vincent, to intercept the Galleons, and to assist Gibraltar, in case of a siege, with the land-forces on board his fleet, and to annoy the enemy to the utmost. But he did no damage on the coast of Spain, and only caused alarms, and protected the trade of Great-Britain.

Hosier sails to the West-Indies.

Vice-Admiral Hosier's squadron was inferior to those of Sir Charles Wager and Sir John Jennings; but he was authorized to join to his fleet all the ships he could meet with in the West-Indies; and his orders were to prevent the Galleons from sailing out of the Spanish ports there; or, if they should come out, to seize them, and bring their cargoes untouched to England. He arrived at the Bastimento's off Porto-Bello, in the beginning of June; but, ten days before his arrival, an advice-boat from Spain brought orders for putting on shore the money on board the Galleons, said to be twenty-six millions of pieces of eight, and sending it back to Panama.

These measures were taken against Spain, in resentment of the engagements, which that Court had entered into with the Court of Vienna, to the prejudice of Great-Britain, and the designs formed in favour of the Pretender, by the instigation of the Dukes of Ormond and Wharton, and Earl Marischal, who were then at Madrid. But the Duke de Ripperda, who had been the principal Agent in forming and concluding the treaty of Vienna, and the Author of the violent counsels against Great-Britain, was of a sudden dismissed, on the 14th of May, from all his employments, though allowed a pension of 3000 pistoles for his subsistence. The pretended cause of his disgrace was the embezzlement of the finances (of which he was Superintendant) to the value of four millions. The Duke, upon his receiving the King of Spain's decree for dismissing him from his posts, went immediately to the House of Monsieur Vandermeer, the Dutch Ambassador; but, not thinking himself safe there, Vandermeer carried him in his coach to the house of Colonel Stanhope, the British Ambassador, whose protection he begged and obtained. The King being informed of this, caused the Ambassador's house to be surrounded by two hundred grenadiers. The next day Colonel Stanhope had an audience of the King, and gave him an account of what had happened in relation to the discarded Minister, which the King did not seem to disapprove; and the grenadiers were called off from his house, on a promise from him, that the Duke de Ripperda's person should be forthcoming; and sixty guards were posted in the streets leading to Colonel Stanhope's house, to take him, if he should attempt to make his escape. But on the 25th of May, N. S. the King appointed Don Lewis Cuellar, one of the Alcades of his Court, assisted by Don Francis Valansa, Adjutant-General of the Life-guard, to enter Colonel Stanhope's house, and take from thence the Duke de Ripperda, and convey him to the Castle of Segovia, with a sufficient guard; which was done. But this violation of the law of Nations, in forcibly entering the house of an Ambassador, was justly complained of by the Court of Great-Britain, who ordered the letters and papers, which passed between the Ministers and Ambassadors of both Courts upon this occasion, and upon Sir John Jennings's coming with his fleet on the coast of Spain, to be published. Among these papers is a memorial of Colonel Stanhope to the King of Spain, dated Sept. 24, 1726, in which he observes, that the King his Master was surprized, that the King of Spain should not know the reasons, and be sensible of the necessity, which obliged his Majesty to send the fleet under Sir John Jennings to the coast of Spain; 'considering, says he, the engagements, into which some of the most considerable powers of Europe have of late entered, and of which his Majesty has complained so often and so loudly. The naval armaments and equipments, which have been made in most of the ports of Spain; the preparations of war, and the motions ons of a conſiderable number of Spaniſh troops towards that part of their coaſt, which lies neareſt and moſt convenient for executing an enterprize on his Majeſty's Dominions; the great hopes of the Emiſſaries and Adherents of the Pretender, who have publicly boaſted of the aſſiſtance they ſhould receive from thoſe parts; the confidence they had in it, and which has appeared clearly in the pernicious and indiſcreet conduct of ſome among them, who have been lately received and favoured at Madrid: This, joined with the intrigues, which have been carried on with the Muſcovites, and the reaſons his Majeſty has to ſuſpect the ill deſigns, upon which the three ſhips were ſent laſt year from Peterſburg to Cadiz, and thence to St. Andero; the knowledge his Majeſty had laſt winter, by the avowal of the Miniſter of Spain, that there was an offenſive Alliance between the Courts of Madrid and Vienna, and that, by one of the articles of that Alliance, it was ſtipulated to uſe open force to get Gibraltar reſtored to the King of Spain, a place, which his Majeſty poſſeſſes by virtue of ſo juſt a right; the great Subſidies, which have been furniſhed to the Imperial Court, and which are not ſeen to be ſettled by an Alliance, that has yet been made public; the notorious infractions, which the Spaniſh Guarda Coſtes have for a long time made, with reſpect to the commerce and navigation of his Majeſty's ſubjects in the Weſt-Indies, infractions, which have been ſo often complained of without the leaſt appearance of ſatisfaction or reparation: Theſe things, joined together, are ſufficient to exhibit clearly the reaſons, which have induced his Majeſty to take the meaſures he judged proper, and to equip the ſeveral fleets, which have put to ſea; and his Majeſty's ſubjects would have had juſt cauſe to complain, had not care been taken for the ſecurity of the Kingdom, and of their rights and properties, which they ſaw threatened and in danger.'

In Auguſt, the States-General ſigned their acceſſion to the treaty of Hanover, after having been diſſuaded by the Imperial and Spaniſh Miniſters not to do it, and preſſed to come into that of Vienna. Though the Emperor had not ſucceeded with the States, he found means to detach, in great meaſure, the King of Pruſſia from his engagements with the Allies of Hanover. The conduct of his Pruſſian Majeſty, in this inſtance, as a Proteſtant and Son-in-law of King George, could hardly be defended. It was thought he propoſed ſome extraordinary advantages from his deſertion of the Allies of Hanover, and cloſing with thoſe of Vienna; one part of which advantages was probably to be ſupported by the Emperor, in making ſome conqueſt upon the Dominions of Hanover. However that be, he made a treaty with the Emperor, which gave great jealouſy to the friends of the treaty of Hanover. By this treaty the King of Pruſſia engaged in a new contract, not very conſiſtent with the apprehenſions of the Hanover Allies, of the Emperor's power and projects; ſince the King of Pruſſia was to guarantee the order of Succeſſion in the hereditary Dominions in the heirs female, in default of male iſſue; while, on the other hand, the Emperor obliged himſelf to uſe his endeavours to obtain from all thoſe, who had pretenſions to the Duchies of Juliers and Bergues, a ceſſion of their rights in favour of his Pruſſian Majeſty.

The treaty of Hanover was attended with the greateſt difficulties, and a prodigious but unavoidable expence. Of this Sweden was an inſtance. All the ſummer preſſing and repeated applications were made by the Britiſh and French Miniſters at Stockholm, to induce the Court of Sweden to accede to the treaty of Hanover. And no leſs pains were taken by the Ruſſian and Auſtrian Miniſters, to procure his Swediſh Majeſty's acceſſion to the treaty of Vienna. But that wiſe Prince reſolved to leave the determination of ſo important an affair to the General Dyet of the States of Sweden. The Holſtein faction in Sweden were ſpirited in their oppoſition to this acceſſion, by Count Freytag, the Imperial Ambaſſador, and the Ambaſſador of Ruſſia; but that did not hinder the States ſigning it, as well as the King of Sweden. 1726.

During theſe Negotiations, Spain, incenſed to the laſt degree, made great preparations for war. A camp of about twenty thouſand men was formed at St. Roch near Gibraltar, and all the neceſſaries for a ſiege were provided. Preparations were likewiſe made at ſea; four thouſand ſailors were landed; ſeveral men of war were come to Cadiz, and as many more, as could be, were bought. The pretence was, to rebuild the Caſtle of Old Gibraltar, though ſome greater deſign was very viſible.

In theſe circumſtances the Parliament of Great-Britain met, on the 17th of January. The King opened the Seſſion with a very long, lively, and pathetic ſpeech, but, at the ſame time, extremely offenſive to the Princes of whom mention was made. The ſpeech was as follows: 1726-27. The fifth Seſſion of the ſecond Parliament of King George.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

" I Acquainted you laſt year with the treaties " of peace and commerce concluded between " the Emperor and the King of Spain. As " that ſudden and unaccountable conjunction " gave, at the firſt appearance, juſt grounds of " jealouſy and apprehenſion to the neighbouring " powers of Europe, and the ſubſequent " proceedings and tranſactions in thoſe two " Courts, and the ſecret and offenſive Alliances " concluded between them about the ſame time, " have laid the foundations of a moſt exorbitant " and formidable power, and are ſo directly levelled againſt the moſt valuable and darling " intereſts and privileges of this Nation, that " we muſt determine either tamely to ſubmit to " the peremptory and unjuſt demands of the " King of Spain in giving up Gibraltar, and " patiently to acquieſce in the Emperor's uſurped and extended exerciſe of trade and com- " merce, or muſt reſolve to be in a condition to " do ourſelves juſtice, and to defend our undoubted rights againſt thoſe reciprocal engage- " ments, entered into in defiance and violation of all national faith and the moſt ſolemn " treaties.

" I have likewiſe received information from " different parts, on which I can intirely depend, that the placing the Pretender upon " the Throne of this Kingdom is one of the " articles of the ſecret engagements: And if " time ſhall evince, that the giving up the trade " of this Nation to one power, and Gibraltar " and Port-Mahon to another, is made the price " and reward of impoſing upon this Kingdom

1726-27. " a Popiſh Pretender: What an indignation
" muſt this raiſe in the breaſt of every Proteſ-
" tant Briton!

" Nor were theſe fatal combinations confined
" to thoſe parts of the world alone, but they
" extended themſelves into Ruſſia; and, had not
" the deſigns of that Court againſt ſome of
" their neighbours been prevented, by the ſea-
" ſonable arrival of our fleet in thoſe ſeas, a way
" had been opened for invading thoſe King-
" doms, and giving a powerful aſſiſtance to any
" attempt to be made from other quarters.

" Such circumſtances would not ſuffer Me and
" my Allies, among whom there has been and
" is the moſt perfect harmony, union, and con-
" cert, to be idle ſpectators, and regardleſs of " our own ſafety, and the common cauſe of " Europe; for which purpoſe his moſt Chriſ-
" tian Majeſty has been at a great expence, this
" laſt year, in augmenting his forces; and the " States-General, ſenſible of the imminent dan-
" ger, have not only acceded to the defenſive
" Alliance concluded at Hanover, but have come
" to ſtrong and ſeaſonable reſolutions for an " extraordinary augmentation of their forces
" both by ſea and land. The Acceſſion of " the Crown of Sweden is in ſuch a forward-
" neſs, and the Negotiations with the Crown
" of Denmark are ſo far advanced, that we may
" reaſonably depend upon the ſucceſs and good
" effect of them.

" This ſhort view of the preſent poſture of " affairs will, I am confident, not only ſecure to " Me the ſupport and aſſiſtance of my Parlia-
" ment, in carrying on this great and neceſſary
" work, in conjunction with my Allies, but
" juſtify the meaſures hitherto taken, and the " expences already made.

" The confidence, you repoſed in me laſt
" year, has been made uſe of for the benefit of " the Public: And as the chief article of ex" ceeding has, by my equipping and ſending to
" ſea three conſiderable ſquadrons, fallen upon
" the head of the Navy, I am perſuaded the ne-
" ceſſity of the ſervices, and the ſecurity, ad" vantage, and glory, that has accrued to this " Nation from thoſe ſquadrons, will ſufficiently
" ſpeak for themſelves, as long as both friends
" and foes, with joy and concern, confeſs they " have ſeen and felt the effects of the naval
" power of Great-Britain.

" It is not to be wondered at, that the Prin-
" ces engaged in theſe enterprizes are very " much diſturbed to ſee their projects rendered
" abortive. The King of Spain, impatient of
" the diſappointments he has met with, can no
" longer diſguiſe that enmity to us, which for
" ſome time he has only waited for a favourable
" opportunity to declare. He has now ordered
" his Miniſter reſiding here to depart immedi" ately from this Country, leaving a memorial,
" that is little ſhort of a declaration of war,
" wherein he again demands and inſiſts upon
" the reſtitution of Gibraltar. He does not
" himſelf deny the offenſive Alliance, nor his
" engagements to ſupport the Oſtend Company.
" He makes my recalling thoſe ſquadrons,
" which his conduct has put me under a neceſ-
" ſity of ſending to the Weſt-Indies, and the " coaſt of Spain, the condition of any further
" correſpondence between the two Crowns; and,
" ſuppoſing the continuance of my fleets abroad
" to be actual hoſtilities, threatens to repel 172
" them with force, to the utmoſt of his power.

" But, not content with theſe menaces, in-
" ſults, and infractions of treaties, his Catho" lic Majeſty is now making preparations to at" tack and beſiege Gibraltar; and in order to " carry on that ſervice, or to cover another de-
" ſign, has aſſembled a great body of troops
" in that neighbourhood. But as the preſent
" ſtate and condition of that garriſon, with the " reinforcements I have ordered thither, give " me little cauſe to apprehend, or my enemies
" to hope for ſucceſs in that undertaking, the " certain and undoubted intelligence I have, that
" it is now reſolved to attempt an invaſion upon
" theſe Kingdoms in favour of the Pretender,
" by an imbarkation from the coaſts of Spain,
" gives me reaſon to believe, that, though the
" ſiege of Gibraltar may probably be under-
" taken, the public, avowed, and immenſe pre" parations made for that purpoſe are chiefly
" calculated to amuſe the world, and to diſ-
" guiſe the intended invaſion, which I am ſurely
" informed has been for ſome time agreed to
" be the firſt ſtep and beginning of the long
" premeditated rupture.

Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons,

" Theſe conſiderations muſt awaken in you
" all ſuch a ſenſe of our common and imme" diate danger, as will, I doubt not, inſpire you
" with a zeal and chearfulneſs in raiſing the Sup-
" plies neceſſary for the defence of your Coun-
" try, and for making good our engagements
" with our Allies.

" I received too much ſatisfaction from the " happineſs of my people in their full enjoy-
" ment and future proſpect of peace, eaſe, and
" proſperity, not to be ſenſibly affected with
" theſe new convulſions, and the unavoidable
" neceſſity I am under of aſking larger Supplies
" of my people, and of deſiring to be enabled
" to make ſuch an augmentation of my forces
" by ſea and land, as the preſent exigency of my
" affairs requires.

" I will order the proper eſtimates to be laid
" before you, and ſuch treaties as I have made
" with foreign Princes for the hire of foreign " troops: And as the expence, I was laſt year in " a particular manner intruſted to make, has " amounted to no inconſiderable ſum, and the " public utility may again require the like ſer-
" vices to be performed, I hope you will again
" repoſe the ſame truſt and confidence in me.

" It is with great pleaſure, that I ſee the time
" ſo near approaching, when ſuch a conſiderable
" addition will be made to the ſinking fund.
" Let all, that wiſh well to the peace and quiet
" of my Government, have the ſatisfaction to
" ſee, that our preſent neceſſities ſhall make no
" interruption in the progreſs of that deſirable
" work of gradually diſcharging the national " debt. I hope therefore you will make a
" proviſion for the immediate application of
" the produce of the ſinking fund to the uſes,
" for which it was ſo wiſely contrived, and to
" which it ſtands now appropriated.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

" I have had no thoughts of making any ac-
" quiſitions

" quiſitions to any parts of my Dominions. My " whole care and concern has been to preſerve " and maintain the undoubted rights and privi- " leges of my people; and therefore all my " meaſures have been preventive and defenſive. " But, ſuch endeavours being now rendered im- " practicable, vigorous reſolutions, and a ſpeedy " execution of them, can alone put an effectual " end to the dangers, that ſurround us. How- " ever hazardous and deſperate the enterprizes " formed againſt us may appear to be, your be- " ing aſſured, that they are reſolved upon, will, " I am perſuaded, be ſufficient to prevail upon " you, to put yourſelves in a condition to re- " ſiſt and defeat them.

" If preſerving a due balance of power in " Europe; if defending the poſſeſſions of the " Crown of Great-Britain, of infinite advantage " and ſecurity to our trade and commerce; if " ſupporting that trade and commerce againſt " dangerous and unlawful incroachments; and " if the preſent Eſtabliſhment, the Religion, " Liberties, and Properties of a Proteſtant peo- " ple, are any longer conſiderations worthy of " the care and attention of a Britiſh Parliament. " I need ſay no more to incite my loyal and " faithful Houſes of Parliament to exert them- " ſelves in the defence of all that is dear and va- " luable to them."

The zeal and indignation raiſed by this ſpeech was ſo great, that, in the addreſſes of thanks, words were wanted to expreſs the deep reſentment at the inſults offered the King, at the invaſions of the moſt valuable branches of trade, at the deſigns formed againſt the Nation, and to applaud the wiſe meaſures taken by the King, to prevent the deſtructive deſigns againſt the liberties of Europe. However, when the addreſs was moved for in the Houſe of Commons, it was oppoſed by Mr. Pulteney and others. They urged, 'That the matter of peace and war is of the greateſt weight that can fall under their conſideration: That, as his Majeſty's ſpeech contained many points of the higheſt moment and importance, ſo no doubt his Majeſty, in his great wiſdom and goodneſs towards his people, expected, on this occaſion, not only the ſupport, but likewiſe the advice of that Houſe: That, in order thereto, they ought maturely to deliberate on thoſe ſeveral heads, which could not be done, before ſeveral papers were communicated to them, that ſeemed abſolutely neceſſary to ſtate ſome facts relating to thoſe weighty matters: That the motion, as it was drawn up, implied an approbation of meaſures taken to prevent dangers; which ſeemed prepoſterous, before they knew either what thoſe meaſures were, or whether thoſe dangers were real: That therefore they ought, for the preſent, to content themſelves with returning his Majeſty the moſt humble thanks of the Houſe, for his moſt gracious ſpeech, with aſſurances of ſupporting his Majeſty in all juſt and neceſſary meaſures; and appoint a day for taking the ſpeech into conſideration.' To this it was anſwered in general, 'That delays were often dangerous, and might be fatal in the preſent ſituation of affairs, which required vigorous and ſpeedy reſolutions, both for the encouragement of our Friends, and the perfecting ſome Alliances, that were already in great forwardneſs, and for the diſcouragement of our Enemies, who had already blocked up Gibraltar, and threatened it with a ſiege: That the meaſures, that had been taken, were but a conſequence of the laſt year's reſolution, which the Houſe had come to, after a full examination and mature conſideration of the ſtate of affairs, then laid before both Houſes by his Majeſty: But that, however, ſuch an addreſs, as was propoſed, did not preclude a further inquiry into thoſe matters.' As the promiſe of reſtoring Gibraltar was mentioned in ſome of the ſpeeches, Sir Robert Walpole ſaid, 'That, ſuch a promiſe not having been made, while he had the honour to be in the Adminiſtration, he could ſay nothing to it: That, if ſuch a promiſe was ever made, he durſt aver, that it was conditional, and made void and invalid by the King of Spain's refuſing to comply with the conditions, on which it was made; and that, whenever the performance of that promiſe was mentioned to him, as inſiſted on by the King of Spain, he always delivered it as his fixed and poſitive opinion, That Gibraltar could not be given up without the conſent of Parliament.' After the debate, the addreſs was carried by 251 againſt 81. 1726-27.

Supplies.

The Commons, purſuant to the King's deſire in his ſpeech, applied themſelves to the affair of the Supplies. It was unanimouſly reſolved to grant 20,000 ſeamen, and to augment the land-forces to 26,383 men. To defray the expence of the fleet and army, Sir Robert Walpole propoſed a tax of four ſhillings in the pound on land. This was oppoſed by ſome Members, who alledged, That it was more eligible to apply the produce of the ſinking fund towards the preſent occaſions; but the land-tax was voted (1).

Debates on the King's Speech.

The warmeſt debate this Seſſion was in the Houſe of Lords, on the 24th of January, all the Peers in London having been ſummoned to attend. In a Grand Committee, of which the Lord de la War was Chairman, the Clerk was directed to read the titles of the papers that had been laid before the Houſe, conſiſting chiefly of letters and memorials between the Miniſters of Great-Britain, France, and Spain, and the act of acceſſion of the States to the Hanover treaty. This done, the debate was opened by the Lord Bathurſt, whoſe ſpeech, and the Lord Townſhend's anſwer, were as follows: The Lord Bathurſt began

(1) The whole Supply of this laſt year of King George was as follows:

	l.	s.	d.
Jan. 24. For 20,000 ſeamen	1,040,000	0	0
— 26. For 26,383 land-men	885,494	9	4
— For garriſons in the Plantations, Minorca, Gibraltar, &c.	157,637	6	5
— For ext. expences not provided for	30,750	19	5
Feb. 2. For the Office of Land-Ord.	100,000	0	0
— For the Ordinary of the Navy	199,071	7	8
— 14. For half-pay Officers	60,000	0	0
— For Chelſea Hoſpital out-penſioners	4,847	2	0
— For arrears to the Landg. of Heſſe	50,000	0	0
— For 12,000 Heſſians	170,000	0	0
— For deficiency of funds	160,306	17	5
March 21. For making good the deficiency of the general fund	54,196	7	9
	2,998,104	11	•

1726-27. gan with taking notice, 'With what caution and circumſpection the States-General had acted in this whole affair. That they had not fully and intirely acceded to the treaty of Hanover, ſince they had formally and expreſsly excuſed and diſcharged themſelves from the general guarantee of the treaties of Weſtphalia and Oliva, in which, they ſaid, they were never engaged. And, as to the buſineſs of Thorn, they had only promiſed to employ their friendly offices for obtaining a reaſonable ſatisfaction. So that they acceded only upon account of the 5th and 6th articles of the treaty of Munſter, for preſerving and maintaining their rights with reſpect to commerce; whereas, by the treaty of Hanover, Great-Britain and France ſtood engaged to guarantee to the Dutch, not only the 5th and 6th articles of the peace of Weſtphalia, but likewiſe the barrier treaty, and the treaty of Oliva, in favour of the Proteſtants of Germany. And thus, in ſhort, the Dutch having engaged themſelves to nothing, what they had done, did not deſerve the name of acceſſion, the rather becauſe they had made it an expreſs condition, that their act of acceſſion ſhould be approved and ratified by the King of Great-Britain, the moſt Chriſtian King, and the King of Pruſſia. But, though this laſt Potentate was one of the principal contractors in the treaty of Hanover, yet, no mention being now made of him, he could not tell what to make of it. That it ſeems his Miniſter had refuſed ſigning the act of acceſſion, probably upon account of the Dutch excuſing themſelves from the general guaranty. But, let his reaſons for receding from his engagements be what they would, his example might be of dangerous conſequence; for by a letter from the Duke de Bournonville, the Spaniſh Miniſter at Vienna, it appeared, that they were not without hopes at the Imperial Court, that France might thereby think herſelf diſengaged from the Hanover Alliance; in which event Great-Britain alone muſt bear the burden of an expenſive war with two of the greateſt Potentates in Europe. That, the Dutch receiving far greater advantages than Great-Britain, from the Eaſt-India trade, and conſequently being more concerned than we in the ſuppreſſion of the Oſtend Company, they ought, at leaſt, to bear an equal ſhare with us in the expences of this war, and guarantee to us the poſſeſſion of Gibraltar, in the ſame manner, as Great-Britain guarantees to them their barrier. That, after all, he did not ſee any juſt reaſon for a rupture with Spain. That indeed the Duke de Ripperda might have dropped ſome indecent and indiſcreet expreſſions; but he was known to be a hot-headed man; and Princes have a right to diſavow the indiſcretions of their Miniſters, which the King of Spain had done in a moſt ſolemn manner, with relation to Ripperda. That it was well known, that violent Miniſters do many unaccountable things. And, if their idle talk and fooliſh expreſſions were a juſt foundation for war, Nations would ever be at daggers drawing. That, for ſome time paſt, the Emperor had been treated here very cavalierly by ſome perſons; and that, in the memorial the Marquiſs de Pozzobueno left behind him, at his departure, it was ſuggeſted, That the violent ſtate, to which affairs are now reduced, is owing to the Miniſters of England. That, in the ſame memorial, mention is made of a poſitive promiſe made by the King of Great-Britain for the reſtitution of Gibraltar; which could not be ſuppoſed to be ſaid without any foundation; and therefore it would be highly neceſſary to inquire, whether, in reality, ſuch a promiſe was ever made; and whether any thing like it was mentioned in the treaty concluded at Madrid? That, let that matter ſtand how it would, all poſſible methods of an amicable accommodation ought, in his opinion, to be tried before they engaged in a war, which, in our preſent circumſtances, might be attended with very dangerous conſequences. That the Nation is loaded with a debt of above fifty millions. But, though they are told of a ſinking fund applied to the gradual diſcharge of that heavy burden, yet it was more to be wiſhed than expected, that the operation of that wiſe contrivance ſhould ſuffer no interruption by the exigences inſeparable from a war. That one of our beſt Mathematicians has foretold, that, if ever England raiſes above five millions in a year, it will infallibly be exhauſted and ruined in a few years. Now if, at this juncture, we ſhould enter upon a war, and not meddle with the ſinking fund, according to the ſcheme of thoſe in the Adminiſtration, they muſt be obliged to raiſe, at leaſt, ſeven millions a year upon the people of England; the conſequence of which was obvious and glaring to any one, who admitted the principle of that great Mathematician. That, in ſome of the papers laid before the Houſe, mention was made of great ſums of money diſtributed in divers places, to bring ſome meaſures to bear. That, for his own part, he had touched neither Spaniſh nor Engliſh gold. He was neither a Spaniard, nor a Frenchman, but a true Engliſhman, and, as long as he had the honour to ſit in that Houſe, he would ſpeak and act for the good of his Country. That therefore he would ſum up all he had ſaid, with earneſtly deſiring their Lordſhips ſeriouſly to conſider the matter before them, which was of the laſt conſequence and importance to the whole Nation. What (ſaid he) can we get by a war, if it be a ſucceſsful one? I will ſay it in one word, nothing. What can we loſe, if it be unproſperous? I will ſay it in one word, in a ſyllable, all."

This ſpeech was anſwered by the Lord Townſhend, who ſaid, 'That the treaty of Hanover, being purely defenſive, had made no alteration in the treaties ſubſiſting before, either between the contracting Powers, or other Princes and States. That the true aim and intention of this Alliance was a reciprocal guaranty for the protecting and maintaining the Dominions and Countries, both in and out of Europe, whereof each of the Allies was actually poſſeſſed at the time of the ſigning this Alliance. So that, by acceding thereto, the Crowns of Great-Britain and France became guarantees of the 5th and 6th articles of the treaty of Munſter, by which the Dutch are intitled to excluſive rights and privileges of trade in the Eaſt-Indies. But that this guaranty was reciprocal between Great-Britain and the States-General, ſince, by the treaty of 1667, Spain had granted to England the ſame rights and privileges, which the Dutch enjoyed by the 5th and 6th articles of the treaty of Weſtphalia. That therefore the ſuppreſſing of the Oſtend Company, which manifeſtly invaded thoſe excluſive rights and privileges, was become a common cauſe between us and the Dutch. That our concern therein is almoſt equal to theirs; ſince our Eaſt-India trade brings about 300,000*l*. a year

-27. a year into the Cuſtoms; which being part of the general mortgage, if ſo conſiderable a branch of trade ſhould be loſt, that yearly ſum would be taken from the ſinking fund. That by former treaties Great-Britain was guarantee to the Dutch for their barrier in the Netherlands, as reciprocally, by the ſame treaties, they were guarantees to Great-Britain for the Proteſtant Succeſſion. So that, in thoſe reſpects, we ſtood no more engaged to them, than they to us. That, indeed, by their act of acceſſion to the Hanover Alliance, the States-General exempt themſelves from the general guaranty of the treaties of Weſtphalia, and Oliva, to which they never ſtood engaged; but, nevertheleſs, by the ſame act, they engage themſelves to employ, jointly with Great-Britain, and France, their friendly offices for obtaining a reaſonable ſatisfaction and reparation, as to the infractions, which might have been made in the treaty of Oliva; which is as much as the contracting powers have engaged themſelves to by the firſt ſecret article of the treaty of Hanover, and is indeed as little, as the Proteſtant Potentates could do, in commiſeration of the ſeverities lately exerciſed againſt the Proteſtants of Thorn. That, as to the idle talk and indecent expreſſions of Duke de Ripperda, they were not alledged as a juſt foundation for a rupture with Spain, but only as pregnant and corroborating indications of an offenſive Alliance between that Prince and the Emperor, of which there were ſuch convincing proofs, as left no room to doubt it. That, as to the ſecret article of that Alliance in favour of the Pretender, his Majeſty had received from ſeveral parts ſuch poſitive and concurring informations, that, if the ſafety of the State permitted to lay thoſe advices before the Houſe, they would no more queſtion the certainty of ſuch an article, than if they had been preſent at the ſigning of it. But he hoped that illuſtrious Aſſembly would not think any of his Majeſty's ſervants, who had the honour to ſit amongſt them, ſo audacious, as to tell them downwright untruths, or to preſume to impoſe upon their Lordſhips, by alledging facts of ſo great importance, without ſufficient vouchers. That, as to the other articles of the ſecret offenſive alliance, relating to the ſupporting of the Oſtend Company, and the reſtitution of Gibraltar, the King of Spain and his Miniſters were ſo far from denying them, that, on the contrary, they did not ſcruple publicly to avow and juſtify them. That therefore his Majeſty could not, in prudence, but take early and proper meaſures to oppoſe an Alliance, ſo directly levelled againſt his Crown and Dignity, and invaſive of moſt valuable rights and privileges acquired to his ſubjects by the moſt ſolemn treaties. That, at the ſame time, notwithſtanding theſe high provocations, his Majeſty ſhewed his inclination and diſpoſition to an amicable accommodation; and, with this view, it was intimated to the Courts of Vienna and Madrid, that, if the Emperor would remove the Oſtend Company to Trieſte, or any other place in his Dominions, which did not heretofore belong to the Spaniſh Monarchy, Great-Britain would quietly acquieſce. But inſtead of accepting this propoſal, thoſe two Courts not only ſeemed reſolved to ſupport the Oſtend trade, but Spain, in the memorial lately preſented by the Marquiſs de Pozzobueno, inſiſted on the ſpeedy reſtitution of Gibraltar, by virtue of a pretended poſitive promiſe, that exiſts no where; which put his Majeſty and the whole Nation under the neceſſity of a vigorous ſelf-defence.'

1726-27.

After theſe and ſeveral other ſpeeches, particularly by the Lord Bingley, who was anſwered by the Lord Carteret, it was reſolved (by 98 againſt 25) 'That it fully appears to this Committee, upon conſideration of his Majeſty's ſpeech, and the letters and memorials laid before the Houſe, by his Majeſty's order, That the meaſures, his Majeſty has thought fit to take, were honourable, juſt, and neceſſary, for preventing the execution of the dangerous engagements, entered into in favour of the Pretender; for preſerving the Dominions belonging to the Crown of Great-Britain, by ſolemn treaties, and, particularly, thoſe of Gibraltar, and the Iſland of Minorca; and for maintaining to his people their moſt valuable rights and privileges of commerce, and the peace and tranquillity of Europe.'

Againſt this reſolution, a proteſt was entered by ſeventeen Lords; and the Lord Lechmere moved for an addreſs to the King, 'to make new and preſſing inſtances with his Pruſſian Majeſty, and his other Allies, in ſuch manner as the preſent critical and dangerous juncture requires.' But this motion was rejected, which occaſioned another proteſt.

Proceedings of the Commons.

Mean time the Commons addreſſed the King for the acceſſion of the States to the treaty of Hanover, and for copies of the memorials, letters, anſwers between the Britiſh Miniſters and the Courts of Vienna and Madrid. Some puſhed matters farther, and moved for a copy of the memorial preſented by Mr. Pointz to the King of Sweden, the 4th of June 1726, and alſo for the ſecret offenſive article between the Emperor and the King of Spain, but both theſe motions were rejected. As the Court of Spain had perſiſted in the reſtitution of Gibraltar, purſuant to a promiſe made to that purpoſe, it was moved for an addreſs for the declaration, letters, or engagements, which, in the Marquiſs de Pozzoboeno's letter to the Duke of Newcaſtle, of the 21ſt of December laſt, is aſſerted to be a poſitive promiſe (1). This motion was ſupported

(1) The paragraph in the letter relating to Gibraltar was as follows:

'But as to what was then declared to Mr. Stanhope by word of mouth, and in writing, that the good correſpondence and friendſhip with England depended abſolutely on the ſpeedy reſtitution of Gibraltar; I cannot avoid confirming it anew to your Excellency, by order from the King my Maſter, as a declaration moſt juſtly founded, inſiſting on that reſtitution, after the King of Great-Britain, had on this point given, as he did give, a poſitive promiſe; beſides that, on the other hand, the Ceſſion, which his Majeſty made precedently of that place, is become null, becauſe of the infractions made in the conditions on which it was permitted that the Engliſh garriſon ſhould remain in poſſeſſion of Gibraltar; ſeeing that, contrary to all the proteſtations made, they have not only extended their fortifications, by exceeding the limits preſcribed and ſtipulated, but what is more, contrary to the expreſs and literal tenor of the treaties, they receive and admit the Jews and Moors, in the ſame manner as the Spaniards, and other Nations confounded and mixed, contrary to our Holy Religion;

1726-27. ported by Mr. Pulteney, and oppoſed by Sir Robert Walpole, who did not diſown, 'That ſuch a promiſe might indeed have been made in a former Adminiſtration: But this he was ſure of, that, if there was ſuch a promiſe, it was upon certain conditions, which not having been performed within the limited time, it was thereby become invalid: And as for the declaration, or letter, the communication of which was inſiſted on, the ſame was altogether impracticable and unprecedented, the private letters of Princes being almoſt as ſacred as their very perſons.' After a debate, this motion was alſo rejected by a majority of 204 againſt 97. After this, the Lord Morpeth moved 'for an addreſs for copies of all ſuch memorials or repreſentations to his Majeſty from the Crowns of Sweden and Denmark, as did induce him to ſend the ſquadron the laſt year into the Baltic.' This motion was oppoſed by Mr. Horace Walpole, who, in a long ſpeech, juſtified all the ſteps that had been taken by Great-Britain, ſince his Majeſty's Acceſſion (particularly from the opening of the Congreſs at Cambray) to preſerve the balance of power, the peace of Europe, and the tranquillity of the North; and with this laſt view to prevent the Czarina's deſigns againſt Sweden and Denmark, in favour of the Duke of Holſtein. Mr. William Pulteney anſwered this ſpeech; but, the queſtion being put upon the Lord Morpeth's motion, it paſſed in the negative by a majority of 196 voices againſt 79.

In the account how the money given for the ſervice of the laſt year was diſpoſed of, there was an article of the ſum of 125,000 l. charged in general terms, as iſſued out for other engagements and expences, over and above ſuch as were therein ſpecified. Upon this it was reſolved to addreſs the King for an account of the diſpoſition of that money; in anſwer to which the Houſe was told, 'That the ſum mentioned in the addreſs was iſſued and diſburſed, purſuant to the power given to his Majeſty by Parliament, for neceſſary ſervices and engagements, of the utmoſt importance to the trade and navigation of this Kingdom, and the tranquillity of Europe; and which require the greateſt ſecrecy; and therefore a particular account of the diſtribution of it cannot poſſibly be given, without a manifeſt prejudice to the Public.'

Mr. Pulteney, not ſatisfied with this anſwer, 1726 ſaid, 'That, when the Commons, in the laſt Seſſion, reſolved to make good all ſuch expences, as ſhould be for the ſecurity of trade and navigation, and for the preſervation of the peace of Europe, they did not diveſt themſelves of their undoubted right of being acquainted with the diſpoſition of public money: That, if they gave up ſo eſſential a right, that Houſe would become altogether uſeleſs, or ſerve only blindly to approve of and regiſter the acts and deeds of the Miniſters: That he did not, in the leaſt, doubt the diſburſement of the 125,000 l. for neceſſary ſervices: But that, if they were ſatisfied with ſuch a general account, the ſame might, in future Reigns, prove a very dangerous precedent, and ſerve to cover embezzlements of the public treaſure.' Then he moved for a further addreſs for an account of that ſum. But the queſtion was carried againſt addreſſing, by 235 againſt 110; and, inſtead of it, it was reſolved without a diviſion, 'That an humble addreſs be preſented to his Majeſty, to return his Majeſty the thanks of this Houſe, for his great care and wiſdom, in taking ſuch ſteps, and entering into ſuch engagements, as his Majeſty thought would beſt conduce to the ſecuring of the trade and navigation of this Kingdom, and to the preſervation of the peace of Europe; and to aſſure his Majeſty, that this Houſe, placing an intire confidence in his Majeſty's goodneſs and regard for the true intereſt of his people, will ſtand by and ſupport his Majeſty in all ſuch further meaſures, as his Majeſty ſhall find neceſſary and expedient for preventing a rupture, for the honour and advantage of theſe Kingdoms.'

The King's ſpeech was examined in other places Pa as well as in the Parliament. The Court of ma Vienna took great offence, and paſſed ſevere cenſures upon it. The Imperial Reſident at London was ordered to preſent a bold memorial to the King, and afterwards to publiſh it to the whole Nation, as an appeal to the People againſt their Sovereign. With it was publiſhed Count Zinzendorff's letter to Palms, which was ſtill more injurious than the memorial (1).

The King had the ſatisfaction to ſee this me- cen morial highly reſented by the Parliament. Both Par Houſes joined in an addreſs, expreſſing their in- mo dignation

---

Religion; not to mention the frauds and continual contrabands which are carried on there, to the prejudice of his Majeſty's revenues.'

(1) The memorial was as follows:

Moſt Serene and Potent King,

'As ſoon as the ſpeech, made by your Majeſty to the Parliament of Great-Britain now aſſembled, came to the knowledge of his Imperial and Catholic Majeſty, my moſt gracious Maſter; he was ſtruck with the utmoſt aſtoniſhment, that your Majeſty could ſuffer yourſelf to be prevailed upon to declare from the Royal Throne, to that moſt renowned Nation, in a manner hitherto unheard of, as certain and undoubted facts, ſeveral things, ſome of which are ſtrained in that ſpeech to a wrong ſenſe, ſome are intirely diſtant from the intentions of his Imperial and Catholic Majeſty; and laſtly (which affect much more ſenſibly than all the reſt) ſome things abſolutely void of all foundation.

For as to what regards the peace, concluded at Vienna, with the moſt ſerene King of Spain, who can forbear being aſtoniſhed, that this very peace, which is built on the Quadruple Alliance, ſigned at London, and other treaties contracted with your Majeſty, as its ſolid and ſole foundation; and, for the obtaining of which peace, your Majeſty, together with your Allies, waged ſo bloody, ſo long, and ſo glorious a war, and took yourſelf ſo much pains to procure, ſhould now be alledged by your Majeſty as a juſt ground of complaint, and ſhould be made uſe of as a pretence for theſe things, which hitherto your Miniſters have been doing in all parts, to the great detriment of the Emperor and the Empire, and the public tranquillity, and ſhould be repreſented by your Majeſty to the Britiſh Nation, with ſo much animoſity againſt the Emperor and King of Spain, as a violation of treaties.

After complaining of the peace made at Vienna, complaint is likewiſe made of the treaty of commerce entered into with Spain, which is calculated to promote the mutual and lawful advantages of the ſubjects of both parties, which is agreeable to the law of Nations, and to the cuſtoms of all people in amity with each other; which can in no reſpect be of any prejudice to the Bri-
tiſh

dignation at the affront offered to his Majeſty, by the memorial of Mr. Palms, and at his inſolence in diſperſing the ſame throughout the Kingdom: Aſſuring, that this audacious manner of appealing to the people, and turning a memorial into a ſeditious libel, was a proceeding that created in them the utmoſt abhorrence and deteſtation.

'The endeavouring (ſays the Addreſs) to inſtil into the minds of any of your faithful ſubjects the leaſt diſtruſt or diffidence in your Majeſty's moſt ſacred Royal word, or to make a diſtinction betwen your Majeſty and your People, is an attempt as vain as preſumptuous. If time has not effaced the memory of the glorious exploits, and important ſuccours (confeſſed to have been received from Great-Britain) gratitude, affection and eſteem for this Nation, will be beſt manifeſted, by doing honour to the King, whom the People honour, and juſtice to the People, whoſe rights and privileges the beſt of Kings is now defending, againſt the invaſions and incroachments made upon them.' Beſides this addreſs, the Lord Townſhend ſent a letter in the King's name to the Emperor's Reſident, ordering him forthwith to depart the Kingdom.

About the ſame time Monſieur de Chavigny, the French Miniſter at the General Diet of Ratisbon, preſented a declaration to the Diet, affirming that the preparations, which were making in France, were only for the preſervation of peace: That the guarantee of the treaty of Munſter, in favour of the States, did not any way concern the Germanic body: That, far from deſigning to invade the territories of Germany, the King of France on the contrary would exert himſelf to preſerve their rights and privileges: That the report, as if his Ambaſſador at the Port had ſollicited the Turks to come to reſolutions againſt the peace of the Empire, was a calumny: That he would faithfully obſerve the treaty of Weſtphalia: And hoped for a ſuitable return by the like ſentiments and diſpoſitions.

The Imperial Commiſſioners at the Diet were highly offended at this declaration, which was not regiſtered according to cuſtom, and they publiſhed a few days after an Imperial decree, full of invectives againſt the ſteps taken by the Courts of Great-Britain and France, particularly againſt his Britannic Majeſty's ſpeech to his Parliament. Mr. Le Heup, the Britiſh Miniſter at Ratiſbon, delivered the next day to the Diet a declaration of the ſame import with Chavigny's, which raiſed a great ferment among the Imperialiſts, who loudly complained, 'That this ſecond declaration was manifeſtly intended as a perſonal inſult to his Imperial Majeſty, ſince it was preſented in open defiance of his decree againſt the firſt.' But to this it was anſwered, in behalf of the Britiſh Miniſter, 'That he was not to take any public notice of his Imperial Majeſty's decree; and that ſuch decrees, in what form or ſtile ſoever, cannot divert or interrupt foreign Miniſters in the exerciſe of their functions, directed to the States of the Empire, and not to the Emperor; nor in the execution of the orders they may, at any time, receive from their reſpective Maſters.' The Imperial Miniſters at Ratiſbon made alſo a terrible outcry againſt an expreſſion in the Engliſh and French Envoys memorials, wherein they call the charge againſt the Kings their Maſters, as if they had endeavoured to excite the Ottoman Port againſt the Emperor, by no ſofter a name than that of Calumny; which was ſo warmly reſented, that the Imperialiſts gave out, There could be no reconciliation between the Emperor and the King of Great-Britain, till ſatisfaction was made for that affront. 1726-27.

Sweden accedes to the treaty of Hanover.

The King at this time had the ſatisfaction of hearing the King of Sweden's Acceſſion to the treaty of Hanover. This Acceſſion was ſigned the 14th of March, at Stockholm. The King of Sweden was to furniſh, when the caſe of the Alliance ſhould happen, three thouſand foot and two thouſand horſe: His guarantee was not to reach beyond the limits of Europe: The ſtipulated troops were not to be employed in Italy or Spain: His engagement was only with Great-Britain and France. The main point was the ſecret article, by virtue of which the two Kings to ſhew their friendſhip to his Swediſh Majeſty, were tiſh Nation, whether we regard the ſituation of the Countries, or the particular nature of the trade, and which is not in the leaſt repugnant to the treaties made with Great-Britain. So that, if this treaty be conſidered with a mind free from prejudice, and from all deſign of inflaming the Nation, there will remain no pretence to ſay, that this treaty can be grievous or hurtful to a Nation for which his Imperial Majeſty has the greateſt affection and eſteem, and whoſe glorious exploits and important ſuccours no time will efface out of his memory.

---

The other head of complaint, which contains ſuch things as are void of all foundation, relates principally to that imaginary Alliance, which in the ſpeech is called offenſive, and is there ſuppoſed to have been made againſt your Majeſty, between the Emperor and King of Spain. But it will not only appear how groundleſs and frivolous this ſuppoſition is, from the offer lately made by his Imperial and Catholic Majeſty, of entering into a Convention, De ſe mutuo non Offendendo, but will be entirely refuted by the conſideration of the tenor of the treaty of Alliance and Friendſhip itſelf made with the Crown of Spain, and communicated in its whole extent to your Majeſty when it was proper; from the words of which, whether the leaſt ſhadow or appearance of an offenſive Alliance can be drawn, is ſubmitted to the judgment of the whole world.

Another part of the complaint relates to the ſecret articles made in favour of the Pretender, whereof your Majeſty aſſerts that you have certain and undoubted informations, by which articles it ſhould have been agreed to ſet the Pretender on the Throne of Great-Britain. With what view, on what motive, and to what purpoſe, theſe informations, founded on the falſeſt reports, were repreſented to the people of Great-Britain, is not only eaſy to be underſtood by his Imperial and Catholic Majeſty, but is obvious to the meaneſt capacity. But ſince the inviolable dignity and honour of ſuch great Princes cannot ſuffer, that aſſertions of this nature, intirely unſupported by truth, ſhould be advanced from the Royal Throne to the whole Nation, and to all Mankind; his ſacred Imperial and Catholic Majeſty has expreſsly commanded me, that I ſhould declare to your Majeſty, and to the whole Kingdom of Great-Britain, how highly he thinks himſelf affronted thereby, ſolemnly affirming, upon his Imperial word, that there exiſts no ſecret article nor convention whatſoever, which contains, or can tend to prove the leaſt tittle of what has been alledged.

But that the ſecret deſigns, which lie concealed under a conduct till this time unheard of, may more manifeſtly appear, it muſt be obſerved, that the time is purpoſely taken for doing this, when a Negotiation is on foot at Paris, for compoſing the differences which 1726-27. were to pay at Hamburgh, Amſterdam, or London, as Sweden ſhould direct, the ſum of 50,900 l. ſterling for three years, or the value thereof, according to the Exchange, in half-yearly payments. In return for this mark of their friendſhip, the King of Sweden was to hold in readineſs another body of 7,000 foot, and 3,000 horſe, to be employed where the caſes of the Alliance ſhould render it neceſſary. Provided however, that, when their Britannic and moſt Chriſtian Majeſties ſhould require the ſervice of theſe 10,000 men, they ſhould be in their pay, and liable to be recalled when Sweden ſhould be in any real or imminent danger.

Treaty with Denmark.

The King of Denmark did not accede in form to the treaty of Hanover, but ſigned an Alliance the 16th of April. The King of Denmark promiſed to keep on foot 24,000 men, ready to march upon the firſt advice of the motion of the Muſcovites, or of any other troops that ſhould come to attack Sleſwick, and diſturb the peace of Lower Saxony: The French King promiſed to pay to his Daniſh Majeſty 350,000 Rix-dollars for four years, payable quarterly at Hamburgh. As ſoon as the Daniſh army ſhould march, the King of France was to take 12,000 men into his pay: His Britannic Majeſty was to hold in readineſs 12,000 men to join the 24,000 Danes, when they began to march, and to ſend a ſquadron of ſhips to cover the Daniſh coaſts upon the firſt advice of the motions of the Muſcovite fleet. The French King was to hold in readineſs at leaſt 30,000 men to march or make diverſions where it ſhould be needful, and his Britannic Majeſty engaged to have likewiſe in readineſs another body of at leaſt 12,000 men for the ſame purpoſes. If the King of Pruſſia ſhould be attacked for refuſing paſſage to the Muſcovites, the contracting Kings were to join their armies in his defence. By the ſecret articles, the King of Denmark was not to diſpoſe of any troops contrary to the intereſt of the two Kings. If the French King ſhould deſire to employ the 12,000 men in his pay, for affairs not relating to Denmark, but only to his own ſervice, or that of the treaty of Hanover, in ſuch caſes they ſhould be allowed for the ſervice of his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty. As the Muſcovites, in order to trouble the peace of the Empire, muſt penetrate through Poland, his Poliſh Majeſty was to be acquainted with the meaſures taken to hinder their coming into the Empire, and invited to ſtop the paſſes the Muſcovites would take in his territories.

Convention with Heſſe Caſſel.

A Convention had likewiſe been made the laſt year with the Prince of Heſſe, by which he was to hold in readineſs, for the ſervice of Great-Britain, eight thouſand foot and four thouſand horſe. He was to maintain theſe troops at his own charge for two years. As the Landgrave had not ſo many troops on foot, and was to be at a great expence in levying what was wanted, as well as in remounting the cavalry, the King promiſed to pay him 75,000 l. ſterling after the ratification of the Convention, and 50,000 l. in the February following, or before, in caſe the troops ſhould be required. For the ſubſidies, pay, and ſubſiſtance of theſe forces, when they ſhould ſerve, they were to be ſettled according to the treaty made at London in 1725. France came not into this treaty, ſo the whole expence fell upon England.

As theſe treaties were very expenſive, an opportunity was taken, when the Commons were debating, on the malt-bill, to have it moved by Mr. Scroope, Secretary of the Treaſury, 'That a clauſe of appropriation ſhould be received, impowering the King to apply ſuch ſums as ſhould be neceſſary for defraying the expences and engagements as had been, or ſhould be made before the 25th of December next, in concerting ſuch meaſures as he ſhould think moſt conducive to the ſecurity of trade and navigation, and reſtoring the peace of Europe.' Upon this aroſe a very long and warm debate. It was ſaid, in ſupport of the motion, 'That his Majeſty was ſo unwilling to put his ſubjects to any extraordinary expences, that he had demanded no more Supplies this Seſſion, than what he thought abſolutely neceſſary for the ſervice of the year: But, in the preſent poſture of affairs, ſome unforeſeen accidents might require a further expence, for which no eſtimate could now be made, becauſe ſome treaties, his Majeſty thought fit to enter into, were not yet finiſhed. Therefore they ought to enable him to anſwer ſuch contingencies. That the Houſe had ſeveral times repoſed the ſame confidence in him, which he had never abuſed: And what was now aſked was only for a ſhort time.' On the other hand it was urged, 'That the asking and granting Supplies without an eſtimate was unparliamentary: That the clauſe moved for was inconſiſtent with that part of the bill, which forbids the iſſuing of the Supplies thereby granted to any other purpoſes than thoſe ſpecified, and rendered ineffectual that appropriation of the public money, which the wiſdom of all Parliaments had thought a neceſſary ſecurity againſt the miſapplication of it: Which was the more to be feared, becauſe no proviſion was made to oblige any perſon have ariſen without any fault of his Imperial and Catholic Majeſty; which Negotiation ſufficiently ſhews how much his Imperial and Catholic Majeſty is at all times inclined to peace, and to the religious obſervation of his treaties.

---

As to what is ſaid of Gibraltar, and concerning the ſiege thereof, under which in the ſpeech it is inſinuated, as if ſome other deſign was concealed; the hoſtilities notoriouſly committed in the Indies, and elſewhere, againſt the King of Spain, in violation of treaties, ſeem to have given a very juſt occaſion to the King of Spain, for attempting that ſiege. But, as to the intentions and engagements of the Emperor upon that article, it is eaſy to ſee what they are, by the treaty abovementioned, which has been communicated.

As to what is ſaid in the laſt place, concerning the Oſtend trade, which the goodneſs of the Catholic King induced him to favour (being bound by no treaty) after he had been apprized of the juſt reaſons for the eſtabliſhment of it, various expedients for a compoſition have been propoſed, not only at the Hague, but even lately at Paris, leſt this harmleſs method of providing for the ſecurity of the barrier ſhould prove an obſtacle to the common friendſhip of neighbouring powers.

Which things being thus, the injury offered to truth, the honour and dignity of his ſacred Imperial and Catholic Majeſty require, that they ſhould be expoſed to your Majeſty, to the Kingdom of Great-Britain, and to the whole World. And his ſacred Imperial Majeſty demands that reparation which is due to him by all manner of right, for the great injuries which have been done him by theſe many imputations.'

In the Collection of Jacob Tonson Esq^r.

J. Houbraken sculps. Amst. 1748.

Impensis J. & P. Knapton Londini 1748.

BRITISH MUSEUM

perſon to account for any money, that ſhall be diſpoſed of, by virtue of the power in this clauſe. That vaſt ſums had already been granted, which appeared ſufficient to anſwer any occaſions, as far as their preſent views could reach; and, if any unexpected emergency ſhould demand a further Supply, that might be provided for in the uſual manner, when neceſſity required. That this might be done with leſs inconvenience, and with leſs danger of miſapplication, than by ſuch a delegation of almoſt a dictatorial authority to the Miniſters. That this Parliament had already given ſo many inſtances of their zeal and affection for his Majeſty, that there could be no room to doubt of their readineſs to make good whatever he ſhould expend in concerting ſuch meaſures, as he ſhould think moſt conducive to the advantage and intereſt of his people. That ſuch an unlimited and abſolute power ought never to be given in a free Government, but upon occaſions of evident neceſſity, when the very being of the Government is in imminent danger. That the repoſing a confidence in the Crown in the diſpoſition of ſuch immenſe ſums of money, as by the advice of unthrifty Miniſters may be expended, might be attended with great prejudice to the properties of the Subjects, and great danger to our moſt excellent Conſtitution, which cannot be preſerved but by a ſtrict adherence to thoſe eſſential Parliamentary forms of granting Supplies only upon eſtimates, and of appropriating the ſame to ſervices and occaſions publicly avowed and judged neceſſary. That the departing from theſe excellent methods would by degrees render Parliaments altogether uſeleſs. That the precedents alledged to juſtify this clauſe were far from being full to the point, and ſatisfactory; and, if they were, ought not to be followed, leſt clauſes of the ſame nature might become ſo frequent, as in time to lodge in the Crown, and in the Miniſters, an abſolute and uncontroulable power of raiſing money upon the people, which by our wiſe Conſtitution is, and with ſafety can only be, lodged in the whole Legiſlature.' The debate being ended, Mr. Scroope's motion was carried by a majority of 225 againſt 109; and the clauſe was added to the malt-bill; which, being ſent up to the Lords, occaſioned the like debate there as in the Houſe of Commons, but was at laſt carried by a majority of 76 againſt 20 (1). 1727.

Motion for raiſing part of the Supply in the coal-tax.

Two days after it was moved by Sir William Yonge, 'That, towards the Supply granted to the King, the ſum of 370,000 l. ſhould be raiſed by loans on Exchequer bills, to be charged on the ſurplus of the duties on coal and culm, which was reſerved for the diſpoſition of the Parliament.' This motion was ſtrenuouſly oppoſed, and particularly by Mr. Pulteney and Sir Joſeph Jekyll. They objected, 'That, by ſeveral votes and acts of Parliament, all the exceedings or ſurpluſes of public funds were to be applied towards the leſſening of the public debts, or to the increaſe of the ſinking fund. That this diſpoſition could not be altered without wounding public credit, which was already extreme low, ſince the taking off any part of the mortgage could not but leſſen the ſecurity of the debt. That it was ſomewhat ſtrange, ſuch a motion ſhould be made by thoſe very perſons, who had the honour of being in the Adminiſtration, who could not have forgot, what his Majeſty had ſo ſtrongly recommended from the Throne, at the opening of this Seſſion, That the produce of the ſinking fund might be immediately applied to the uſes, for which it was ſo wiſely contrived, and to which it now ſtands appropriated. And that this motion was ſtill the more ſurpriſing, after the large vote of credit, the Houſe had ſo lately come to.' To all this it was anſwered, That the ſurpluſes in coals could not be deemed a part of the ſinking fund, ſince they had never been appropriated, but were reſerved for the diſpoſition of Parliament. Upon which the motion was carried by a majority of 209 againſt 82 (2).

On

---

(1) It may here be obſerved, that theſe clauſes of appropriation have been by ſome late Writers confounded with votes of credit, which are of a very different nature. Votes of credit were frequent in King William's firſt war, and when, at the beginning of a Seſſion, money was wanting, for providing for the ſervices of the next year, before the Supplies were granted, or any money-bills could paſs, the Commons came to votes that gave the Crown a power to borrow money to a certain ſum, and at a certain rate, to be repaid out of the firſt Supplies to be granted that Seſſion: Theſe were properly votes of credit, upon which money was advanced before the Supplies were granted or raiſed by act of Parliament.

But a clauſe of appropriation is not a power given to borrow or raiſe money by a vote of the Houſe of Commons, but a power given, by authority of the Legiſlature, and by act of Parliament, to apply or diſpoſe of ſome part of the Supplies (raiſed by law) to particular uſes or ſervices, not ſpecified in the eſtimates or reſolutions of Supplies, at the diſcretion of the Crown, upon future emergencies, or ſuch ſervices, as, by the nature of them, cannot properly, or without danger of rendering them ineffectual, be explained or laid before a Houſe of Commons.

There are many inſtances of this method of granting money; particularly in the year 1706, a latitude is given in the clauſe of appropriation of the Supplies of that year, 'to pay ſums due upon treaties made or to be made, and other charges of the war, for any time before or till the 25th of December 1706, which method was continued ſeveral years ſucceſſively.'

This is a method, no doubt, that ought not to be wantonly or frequently practiſed. The grounds and foundation, upon which ſuch a confidence ſhould be allowed, ought to ariſe from a ſuppoſition, that ſervices may occur that are unforeſeen, and therefore could not be provided for; that opportunities may offer which may be unexpected and ſudden, but very eſſential and deciſive; that there are ſervices, which, by the nature of them, muſt be kept ſecret, becauſe, by being divulged, they would be diſappointed; and that there are ſervices which equally require the greateſt ſecrecy, from the circumſtances and ſituation of the perſons with whom you tranſact, and this ſecrecy muſt equally extend to future times, as well as preceding times. There are, for inſtance, Princes, whoſe ſituation will not permit them to enter at once into offenſive engagements, till a ſafe opportunity ſhall preſent, who will, in the mean time, be induced to accept private ſubſidies and ſupplies, to put themſelves in a condition to declare, when called upon.

(2) As the affair of the coal-tax has been miſunderſtood and miſrepreſented, it may not be improper to put it in a clear light. In order to this it muſt be obſerved, that the ſinking fund conſiſts of the ſurpluſes of the aggregate fund, the South-Sea fund, and the general fund, and of theſe only *. In the act of 1 Geo. I. which eſtabliſhes the aggregate fund, it is enacted, 'That all other public monies which after Michaelmas, 1715, ſhall

* See p. 535, 536.

1727. On the 15th of May, the King put an end to the Seſſion, with this his laſt ſpeech to both Houſes:

My Lords and Gentlemen,

" I Acquainted you, at the opening of this " Seſſion, with the dangers which threaten- " ed this Kingdom, and the peace and liberties " of Europe. I am now to return you my " thanks for the zeal and diſpatch, with which " you have proceeded upon the ſeveral points " I then recommended to your care; for the " confidence you have repoſed in me; and for " the aſſurances you have given me of your " ſupport and aſſiſtance, in vindication of my " honour, and in the maintenance and defence " of the undoubted rights and privileges of " this Nation, ſo openly and notoriouſly in- " vaded and attacked.

" The ſiege of Gibraltar proves, beyond all " diſpute, the end and deſign of the engage- " ments entered into by the Emperor and the " King of Spain; but the preparations I had " made for the defence of that place, and the " bravery of my troops, will, I doubt not, " convince them of the raſhneſs and folly of " that undertaking. However, the love of " peace has hitherto prevailed upon me, even " under this high provocation, to ſuſpend, in " ſome meaſure, my reſentments; and, inſtead " of having immediate recourſe to arms, and " demanding of my Allies that aſſiſtance, which " they are engaged and ready to give me, I " have concurred with the moſt Chriſtian King " and the States-General, in making ſuch over- " tures of accommodation, as muſt convince all " the world of the uprightneſs of our intenti- " ons, and of our ſincere diſpoſition to peace, " and demonſtrate to whoſe ambition and thirſt " of power the calamities of a war are to be 17 " imputed, if theſe juſt and reaſonable propoſi- " tions are rejected. In the mean time, I have " the pleaſure to acquaint you, that the Crown " of Sweden has acceded to the treaty of Ha- " nover, and that the Convention between Me, " his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty, and the King of " Denmark, is actually ſigned.

Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons,

" The vigour and chearfulneſs you have " ſhewn in raiſing ſo effectually, and upon ſuch " eaſy terms, the neceſſary Supplies for the " ſervice of the current year, are not only in- " ſtances of your zeal and affection to me, but " demonſtrate the eſtabliſhed credit, power, and " ſtrength of this Kingdom.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

" It would have been a great ſatisfaction to " me, if, before your ſeparation, I had been able " to ſpeak to you more poſitively, and with " greater certainty, upon the preſent poſture and " ſtate of affairs. But, as you have now diſ- " patched the public buſineſs, and as the ſeaſon " of the year requires your going into your re- " ſpective Countries, I chuſe rather to put an " end to this Seſſion, than to keep you any " longer together unneceſſarily. The provi- " ſions you have made, and the perfect union " and harmony between Me and my Allies, " will, I hope, enable me, by the Divine Aſ- " ſiſtance, either to withſtand and defeat the " deſigns of our enemies, if their conduct ſhall " bring upon us the neceſſity of a war; or to " improve the bleſſings of peace, if peace can, " with juſtice, honour, and ſecurity, be ob- " tained."

By

ſhall come into the Exchequer, not being appropriated or appointed to any uſe by any act of Parliament made, or to be made, ſhall be ſet apart and applied to, and for the uſes by the preſent act declared, as likewiſe the overplus monies of the yearly ſum of 700,000 l. per ann. eſtabliſhed for the King's Civil Liſt. By virtue of theſe clauſes, the ſurplus of the Civil Liſt revenues, and all public monies remaining in the Exchequer, not appropriated by any act made, or to be made, were part of the aggregate fund; but, as they were left to be appropriated by any acts to be made, as well as made, and any ſurplus, at that time ariſing from the aggregate fund, was made diſpoſeable for the public uſe by Parliament, it is evident that any public debts and revenues which were not in themſelves part of any of the three capital funds, the ſurpluſes whereof conſtitute the ſinking fund, as they might be carried to the ſinking fund, as long as they remained unappropriated, ſo they might be diſpoſed of to any other uſe or ſervice by authority of Parliament. Now it will appear, upon examination, that the coal-duty made no part of the ſinking fund. By the 9th of Queen Anne, the coal-duty was granted from Sept. 28, 1716, to Sept. 28, 1724, and made a fund for building fifty new Churches, &c. By 1 George I, the duty is continued for another year, to provide for the Miniſters of the fifty new Churches. By 5 George I, the duty is farther continued, and a fund of 21,000 l. is granted for thirty-two years, for raiſing 360,000 l. for building Churches, &c. with an an intereſt of 4 l. per cent; and another fund of 30,559 l. was created, for raiſing 500,000 l. by a lottery; and the further ſum of 21,325 l. was applied, for compleating the Supplies granted that Seſſion. It is there enacted, 'That all the ſurplus-money of the coal-duty, which ſhould, at the end of any quarter, remain, during the ſaid thirty-two years, after the aforeſaid ſum ſhould be diſcharged, ſhould be reſerved for the diſpoſition of Parliament, and ſhould not be diſpoſed of to any uſe, but by authority of Parliament, and according to ſuch future acts, as ſhould be paſſed for that purpoſe.' This then was the ſtate of the coal-duty in the year 1719: It was charged with two funds of 21,000 l. per annum, and 30,559 l. 14 s. per annum, when the produce of it was eſtimated at 70,000 l. per annum, which made a proviſion for the diſpoſing the ſurplus neceſſary. This tranſaction was in 1719: The ſinking fund was eſtabliſhed in 1716; but, if it had been the ſenſe of the Parliament, that the coal-duty, or any ſurplus of it, had belonged to the ſinking fund, the proviſion for the diſpoſition of the ſurplus had been unneceſſary, or the direction, that is given by the act of Parliament, had been an invaſion of the ſinking fund; but we ſee in 1719 (in the infancy of the ſinking fund, when it wanted aſſiſtance) 521,325 l. taken out of the coal-duty for the ſervice of the year, and the ſurplus reſerved for the future diſpoſition of Parliament, which is an expreſs exception of this ſurplus out of the ſinking fund, becauſe, by the act eſtabliſhing the aggregate fund, this ſurplus might have been carried to that fund, and conſequently into the ſinking fund, which it is plain this reſtriction was purpoſely inſerted to prevent, and to leave it to the diſcretion of future Parliaments, to make ſuch uſe of this ſurplus, as they ſhould from time to time think moſt conducive to the public good. Thus Mr. Pulteney and Sir Joſeph Jekyll's objections, founded on the coal-duty's being part of the ſinking fund, and thoſe of others ſince, are entirely groundleſs.

(1) The

By this ſpeech it appears that, notwithſtanding the preparations for war, as well by the Allies of Hanover, as by thoſe of Vienna, overtures of accommodation had been made. All had declared, that the preſervation of the tranquillity of Europe was the end of their armaments. This the Court of Spain did, at the ſame time that the ſiege of Gibraltar was ordered. The Condé de las Torres, Captain-General of the King of Spain's forces in Andaluſia, opened the trenches before Gibraltar the 11th of February. He had an army of about twenty thouſand men, and was well provided with artillery of all ſorts, with ammunition, and warlike ſtores, proportioned to the ſtrength of the place, and the bravery of the garriſon, which the Spaniards expected would lengthen the ſiege. Colonel Clayton, Lieutenant-Governor of the place, had troops and neceſſaries ſufficient for defence, till Supplies could come from England, for which due preparations had been made. Upon the repeated advices, that the Spaniards were preparing for the ſiege of Gibraltar, ſix men of war, the Kent, Lenox, Berwick, Royal Oak, Portland, and Tyger, were fitted out with all expedition. With theſe ſhips, and three regiments, Newton's, Diſney's, and Anſtruther's, Sir Charles Wager ſailed in January. When the ſiege was begun, Colonel Stanhope, the Britiſh Ambaſſador in Spain, having received the paſſports, he had demanded of King Philip, ſet out from Madrid for Bayonne, in his way to England, having given the Britiſh Merchants in that Kingdom ſuch timely notice to take neceſſary precautions for ſecuring their effects, that, when orders came to the Spaniſh Governors to ſeize them, theſe Merchants ſuffered no conſiderable loſs by that ſeizure. In the beginning of March, Colonel Hayes's and Colonel Middleton's regiments of foot were put on board the tranſports at Portſmouth, and ſailed for Gibraltar, under convoy of the Torbay, Captain Haddock, and the Poole fireſhip, Colonel Clayton's regiment was about the ſame time, ordered to imbark in the river of Thames, and a draught of ten companies out of the firſt regiment of foot-guards was made by lot (1).

The Earl of Portmore, Governor of Gibraltar, notwithſtanding his advanced age, having been a Colonel near forty years, reſolved to repair to his Government, and embarked at Portſmouth, 1727. on board the Prince Frederick, appointed with the Falmouth (two ſeventy gun-ſhips) to convoy the tranſports, on which the detachment of the guards and Clayton's regiment were embarked. All theſe forces arrived at Gibraltar the beginning of April, as did likewiſe five hundred men from Minorca, who with the garriſon formed a body of ſix thouſand men, the greateſt part of whom incamped on the South point without the town, while the reſt did duty within, and were relieved from the camp. The beſiegers threw a great quantity of bombs into the place, which did the leſs damage, as moſt of the houſes were empty by the deſertion of the old inhabitants. The garriſon had ſtore of ſalt proviſions from England and Ireland, and of freſh from Barbary; for which purpoſe a frigate was ordered to be continually going to and from Tetuan and Tangier. Sir Charles Wager, having cauſed the ammunition and warlike ſtores, with twenty-four pieces of cannon, to be put on ſhore, ſailed from Gibraltar to cruize with the Torbay, Sterling-Caſtle, Burford, Kent, Royal Oak, Canterbury, York, and Poole fireſhip, leaving there the Tyger, Wincheſter, Lyme, Solebay bombſhip, Thunder bombſhip, Cruzier and Hawk ſloops; which were joined by the Portland and Durſley galley; the Colcheſter and Swallow being ordered to Port-Mahon to be cleaned. In this diſpoſition of defence the ſiege of Gibraltar gave little pain to the Engliſh, either at home or abroad; while the Spaniards, in the proſecution of it, for four months loſt above half their army by ſlaughter, ſickneſs, and deſertion.

Preparations againſt the Emperor.

About the ſame time the Court of Vienna having ſhewn a diſpoſition to begin the war in the Netherlands, by attacking the Dutch barrier, the King ordered an augmentation of thirty companies of foot, and that the ten thouſand auxiliaries, which England was obliged by treaty to ſend to the aſſiſtance of the States, ſhould hold themſelves in readineſs for embarkation (2).

A fleet to the Baltic.

As the King of Sweden had acceded to the treaty of Hanover, Sir John Norris was ſent with a conſiderable fleet to the Baltic, to ſupport him in this new Alliance, ſo diſagreeable to the Courts of Vienna and Ruſſia. The Engliſh being joined by a Daniſh ſquadron, the Ruſſian Court thought fit to put a ſtop to the equip-

---

(1) The lots fell on thoſe of

Colonel Price,
Colonel Haſtings,
Colonel Pearſon,
Colonel Meyrick,
Colonel Duncombe,
Colonel Inwood,
Colonel Treby,
Colonel Brown,
Colonel Oughton,
Colonel Williamſon.

The whole detachment to be under the command of Colonel Guiſe, Major in the ſaid regiment.

Of theſe, Colonel Treby reſigned his commiſſion, and was ſucceeded by Colonel Onſlow; Captain Stanhope, of the ſaid regiment, alſo laid down his commiſſion, and was ſucceeded in it by Mr. Parker.

(2) Of this number were Colonel Campbell's, Major General Gore's, Brigadier Churchill's, and Major-General Honeywood's Dragoons; and two Battalions of guards commanded by Colonel Robinſon, and Colonel Robinſon's, Colonel Kirke's, Colonel Harriſon's, Earl of Deloraine's, Sir James Wood's, Lord Tyrawley's, Colonel Pocock's, Colonel Murray's, and Colonel Grove's regiments of foot. This body of forces were to be commanded by the Earl of Orkney, Commander in chief, the Duke of Argyle, General of the foot, the Lord Cobham and the Earl of Stair, Lieutenants-General. The Earl of Deloraine and Philip Honeywood, Major-Generals; Sir James Wood, Colonel Pocock, Colonel Kirke, Colonel Kerr, and the Earl of Scarborough, Brigadiers-General.

1727. equipment of their fleet, which was no more talked of after the death of the Czarina, on the 17th of May, about the time of Sir John Norris's arrival in the Baltic.

Preliminary articles agreed on.

The Court of France, being equally concerned with England to prevent a war, augmented their troops, and formed incampments for the exerciſe of their militia. But, as the Hanover Alliance was only defenſive, it did not exclude France from a mediation, which tended to adjuſt all the differences of the ſeveral parties. Accordingly, his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty undertook that office, which was conducted by the Duke of Richlieu, his Ambaſſador at Vienna. The Duke, in concert with the Britiſh and Dutch Miniſters, drew up a project of accommodation, which was ſent to the Emperor and the King of Spain. This ſcheme conſiſted of eight articles, which were to ſerve as preliminaries for a general Congreſs. The Emperor did not think proper to reject it, but formed a counter-project, which he ſent to the Allies of Hanover. The Allies, judging it not ſatisfactory, formed their laſt reſolution, in which they declared, they could make no alteration. The Emperor, preſſed by the Duke of Richlieu, accepted at laſt of the ſcheme, conſiſting of the twelve following articles:

I. His Imperial and Catholic Majeſty having no other view, than to contribute to the public tranquillity of Europe, and obſerving, that the commerce of Oſtend has given birth to jealouſy and uneaſineſs, conſents, that there ſhall be a ſuſpenſion of the Charter of the Oſtend Company, and of all Traffic between the Auſtrian Netherlands and the Indies, during the term of ſeven years.

II. All rights or poſſeſſions ſhall remain intire to ſuch of the contracting powers, as enjoyed them by virtue of the treaties of Utrecht, Baden, and the Quadruple Alliance, or the treaties and Conventions made before the year 1725, which regard neither the Emperor nor the States-General. But if any change has been made with relation to the ſaid poſſeſſions; or if, in conſequence of thoſe Conventions, ſomewhat has not been executed, the change, that has happened, or the points, which have not been executed, ſhall be diſcuſſed and decided in the future Congreſs, according to the tenor of the Treaties and Conventions.

III. Conſequently all the privileges of commerce in Europe, Spain, and the Indies, grounded upon treaties, and formerly enjoyed by the Engliſh and French Nations, and by the Subjects of the States-General, ſhall be reſtored upon the ſame foot, and ſettled in the ſame manner they were, particularly by the treaties preceding the year 1725.

IV. The powers of the North ſhall be invited and deſired by their reſpective Allies, not to have recourſe to hoſtilities; but, on the contrary, to embrace all reaſonable methods of accommodation; and that, until the opening of the Congreſs hereafter mentioned, wherein all the reſpective differences ſhall be diſcuſſed, the contracting powers ſhall not contribute to any hoſtilities directly or indirectly, under any colour or pretence whatever, which may diſturb the preſent ſtate of affairs in the North; but, on the contrary, they ſhall engage to act in concert, to put an end to hoſtilities, if any ſhould be commenced.

V. All hoſtilities whatſoever, if any ſhould happen, ſhall inſtantly ceaſe after the ſigning of the preſent articles; and with reſpect to Spain, eight days after his Catholic Majeſty ſhall have received the articles ſigned. The ſhips, which ſailed from Oſtend to the Indies before this Convention, the names whereof ſhall be given in a liſt on the part of his Imperial Majeſty, may return freely and ſafely from the Indies to Oſtend; and, if any of theſe ſhips be detained or taken, they ſhall be reſtored bona fide, with their cargoes. The galleons alſo ſhall be permitted to return to Spain unmoleſted, in firm confidence, that his Catholic Majeſty will, with regard to the effects on board the galleons and the flotilla, deal in the ſame manner as uſual in all times of liberty. In conſequence of this, the Engliſh ſquadron, commanded by Admiral Hoſier, ſhall depart as ſoon as poſſible from Porto-Bello, and all other ports of America belonging to the King of Spain: He ſhall even return with his ſquadron into Europe, that the ſubjects of his Catholic Majeſty in the Indies may be free from all further apprehenſions and uneaſineſs. The commerce of the Engliſh in America ſhall be carried on as formerly, according to the treaties. Moreover, the Engliſh, French, and Dutch ſquadrons, which may appear upon the coaſts of Spain, or on thoſe of the States of his Imperial Majeſty, at the time when this preſent ceſſation of hoſtilities commence, ſhall depart thence as ſoon as poſſible, that the inhabitants of thoſe coaſts may henceforth be rid of all diſturbance and fear. Neither ſhall thoſe ſhips be permitted to undertake any thing directly or indirectly againſt the ſaid Port.

VI. This ceſſation of hoſtilities ſhall continue as long as the ſuſpenſion of the Charter granted to the Oſtend Company, viz. ſeven years, that the jarring intereſts may be reconciled in that time, and peace ſettled on a more firm foundation.

VII. If, after the ſigning of theſe preliminaries, any troubles or hoſtilities ſhould happen between the ſubjects of the contracting powers, whether in Europe or the Indies, under what pretence ſoever it may be, they ſhall join together to get reparation of the damage or prejudice their reſpective ſubjects have ſuſtained.

VIII. If theſe articles are accepted and ſigned, a Congreſs ſhall be opened in four months, reckoning from the day of ſigning at Aix la Chapelle, wherein the reſpective rights of all the contracting powers, and thoſe invited to it, ſhall be examined, diſcuſſed, and ſettled.

IX. The Plenipotentiaries, that ſhall be named, ſhall have in their retinue no more than two Gentlemen, two Pages, and ſix Footmen, that they may be ſooner ready for their journey, and to avoid pomp and expence.

X. The

1727. X. The Plenipotentiaries ſhall inſiſt on no ceremonial, but follow the regulations ſettled at the Congreſs of Cambray, to obviate all diſputes relating to rank: However, each ſhall have liberty left to proteſt.

XI. The ſeveral Powers ſhall earneſtly recommend to their reſpective Plenipotentiaries, to avoid any thing trifling, that may in any wiſe retard the Congreſs.

XII. The ratification of theſe preliminary articles ſhall be exchanged in the ſpace of two months, or ſooner, if poſſible, reckoning from the day of ſigning.

Theſe articles were firſt ſigned at Paris, the 20th of May, by the Miniſters of the Hanover Alliance, and afterwards at Vienna, by the Miniſters of the Emperor and the King of Spain.

ication of arms at altar elſe-re. The Emperor punctually executed the firſt of theſe articles, and ratified the preliminaries within the time agreed on. Though Aix la Chapelle was appointed for the place of Congreſs, it was afterwards transferred to Cambray for the conveniency of the Miniſter of France, whoſe preſence was neceſſary at that Court. The King of Spain alſo executed in part what concerned him; he gave orders for ſuſpending all further attacks againſt Gibraltar, and all hoſtilities againſt the Engliſh elſewhere. This was an honourable way of abandoning a ſiege, which laſted four months without ſucceſs; nor had it done much execution among the Engliſh, for they loſt in all but three hundred and ſeventy-three men. The ſuſpenſion of arms was ſigned the 23d of June, N. S. But, when the ſiege was on the point of being entirely raiſed, and the preliminaries to be ratified in form, Spain ſtarted new difficulties, and urged new pretenſions. The Spaniards inſiſted, that a temporary ſuſpenſion of arms did not imply an actual raiſing of the ſiege of Gibraltar; and that the reſtitution of the Prince Frederick, the South-Sea ſhip (taken at la vera Cruz, before Spain was in war with England) was not mentioned or included in the articles, whereas the Engliſh demanded both, by virtue of the preliminaries. Upon this hoſtilities began again between the ſhips of the two Nations, and Sir Charles Wager continued to cruize on the coaſts of Spain, after the ceſſation of arms at Gibraltar. And what was very remarkable, whilſt he was looking out with ſeven ſhips for the Spaniſh Galleons (which were ſaid to be coming home) thirteen French men of war (ſix from Breſt, and ſeven from Toulon) ſuddenly came and anchored before Cadiz, of which ſquadron Admiral Wager had received no intelligence either from London or Madrid. As therefore he had no notice of their coming, all communication with the French fleet was forbid. However, after many cavils and delays, the preliminary articles were at laſt ſigned at Madrid, on the 24th of February, above eight months after the death of King George I, by the Miniſters of the Emperor, England, France, Spain, and the States, which opened the way to the Congreſs (1). 1727.

Death of King George I. King George had not viſited his German Dominions theſe two years, and therefore, ſoon after the breaking up of the Parliament, he prepared for his journey to Hanover, where he thought

(1) To bring down theſe matters to the preſent time, it may be obſerved, that means were found to detach Spain from the Emperor, and a treaty was concluded at Seville, Nov. 9, N. S. 1729, between Great-Britain, France, and Spain. By this treaty Commiſſaries were to be appointed to examine at the Court of Spain, and decide about the captures on both ſides, among which were reckoned the ſhips taken by the Engliſh fleet in 1718. That inſtead of neutral garriſons (as agreed to in the Quadruple Alliance) Spaniſh garriſons ſhould be introduced into Leghorn, &c. for preſerving the Succeſſion of Don Carlos. This it was that induced the Queen of Spain to come into a treaty, which gave great offence to the Emperor, as it put an end to his ſubſidy from Spain, of about a million ſterling a year. He thundered out complaints againſt it at all the Courts of Europe, and particularly by a commiſſorial decree, directed to the Diet of Ratisbon. But it was to no purpoſe, for the treaty of Seville, with regard to the Emperor, and all other States, and the balance of power, varied in nothing from the Quadruple Alliance, but in ſubſtituting ſix thouſand Spaniſh inſtead of ſo many neutral troops, for aſſerting the eventual Succeſſion of the Infant of Spain to the Grand Duke's Dominions, to which the Emperor had agreed. However, the Britiſh Court offering to guarantee the Pragmatic Sanction, or the Emperor's ſettlement of his hereditary Dominions, on his eldeſt daughter, on his failure of iſſue male (which was thought neceſſary to preſerve the balance of power) the Emperor was at laſt pacified. This produced the ſecond treaty of Vienna, March 16, 1731, between the Emperor and Great-Britain, in which the States were included. By it the order of the Succeſſion, ſettled by the Emperor, was guaranteed by Great-Britain and the States; the commerce and navigation to the Eaſt-Indies were to ceaſe in the Netherlands, except two ſhips for once from Oſtend: A tariff or new treaty concerning trade, and the rule of impoſts relating to the Auſtrian Netherlands, was to be ſettled by Commiſſaries at Antwerp: The introduction of Spaniſh garriſons into Leghorn, &c. was agreed to by the Emperor. Thus the Queen of Spain was pacified by the variation of neutral troops, and the Emperor was contented, by guarantying his Succeſſion. The concluſion of theſe treaties gave hopes of a laſting tranquillity: But the death of the King of Poland ſoon put an end to theſe hopes. The Emperor, in conjunction with Ruſſia, eſpouſed the quarrel of the Elector of Saxony, and ſupported an unfair election of a King forced upon a free Nation. This being oppoſed by France, a war broke out between their Imperial and moſt Chriſtian Majeſties, in which Great-Britain and the States ſtood neuter, as they did alſo in the differences which aroſe between Spain and Portugal. But, though Great-Britain and the States were not engaged in theſe diſputes, they were both obliged to guard againſt events, which had a good effect. Our naval armaments ſtruck terror into France and Spain alternately. The French durſt not venture to the Baltic to relieve Dantzick, whilſt our navy rid in the Downs, nor the Spaniards to inſult, much leſs attack Portugal, whilſt our fleet lay in the Tagus. At laſt, in order to adjuſt all differences between Great-Britain and Spain, the famous Convention was tranſacted by Sir Robert Walpole, but meeting with oppoſition was laid aſide, and the preſent war with Spain enſued, which has brought on a war alſo with France.

1727. thought to enjoy the fruit of his labours in peace, or continue his endeavours for the good of the common cauſe. Having appointed the Lords Juſtices for the Adminiſtration of the Government, he embarked at Greenwich, on board the Carolina yatcht, the 3d of June, attended by the Earl of Ilay and the Lord Townſhend. The King landed, on the 7th, at Vaert in Holland, where he lay that night. The next day he proceeded on his journey to Hanover; and, on the 9th of June, between ten and eleven at night, arrived at Delden, in all appearance in perfect health. He ſupped there very heartily, and eat an orange, but no melon, as was reported; and, having reſted well that night, ſet out from Delden about four the next morning. Between eight and nine he ordered the coach to ſtop, in order to make water, and perceiving, that one of his hands hung motionleſs, ſaid, I cannot move this hand. Monſieur Fabrice rubbed it with both his, but to no effect; upon which he called the Surgeon (who followed on horſeback) who rubbed it alſo with ſpirits. In this interval the King's mouth and eyes began to move ſtrangely, and his tongue to ſwell, ſo that he could not ſpeak. The Surgeon, taking it for an apoplectic fit, opened a vein, and the King recovered his ſpeech, ſo as to ſay, Haſten to Oſnabrug; but immediately fell into a ſlumber in Fabrice's arms. As the violent motion of the coach could not keep the King awake, Fabrice aſked the Surgeon, What he thought of him? Who anſwered, he deſpaired of his life. Fabrice ordered him to take care of him, and rid poſt himſelf from the laſt ſtage to Oſnabrug, to prepare the Duke of York, the King's Brother, for ſuch unexpected news. The King, being arrived there about ten, was immediately carried to bed, where he continued ſpeechleſs and in agonies till two o'clock in the morning, on Sunday the 11th of June, when he expired in the 68th year of his age, and 13th of his Reign; and was interred at Hanover, among his Anceſtors (1).

Motraye's Travels, Vol. III.

His circumſtances and character.

Thus died George the Firſt, who may truly be conſidered as more fortunate in more important circumſtances of his life and affairs, than any Prince of the laſt or preſent century. This good fortune, which is often the reward of virtue, and as often the effect of prudence, attended him as well before as after his Acceſſion to the Crown of Great-Britain. The eſtabliſhment of the Electoral dignity in his Family, was a work which, though begun by his Father, was reſerved for him finally to accompliſh. A large acceſſion of dominion fell to him by his ſucceeding to the Dukedom of Zell, whereby he became one of the greateſt Princes of Germany, and by far the moſt powerful perſon that ever ſtood next heir to the Britiſh Throne. The Duchy of Bremen and the Biſhoprick of Oſnabrug conſiderably ſtrengthened his intereſts in the Empire, and gave an additional weight to the Proteſtant cauſe.

But his good fortune appeared in nothing ſo remarkable as in the removal of thoſe ſeemingly invincible obſtacles to his Succeſſion to the Crown of theſe Kingdoms. Queen Anne had high notions of Hereditary Right; and, in the latter part of her Reign, ſlaviſh doctrines in ſupport of the indefeaſibleneſs of that right, were avowed in numerous addreſſes. Preparations were made for the execution of purpoſes well underſtood, though not expreſſly avowed. The Miniſters, and all, who had been the ſure ſupports of the Hanover Succeſſion, had been diſgraced. Many favourable conceſſions were made to our often defeated enemies, who both by intereſt and inclination were the protectors and friends of the Pretender. The Adminiſtration of affairs was committed to the moſt daring and determined, and the Nation deluded into madneſs for deſtruction. But, amidſt theſe apprehenſions and dangers, the Queen's ſudden and unexpected death gave the fortunate Elector of Hanover an eaſy and unmoleſted Acceſſion to the Throne. 17

King George did not labour under King William's firſt diſadvantages. His and their Country's enemies were well known, and could with no colour of right demand confidence and power. After ſtrong profeſſions of ſubmiſſion and loyalty, many actually entered into Rebellion; and greater numbers wiſhed it ſucceſs. The murmurings and complaints, which were occaſioned by the diſgrace of the General and Miniſtry, who had raiſed the credit and glory of the Nation to an height before unknown, had been reſented as unpardonable affronts to the Royal Prerogative: And yet, when the Succeſſor removed thoſe, from whom he had received many indignities, and of whoſe meaſures and deſigns to defeat him of his Royal dignity, he had many and undoubted proofs, this was repreſented as extreme partiality and injuſtice; and in public, and on the moſt ſolemn occaſions, it was pleaded as a juſt provocation to Rebellion, and all puniſhments of the Authors of ſo much miſchief and miſery were oppoſed under the pretence of being acts of inhumanity and cruelty.

There are many circumſtances not publicly known, which, if brought to the light, would demonſtrate the King's extraordinary good fortune in defeating the Rebellion. Beſides what broke out in the North, the aſſociations and preparations in the South and the Weſt were great and numerous. Caution, fearfulneſs, and delay prevented the execution of meaſures, which could hardly have failed of proving fatal to the Government. Such a multitude of enemies in ſo many places would have divided the troops, and have rendered the army inſignificant in the defence of the whole. The march of part of the Rebels into England, their trifling at Preſton, and their ſpeedy defeat were of unſpeakable advantage, by effectually diſcouraging inſurrections in many other places; whereas a few days march further would have very very much ſwelled their numbers, and given them a dangerous ſtrength.

(1) His wife, the Princeſs Sophia Dorothy, died November 2, 1726, at the Caſtle of Ahlen, in the Electorate of Brunſwick, where ſhe had been confined many years. She was daughter and heireſs of the Duke of Zell, born in 1666, and married in 1682.

But nothing could be more fortunate to the King than the death of Lewis XIV. of France. From him the Rebels would have received all ſorts of Succours and Supplies. Bigotry and revenge animated the whole French Nation with unanimous zeal for the ſucceſs of the Pretender. And even a minority, a conteſted regency, and the probable need, which the Regent might have of our ſupport, did not prevent all aſſiſtance. However, thoſe circumſtances proved a powerful reſtraint; and the ſituation of the neighbouring Nations was an eminent ſecurity to this reign. The utmoſt degree of averſion and jealouſy ſubſiſted between the Regent of France and the Court of Madrid; which was properly improved by deſtroying the growing naval power of Spain; and our ſurprizing and complete advantage in this affair utterly diſappointed the vaſt deſigns of an able and enterprizing Miniſter.

The Invaſion and Rebellion, in 1719, are the leſs remembered, becauſe not one perſon ſuffered death on that account. The Spaniſh fleet with five thouſand ſoldiers ſuffered ſo much in a ſtorm, as to be obliged to return home; but about four hundred of them landed in Scotland, where they were joined by a conſiderable body of Highlanders, but were ſoon defeated, by an inferior number of the King's forces.

The King of Sweden's death was far from being the leaſt conſiderable of many favourable events; for, had that implacable Monarch lived, his deſigns againſt Denmark would probably have ſucceeded; and then he would have had full leiſure and opportunity for tranſporting his hardy troops into Scotland.

But, on the other hand, how great and uncommon ſoever the King's good fortune was in removing all obſtructions, and firmly eſtabliſhing himſelf in the Throne, it was not without ſome allay. Had his Succeſſion taken place before the change of the Miniſtry, and the diſgrace of the General, it would have been infinitely more happy, not only for the nation but for the laſting tranquillity and liberties of Europe. France would then have been compelled to give up the Spaniſh Monarchy. By advantages in trading to the Dominions of Spain, in Europe and America, and by ſeveral conceſſions, we ſhould have had ample means of repairing the loſſes ſuſtained in a long and expenſive war. The Houſe of Bourbon had been reduced within their proper bounds, and ceaſed to have been the terror and ſcourge of their neighbours.

To this may be added, that King George came to a people, who had been corrupted both in their political and religious notions, and had been taught an averſion to our natural Allies, and to all foreign Proteſtants, while an eſteem and affection for France, and a tenderneſs for many doctrines of popery had been infuſed into them with great ſucceſs; and theſe prejudices had indiſpoſed the Nation to ſubmit to a Proteſtant Prince, while the dangers from a popiſh one were not attended to. The advantages likewiſe of a proſperous war, and many valuable branches of commerce had been given up or neglected; and the revenue was loaded with a very heavy debt. The Authors of theſe calamities had the art and aſſurance to impute the conſequences of them to the King and his Miniſters; and their peace-making had left Europe in ſuch a ſtate, and their principles infected the Nation to ſuch a degree, that a good body of regular troops was abſolutely neceſſary to the ſafety of the Nation; and yet this was exclaimed againſt as inſlaving it. 1727.

The moderate and ſure methods of diſcharging the public debts which had been offered, having been neglected, the South-Sea ſcheme took place to the great misfortune and diſgrace of this Reign, as well as of the Nation in general; and though men of all parties and degrees upon this occaſion equally renounced common ſenſe and honeſty, yet they transferred the whole blame from themſelves to the Government. But whatever miſtakes or misfortunes happened, they cannot juſtly be imputed to the King, whoſe integrity and good deſigns were eminent and undoubted, and his reſolution to govern agreeably to our laws and conſtitution ſteady and unalterable; though the beſt underſtanding, and the beſt diſpoſition are not always ſecure from the arts of bold and ambitious men.

With regard to the management of affairs abroad, a due attention was paid to the feeble and corrupt ſtate of our Allies; and the eager and haſty diſpoſition of the people for war, their perpetual complaints of the wiſeſt conduct, cavilling at the moſt affecting ſucceſſes, ſoon growing weary of the expence, and longing for peace on any terms, were well conſidered; but at the ſame time the dignity and honour of the Nation were maintained in our methods of compoſing the diſorders and diſturbances; which was performed with as little expence and hazard as poſſible; and preventive and defenſive meaſures were the wiſe and ſafe politics, the happineſs and glory of this Reign.

As King James, inſtead of giving the laws their proper courſe, aſſumed a power to diſpenſe with them: and as Queen Anne was flattered into a perſuaſion that the regal authority was unlimited. King George on the contrary, deſired no power but what enabled him to promote the welfare of his ſubjects, and was too wiſe to deem thoſe his friends who would have made their court to him by the profeſſion of an obedience which they never practiſed, and which has always proved fatal to thoſe Princes who have put it to the trial. He had given a proof of his ſovereign virtues before he exerciſed them in this Nation. His natural inclination to juſtice led him to rule his German ſubjects in the ſame manner that our conſtitution directed him to govern the Engliſh. He regarded civil liberties as the natural rights of mankind, and therefore indulged them to a people who pleaded no other claim to them than his known goodneſs. The conſiſtency of his behaviour was ſuch that he inflexibly purſued thoſe meaſures which appeared the moſt juſt and equitable. As he was moſt prudent in laying proper ſchemes, he was no leſs remarkable for his ſteddineſs in accompliſhing what he had once concerted. To this uniformity and firmneſs of mind which appeared in all his proceedings, 1727. ceedings, the ſucceſſes that attended him were chiefly owing. His martial virtues were no leſs conſpicuous than his civil, though for the good of his ſubjects he ſtudied to decline all occaſions of military glory. He had acquired great reputation in his younger days, in Hungary and the Morea, when he fought againſt the Turks, as well as in Germany and Flanders, where he commanded againſt the diſturber of the peace of Europe. And, as if perſonal courage was an hereditary virtue of his family, three of his brothers fell glorioufly in the field, fighting againſt the enemies of their country, and his ſon (his preſent Majeſty King George II.) fought with the bravery of his father at the battle of Audenarde, when the ſons of France and the Pretender fled before him.

As to his more private virtues, He was of a grave, eaſy, and calm temper, and generous upon all occaſions; and the ſerenity and benignity of his mind diſcovered themſelves in his countenance, and captivated the love and veneration of all, who approached him.

The End of the Reign of GEORGE I.

S. Wale inv. C. Grignion ſculp.

A MAP OF THE KINGDOMS OF SPAIN and PORTUGAL from the latest & best Observations, For Mr Tindal's Continuation of Mr Rapin's History.

R.W. Seale delin. et sculp.

Capital Cities. Universities.
Large Towns. Forts.
Archbishopricks. Castles.
Bishopricks. Battles fought by ye English.

Miles of Great Britain, 60 to a Degree.
10 20 30 60 90 120

Spanish Leagues, 17½ to a Degree.
5 10 15 20 25 30 35

10 Degrees West from London. 8 6 2 0 2 4

THE ATLANTIC OCEAN
THE BAY OF BISCAY
PART OF FRANCE
GULF OF LYONS
THE MEDITERRANEAN SEA
GULF OF CADIZ
GULF OF CARTAGENA
GULF OF ALICANTE
Straits of Gibraltar
AFRICA
PORTUGAL
GALLICIA a Kingdom
ASTURIA a Principality
LEON a Kingdom
ESTREMADURA
ENTRE MINHO
TRALOS
DOURO
MONTES
BEIRA
ENTRE TAJO
ALENTEJO or GUADIANA
ALGARVE a King
CASTILE a Kingdom
CASTILE a Kingdom
LA MANCHA
ANDALUSIA a Kingdom
ARRAGON a Kingdom
CATALONIA a Principality
MURCIA a Kingdom
VALENCIA
GASCOGNE
LANGUEDOC
ROUSSILON
Pyrenean Mountain
I. MAJORCA
MINORCA I.
YVICA I.
FORMENTERA I.
Lisbon
Cape St Vincent
C. de Ortegal
C. Finisterre
C. de Palos
C. de Gata
C. Trafalgar
C. St Martin
C. Mora
Gibraltar
Ceuta
Tangier
Cadiz
Malaga
Seville
Granada
Murcia
Carthagena
Alicante
Valencia
Barcelona
Perpignan
Toulouse
Bayonne
Bilboa
Madrid
Salamanca
Toledo
Cuenca
Zaragoza
Tarragona
Girona
Palafugel
Collioure
Ter R.
Ebro R.
Douro R.
Tajo R.
Guadiana R.
Guadalquivir R.
Guadalquivir
Guadalmacar
Xagere
Saltes R.
Almazgen
Lagos Bay
Amacon d'Ouro
Isla dos Cazes
Godas
Lagos
Faro
Tavira
Castro Marim
Ayamonte
Huelva
Sanlucar
Xeres de la Frontera
Arcos
Medina Sidonia
Lucena
Tarifa
Vegel
Algeziras
Gibraltar
Straits of Gibraltar
Tangier
Ceuta
Alcazar
Tetuan
Penon de Velez
Penon de Helena
Velicena
Almeria
Motril
Adra
Orgiva
Jaen
Baeza
Guescar
Cacorla
Ubeda
Bilches
Segura
Murcia
Lorca
Carthagena
Alicante
Elche
Denia
Altea
Xativa
Valencia
Sagunto
Morella
Penifcola
Tortosa
Tarragona
Barcelona
Girona
Palafugel
Collioure
Perpignan
Rosas
Ter R.
Ebro R.
Tudela
Tarazona
Soria
Burgos
Logrono
Vitoria
Pamplona
Bilboa
Bayonne
Dax
Bayonne
Tarbes
Oleron
Pau
Mauleon
Orthez
Mont de Marsan
Bordeaux
Blaye
Bourg
Libourne
Agen
Cahors
Rodez
Mende
Alais
Nismes
Montpellier
Beziers
Narbonne
Carcassone
Toulouse
Condom
Auch Castres
Alby
Vabre
Canal
Rieux
Mirepoix
Foix
Puycerda
Urgel
Balaguer
Lerida
Fraga
Huesca
Jaca
Sanguesa
Estella
Logrono
Calahorra
Tudela
Tarazona
Daroca
Teruel
Albarracin
Cuenca
Huete
Alcaraz
Chinchilla
Almanza
Requena
Valencia
Xativa
Denia
Altea
Alicante
Elche
Orihuela
Murcia
Lorca
Carthagena
Segura
Cazorla
Baeza
Jaen
Ubeda
Bilches
Guadix
Granada
Almeria
Motril
Adra
Orgiva
Velez Malaga
Malaga
Marbella
Ronda
Estepa
Osuna
Antequera
Seville
Carmona
Ecija
Cordova
Andujar
Baylen
Martos
Alcala la Real
Priego
Montilla
Aguilar
Lucena
Antequera
Archidona
Loja
Alhama
Granada
Guadix
Baza
Velez el Blanco
Velez Rubio
Vera
Mula
Murcia
Lorca
Carthagena
Alicante
Elche
Orihuela
Guardamar
Denia
Altea
Xativa
Valencia
Sagunto
Morella
Penifcola
Tortosa
Tarragona
Barcelona
Girona
Palafugel
Collioure
Perpignan
Rosas
Ter R.
Ebro R.

A MAP OF ITALY

with its KINGDOMS, STATES &c.
from the latest & best Observations.
For Mr Tindal's Continuation of Mr Rapin's History.

EXPLANATION.

- Capital Cities.
- Archbishopricks.
- Bishopricks.
- Universities.
- Castles.
- P. Principality.
- D. Dukedom.
- R. Republick.

Italian & British Miles, 60 to a Degree.
10 20 30 60 90 120
German Leagues, 15 to a Degree.
5 10 15 20 25 30

R.W. Seale del. et sculp.

A NEW and CORRECT MAP of the Seven
UNITED PROVINCES
Drawn from the most approved
Maps and Charts;
the whole being regulated by Astronomical Observations.
By Eman: Bowen.

English Miles 60 to a Degree

THE
NORTH SEA
OR GERMAN
OCEAN

PART OF FLANDERS

Long.d East from London

Continuation of Mr Rapin's History

3

A New & Correct Map of the Netherlands or Low Countries

Drawn from the best Authorities and most approved Modern Maps, the whole being regulated by Astron.l Observat.ns

By Eman.l Bowen

NB. The Dutch Barrier Towns (according to the Treaty concluded at Antwerp 1715) are distinguish'd thus

Longitude East from London

Continuation of M.r Rapin's History

4

A CORRECT MAP of the North East part of GERMANY. Containing the Electorates of SAXONY & BRANDENBURG, and the Duchies of SILESIA, MECKLENBURG, POMERANIA &c. Drawn from the best Authorities, and adjusted by Astron.l Observations. By Eman.l Bowen.

English Miles 60 to a Degree

5 10 15 20 25 30 40 50 60

BALTIC SEA

RUGEN I.

D. OF HOLSTEIN

PART OF MECKLENBURG

LOWER SAXONY

M. and EL. OF BRUNSWICK LUNENBURG

D. OF MAGDEBURG

PR. OF ANHALT

D. & EL. OF SAXONY

UPPER SAXONY

MARCHE OF MEISSEN

SAXE GOTHA

THURINGIA

VOIGTLAND

FRANCONIA

PALAT. of Luchtenberg

BAVARIA

MARCHE OF BRANDENBURG

UPPER LUSATIA

LOWER LUSATIA

DUCHY OF GLOGAW

DUCHY OF BRESLAW

SILESIA

PART OF POLAND

G. OF DANTZIG

P. OF PRUSSIA

PART OF POLAND

PART OF HUNGARY

BOHEMIA

P. OF POMERANIA

Hamburg, Lawenburg, Lunenburg, Hannover, Brunswick, Magdeburg, Halberstat, Anhalt, Stolberg, Wirtemberg, Eisleben, Naumburg, Leipsig, Meisen, Dresden, Gotha, Eisenach, Erfurt, Coburg, Hennebourg, Rambut, Schweinfurt, Bamberg, Pegnitz, Lubeck, Wismar, Rostock, Stralsund, Gadebusch, Ratzeburg, Malchow, Waren, Tribsees, Stargard, Wittemburg, Perleberg, Havelberg, Salzwedel, Osterburg, Gardelegen, Zerbst, Barby, Aschersleben, Quedlinburg, Halberstat, Oschersleben, Wolfenbuttel, Helmerstadt, Northausen, Dunderstat, Eichsfeld, Schwartzburg, Mulhausen, Tresurt, Smalkalden, Henneburg, Schwartzburg, Saltza, Roda, Altenburg, Gera, Weida, Zeitz, Naumburg, Merseburg, Weissenfels, Lutzen, Leipsig, Torgau, Wurtzen, Strelen, Meisen, Dresden, Pirn, Chemnitz, Zwickau, Schonburg, Plauen, Graitz, Oelsnitz, Pegra, Culmbach, Raconitz, Pilsen, Tadtaus R., Elbe R., Saltza R., Mein R., Weimar, Leutenberg, Sonnenberg, Schonburg, Buchlen, Berlin, Potsdam, Brandenburg, Spandau, Cotbus, Lubben, Luckau, Dahme, Sternberg, Crossen, Frankfort on Oder, Landsberg, Driesen, Waldenberg, Friedberg, Morin, Berlin, Stettin, Griffenhagen, Griffenberg, Pyritz, Dam, Stargard, Massen, Cotnow, Newgarte, Falkenberg, Nornberg, Drahem, Regenwalde, Landecke, Erydland, Sabin, Pyrsa, Wronki, Sternburg, Meseritz, Bentschin, Zullichau, Crossen D., Kastyan, Naumburg, Priestad, Beutin, Glogaw D., Sprottau, Balkowitz, Koben, Strinau, Luben, Moldau, Lignitz D., Goldberg, Neumarc, Sagan, Sigersdorf, Görlitz, Budissen, Bautzen or Budissen, Liebau, Greiffenburg, Lehn, Janer D., Striega, Cantz, Olmutz, Schweidnitz D., Freyburg, Reichenbach, Schmidberg, Breslaw D., Brieg, Oppelen Pr. to Poland, Grottkau, Nakel, Tarnowitz, Wiasel, Leschnitz, Neissa, Glatz, Nauro de, Munsterberg D., Olsce D., Bernstad, Namslau, Smorgo, Trachenburg, Hermstad, Mohrsholm, Wartenburg, Pransnitz, Wolaw D., Rosenberg, Brunitka, Schurgast, Zuckmanterff, Little Glogau, Ratibor, Leobschut, Jegerndorf, Troppau D., Troppau, Freudental, Rubenick, Mistowitz, Micklowitz, Bierum, Cracow, Oderberg, Sora, Pleßa Bar, Freystat, Testhen D., Bilitzkon, Skoczow, Jablunka, Fulnec, Oder R., Oder, Neustat, Olmutz, Carpathian Mts., Crudin, Elbe R., Prague, Konigingretz, Caslau, Buntzel, Molnick, Lobositz, Aussig, Tetschen, Leutmeritz, Mouth of the Oder, Divenow Port, Usedom I., Wollin I., Usedom, Wollin, Lawenburg Fr., Smolsin, Lupow, Rugenwalde, Stolpe, Stolpe R., Butow, Pautske, Mirchow, Dantsick, Weixel R., Braunsburg, Elbing, Marienburg, Dirschow, Stargat, Hamerstein, Bublitz, Neu Stettin, Tempelburg, Pyritz, Costin, Colberg, Belgard, Griffenberg, Tramin, Treptow, Divenow, Usedom I., Wollin I., Rugenwalde, Stolpe, Lupow, Butow, Lawenburg, Smolsin, Pautske, Mirchow, Dantsick, Weixel R., Braunsburg, Elbing, Marienburg, Dirschow, Stargat, Hamerstein, Bublitz, Neu Stettin

GERMAN OCEAN

PART OF THE UNITED PROVINCES

ZUYDER ZEE

NETHERLANDS

BISHOPK OF LIEGE

D. OF CLEVES

COUNTY OF MARK

D. OF JULIERS

D. OF BERG

D. OF Cologne

C. OF EMBDEN

C. OF DIEPHOLT

C. OF HOYA

D. OF CALENBERG

D. OF ZELL

D. OF LUNENBURG

D. OF BRUNSWICK WOLFENBUTTEL

D. OF VERDEN

D. OF BREMEN

ELECTORATE OF HANNOVER

D. OF HOLSTEIN

D. OF SAX LAWENBURG

PART OF MECKLENBURG

P. OF BRANDENBURG

UPPER SAXONY

LOWER SAXONY

WESTPHALIA

LANDGRAV. OF HESSE CASSEL

LANDGRAV. OF HESSE DARMSTAT

WATERAW

FULD AB.

SAXE GOTHA

BISHOPK OF PADERBORN

BISHOPK OF HILDESHEIM

C. OF LIPPE

C. OF SCHAUMBERG

C. OF HENBURG

P. OF TRIER

A CORRECT MAP OF the North West part of GERMANY containing WESTPHALIA & LOWER SAXONY including the Electorates of BRUNSWICK LUNENBURG or HANNOVER & COLOGNE Landgrave of HESSE Duchies Holstein Juliers &c with the Bishopricks of Munster Osnaburg &c Drawn from the best Authorities and adjusted by Astron.l Observations By Eman. Bowen.

English Miles 5 10 20 30 40

Longitude East from London

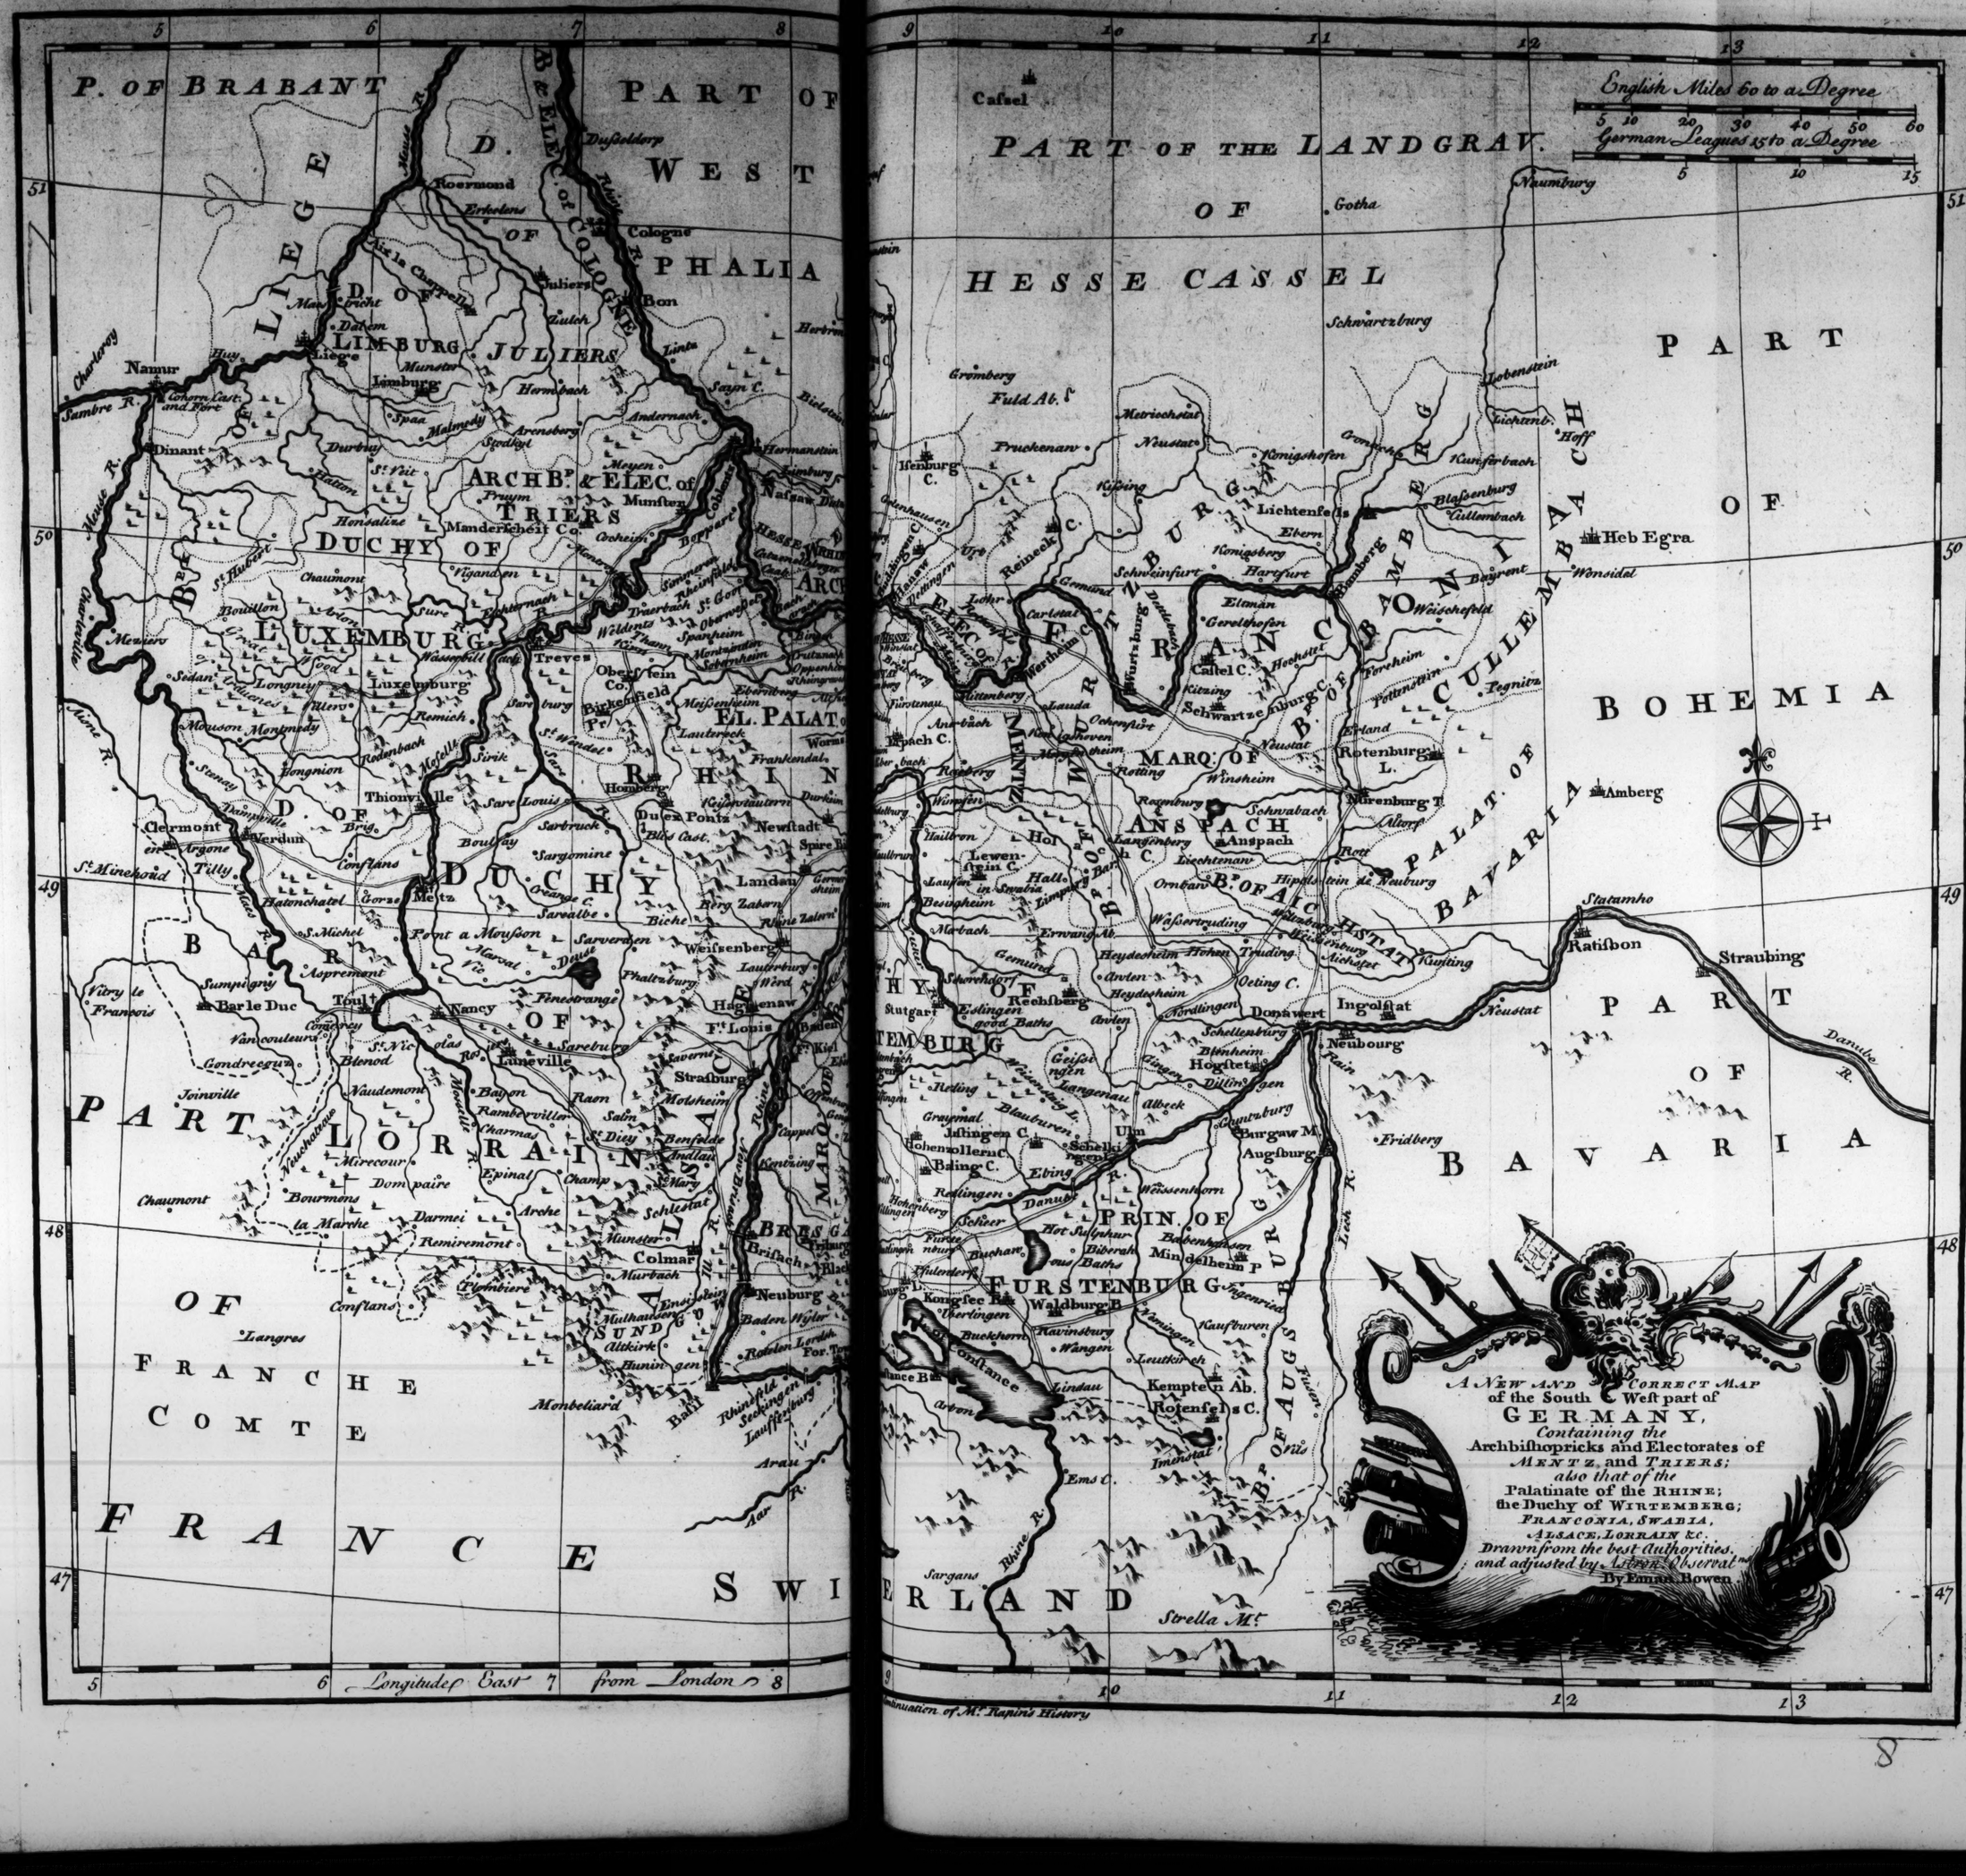
For Mr. Tyndal's Continuation of Mr. Rapin's History.

6

A Correct Map of the South East part of GERMANY; including the Electorate of Bavaria, Arch Bishop & of Saltzburg & Kingdom of Bohemia. ALSO, the QUEEN of HUNGARY's Hereditary Dominions in the Empire; viz: Austria, Moravia, Styria, Carinthia, Carniola, Trent, Tirol &c. Drawn from the best Authorities, and adjusted by Astron. Observat.s By Emanl. Bowen

Continuation of M.r Rapin's History

7



English Miles 60 to a Degree
5 10 20 30 40 50 60
German Leagues 15 to a Degree
5 10 15
P. OF BRABANT
PART OF
D. OF LIEGE
WEST
PHALIA
B. & ELEC. of COLOGNE
LIMBURG
JULIERS
Namur
Liege
Dinant
Cologne
Bonn
Duſſeldorp
Roermond
Aix la Chapelle
ARCHB.P & ELEC. of TRIERS
DUCHY OF LUXEMBURG
Luxemburg
Treves
Manderscheit Co.
Chaumont
Bouillon
Sedan
Longwy
Montmedy
Thionville
Clermont
Verdun
Argone
Tilly
St. Minehould
Metz
Conflans
Hatenchatel
Toul
Nancy
Bar le Duc
Sumpigny
Vitry le Francois
Joinville
Vaudemont
Mirecourt
Dompaire
Bourmont
la Marche
Darnei
Remiremont
Epinal
Arche
Champ
Bayon
Raon
Rambervillers
Charmes
Mutzig
Saverne
Strasburg
Molsheim
Benfelde
Andlau
Schlestat
Munster
Colmar
Murbach
Brisach
Neuburg
Baden Hyler
Rhinfeld
Seckingen
Lauffenburg
Arau
Aar R.
Monbeliard
Langres
FRANCHE COMTE
FRANCE
SWI
DUCHY OF BAR
LORRAIN
ALSATIA
BRISGAU
SUNDGAU
Cassel
PART OF THE LANDGRAV. OF HESSE CASSEL
Gotha
Naumburg
Schwartzburg
Grimberg
Fuld Ab.s
Fruckenaw
Neustat
Metriechstat
Henburg C.
Kipping
Reineck C.
Lichtenfels
Ebern
Königshofen
Königsberg
Schweinfurt
Hartfurt
Carlstat
Elsaw
Gerolthofen
Wirtzburg
ELEC. of FRANCONIA
Hochstet
Castel C.
Schwartzenburg
Rotenburg L.
Neustat
MARQ. OF ANSPACH
Anspach
Lewenstein C.
Hall in Swabia
Ornbau
B. OF ALTHAUSTAT
Hipoltstein
Neuburg
Wassertrudingen
Heydesheim
Hohen Trudingen
Oeting C.
Rechsberg
Stutgard
Esslingen good Baths
Nordlingen
Donawert
Ingolstat
Neustat
Ratisbon
Straubing
Statamho
Neuburg
Fridberg
Augsburg
Burgaw M.
Ulm
Schelkingen
Hohenzollern C.
Baling C.
Ebing
Weissenhorn
Danube R.
PRIN. OF FURSTENBURG
Waldburg B.
Kempten Ab.
Rotenfels C.
Imenstat
Lindau
Ravinsburg
Wangen
Constance
Ems C.
Rhine R.
Sargans
Strella Mt.
ERLAND
BOHEMIA
PART OF BAVARIA
Heb Egra
Amberg
Danube R.
Lech R.
A NEW AND CORRECT MAP of the South West part of GERMANY, Containing the Archbiſhopricks and Electorates of MENTZ and TRIERS; also that of the Palatinate of the RHINE; the Duchy of WIRTEMBERG; FRANCONIA, SWABIA, ALSACE, LORRAIN &c. Drawn from the best Authorities, and adjusted by Astron. Observat.ns By Eman.l Bowen
5 6 Longitude East 7 from London 8 9 10 11 12 13
Continuation of M.r Rapin's History

8

A Map of North America

With the European Settlements & whatever else is remarkable in y^e West Indies, from the latest and best Observations.

R. W. Seale delin. et sculp

9

A Map of South America

With all the European Settlements & whatever else is remarkable from the latest & best Observations.

R. W. Seale delin et sculp.

Explanation.

European Cities ..... ▲ and Towns ..... ●
Indian Towns ..... ★
Forts & Castles ..... ■
Silver & Gold Mines ..... ▲

Degrees East from London: 270, 280, 290, 300, 310, 320, 330

Degrees West from London: 100, 90, 80, 70, 60, 50, 40, 30, 20

The Tropick of Capricorn

The Equinoctial Line

NORTH SEA

PART OF NEW SPAIN

PART OF NORTH AMERICA

THE WESTERN OCEAN

THE PACIFICK OCEAN

SOUTH SEA

ATLANTICK OCEAN

SOUTHERN OCEAN

TERRA FIRMA

NEW GRANADA

CASTILLA DEL ORO

VENEZUELA

GUIANA

AMAZONES

This Country and its Inhabitants are very little known.

UNKNOWN PARTS

BRASIL

LA PLATA

PARAGUAY

TUCUMAN

PATAGONIA

TERRA DEL FUEGO

GALLAPAGOS ISLANDS

Cape Horn

Discover'd by la Maire the first that passed this way to the South Sea, 1616

Sandwich Land Discovered 1670.

A correct CHART of the BALTICK or EAST SEA from the Sound to Petersburg

From the latest and best Observations for Mr Tindal's Continuation of Mr Rapin's History.

EXPLANATION.
- Imperial CITIES.
- CITIES and
- Great Towns.
- Small Towns and
- Villages.
- Castles.

BOTHNIA
GULF OF FINLAND
SWEDEN
NYLAND
CARELIA
PART OF RUSSIA
UPLAND
SUDERLAND
GOTHLAND
SMALAND
BLEKING
SCHONEN
HALLAND
BOHUSLAND
EAST SEA
BALTICK SEA
THE
PART OF POLAND
PRUSSIA
POMERANIA
GULF OF LIVONIA
LIVONIA
LETTENLAND
COURLAND
SAMOGITIA
INGRIA
EASTLAND

Bothnia, Bay of Helsingia
Finland
Nyland
Carelia
Upland
Suderland
Gothland
Smaland
Bleking
Schonen
Halland
Bohusland
Baltick or East Sea
Part of Poland
Prussia
Pomerania
Gulf of Livonia
Livonia
Lettenland
Courland
Samogitia
Ingria
Eastland

Biornesborg
Ladoga Lake
Kexholm
Raumo
Kilax
Lick
Nykyrk
Tofsaal
Wimo
Lehumanki
Kumito
Aland I.
Elefsuncker
Kokar
Stockholm
Meller Lake
No. Talge
Aker
So. Talge
Nykoping
Norderkoping
Suyderkoping
Schelsuyr
Westerwyck
Subuy
I. Wrouenbergh
Flujerby
Stickholm
Wen
Monsteras
Schenckenes
Calmar
Hofmestergrund
Berckerhaven
Christianople
Ahuys
Carlshamn
Carlscroon
the Rocks
Calmar Sound
Mohleby
Oestenby
South Bank
Hamarhaus
Borgholm I.
Sandricyck
Nax
Rottum
Bornholm
Ertholm
Brouwers Rif
Moon I.
Falster I.
Ryoehn I.
Wick
Sagard
Wyck
Kuygh
Oder R.
Camin
Legenort
Colberg
Coslin
Stolpe
R. Stolpe
Rugenwolde
Pepper R.
Gardborg R.
Retfort
Lebe
Pautzke
Oliva
Danzig
Hall
Stromstadt
Oudevalla
Kongel
Turholm
Babus
Gottembourg
Hising
Winder
Kongsbake
Monsterfond
Warberg
Buyhus
Walkenberg
Falkenberg
Harplinge
Halmstat
Laholm
Badstedt
Turkouv
Engelholm
Helsingburg
Elsingborg
Landscroon
Landen
Somerhaven
Malmoe
Drelborck
Kilsted
Roskild
Copenhagen
Elsineur
Helsingor
Lagenes
Hasselin
Skelfor
Nestued
Stroby
Slagen
Waringbourg
Moon I.
Roode Sand
Femeren I.
Grevenbrot
Cysnar
Travemunde
Dobern
Rostock
Wismar
Rhinitze
Bordt
Stralsund
Gripswald
Eldena
Wolgast
Pene R.
Ukersmunde
Stettin
Oder R.
Swinemund
Frayhaven
Southern
Camin
Stettin
Hela R.
Pernau
Sorgholm
Arensburg
Pater Noster
Oseli I.
Reeck
Verder
Hoom Sound
Somneburg
Hondsmyck
Honds Oort
Paden
Hapsal
Castle of Moon Sound
Lehal
Dagoe I.
Dager Oort
Reval
Reval Bay
Wolf Oort
Bricken
Bricklom
Karels
Wrangers
P. Wrangers
Eckholmsgrund
I. Tuttery
Rutzersgrund
Hogeland
Rutzersare
Woesenburg
Tolesburg
High Land of Narva
Narva
Juvagorod
Narva R.
Ruggen
Pernau
Salis, or Lemsael
Querenkaw Cast.
Teydera R.
Dunemund
Riga
Dwna R.
Mytha R.
Lyba
Lyba C.
Upiise R.
Haligaw
Palangen
Memel
Sweenberge
Curish Nerung
Curish Haff
Ruse
Ruse R.
Kauke R.
Labiau
Brusteroort
Lockestee
Frischausen
Koningsberg
Brandeburg
Balty, or Balga
Heiligapeil
Frawerburg
Elbing
Wyck
Abrick
Domesnes
Runen
Kyn
Lyser Oort
Anger munde
Windaw
Wata R.
Doemberg
Kouvernyck
Allemagen Castle
Caveren
Steen Oort
Driaelgrond
Sprabre Oort
Faro Sound or Strait
Varsound
Westergard
Wisby
Gotland I.
Hombory
Bofnick
Po. Karl
No. Bank
Keninge garde
Wiborg
I. Rochel
Biorko I.
Lumalai
Neruo
Ritzart I.
Petersburg
Neva R.
Peterhof
Caleopa
Ruttsari
Ceporio
Inga R.
Castran
Fagre
Telling Rock
Rocks of Lugsa
Rocks of Jusoan
Fore Horlin
Southern
Ekholmen
Kobben
Helsingfors
Borgo
Pernia
Fromal
Kymen R.
Rasslamborg
Hamina
Olsby
Fredrics Verlax
Cotsenyst
Lac Ladoga
Wiborg Bay
Lac Saima
Elefsburg
Esbo
Helsinga
Kirkfleet
Esbra
Lugsa
Lugsa R.
Biorno
Elkio
Ekenes
Raseborg
Ingo
Kumito
Lehumanki
Wimo
Tofsaal
Nykyrk
Lick
Kilax
Raumo
Esmojoki
Biornesborg
Ladoga Lake
Kexholm
Aland I.
Elefsuncker
Kokar
Stockholm
Meller Lake
No. Talge
Aker
So. Talge
Nykoping
Norderkoping
Suyderkoping
Schelsuyr
Westerwyck
Subuy
I. Wrouenbergh
Flujerby
Stickholm
Wen
Monsteras
Schenckenes
Calmar
Hofmestergrund
Berckerhaven
Christianople
Ahuys
Carlshamn
Carlscroon
the Rocks
Calmar Sound
Mohleby
Oestenby
South Bank
Hamarhaus
Borgholm I.
Sandricyck
Nax
Rottum
Bornholm
Ertholm
Brouwers Rif
Moon I.
Falster I.
Ryoehn I.
Wick
Sagard
Wyck
Kuygh
Oder R.
Camin
Legenort
Colberg
Coslin
Stolpe
R. Stolpe
Rugenwolde
Pepper R.
Gardborg R.
Retfort
Lebe
Pautzke
Oliva
Danzig
Hall
Stromstadt
Oudevalla
Kongel
Turholm
Babus
Gottembourg
Hising
Winder
Kongsbake
Monsterfond
Warberg
Buyhus
Walkenberg
Falkenberg
Harplinge
Halmstat
Laholm
Badstedt
Turkouv
Engelholm
Helsingburg
Elsingborg
Landscroon
Landen
Somerhaven
Malmoe
Drelborck
Kilsted
Roskild
Copenhagen
Elsineur
Helsingor
Lagenes
Hasselin
Skelfor
Nestued
Stroby
Slagen
Waringbourg
Moon I.
Roode Sand
Femeren I.
Grevenbrot
Cysnar
Travemunde
Dobern
Rostock
Wismar
Rhinitze
Bordt
Stralsund
Gripswald
Eldena
Wolgast
Pene R.
Ukersmunde
Stettin
Oder R.
Swinemund
Frayhaven
Southern
Camin
Stettin
Hela R.
Pernau
Sorgholm
Arensburg
Pater Noster
Oseli I.
Reeck
Verder
Hoom Sound
Somneburg
Hondsmyck
Honds Oort
Paden
Hapsal
Castle of Moon Sound
Lehal
Dagoe I.
Dager Oort
Reval
Reval Bay
Wolf Oort
Bricken
Bricklom
Karels
Wrangers
P. Wrangers
Eckholmsgrund
I. Tuttery
Rutzersgrund
Hogeland
Rutzersare
Woesenburg
Tolesburg
High Land of Narva
Narva
Juvagorod
Narva R.
Ruggen
Pernau
Salis, or Lemsael
Querenkaw Cast.
Teydera R.
Dunemund
Riga
Dwna R.
Mytha R.
Lyba
Lyba C.
Upiise R.
Haligaw
Palangen
Memel
Sweenberge
Curish Nerung
Curish Haff
Ruse
Ruse R.
Kauke R.
Labiau
Brusteroort
Lockestee
Frischausen
Koningsberg
Brandeburg
Balty, or Balga
Heiligapeil
Frawerburg
Elbing
Wyck
Abrick
Domesnes
Runen
Kyn
Lyser Oort
Anger munde
Windaw
Wata R.
Doemberg
Kouvernyck
Allemagen Castle
Caveren
Steen Oort
Driaelgrond
Sprabre Oort
Faro Sound or Strait
Varsound
Westergard
Wisby
Gotland I.
Hombory
Bofnick
Po. Karl
No. Bank
Keninge garde
Wiborg
I. Rochel
Biorko I.
Lumalai
Neruo
Ritzart I.
Petersburg
Neva R.
Peterhof
Caleopa
Ruttsari
Ceporio
Inga R.
Castran
Fagre
Telling Rock
Rocks of Lugsa
Rocks of Jusoan
Fore Horlin
Southern
Ekholmen
Kobben
Helsingfors
Borgo
Pernia
Fromal
Kymen R.
Rasslamborg
Hamina
Olsby
Fredrics Verlax
Cotsenyst
Lac Ladoga
Wiborg Bay
Lac Saima
Elefsburg
Esbo
Helsinga
Kirkfleet
Esbra
Lugsa
Lugsa R.
Biorno
Elkio
Ekenes
Raseborg
Ingo

The HARBOUR of PETERSBURG.

CARELIA
RITZART I.
Croonstat
Croonslot C.
The Road
WASILI OSTEROW
PETERSBURG
Neva
Oranienbaum
Peterhof
INGRIA

R.W. Seale del. et sculp.

11

A correct CHART of the GERMAN OCEAN

From the North of SCOTLAND to the Start Point, on the Coast of GREAT BRITAIN; and from So. Bygden on y Coast of NORWAY, to C. de la Hogue on y Coast of NORMANDY in FRANCE.

From the latest & best Observations.

For Mr Tindal's Continuation of Mr Rapin's History.

EXPLANATION.

- ✠ CITIES and ▪ Villages.
- ✠ Great Forts. ▪ Forts.
- ✠ Small Forts. ↕ Caves.

THE GERMAN OCEAN

PART OF FRANCE

PART OF GERMANY

PART OF THE NETHERLANDS

PART OF SWEDEN

PART OF NORWAY

THE NORTH SEA

ENGLAND

SCOTLAND

THE ENGLISH CHANNEL

Dogger Bank

Well Bank

White Bank

Broad Fourteens

Doggers Bank

Scale of Leagues

A Correct CHART of St. GEORGE'S CHANNEL and the IRISH SEA,

Including all the Coast of IRELAND, and y^e West Coast of GREAT BRITAIN from Cantire to Portland Isle:
From the lateſt & beſt Obſervations.

For M^r Tindal's Continuation of M^r Rapin's Hiſtory.

EXPLANATION.
Cities and Villages.
Great Ports. Forts.
Small Ports. Caſtles.

Degrees W. from London.

THE WESTERN OCEAN

IRISH SEA

ST. GEORGE'S CHANNEL

THE ENGLISH CHANNEL

BRISTOL CHANNEL

ULSTER

CONAUGHT

LEINSTER

MUNSTER

PART OF SCOTLAND

WALES

ENGLAND

ISLANDS OF SCILLY

R. W. Seale del. et sculp.

A correct CHART of the ENGLISH CHANNEL

From the No. Foreland to the Lands End on the Coast of ENGLAND, and from Calais to Brest on the Coast of FRANCE:
From the lateſt & beſt Obſervations.
For Mr Tindal's Continuation of Mr Rapin's Hiſtory.

ISLES of SCILLY.

FALMOUTH HAVEN.

PLYMOUTH SOUND.

ISLE of WIGHT and ſy adjacent Harbours.

PART OF ENGLAND

PART OF FRANCE

BRISTOL CHANNEL — THE ENGLISH CHANNEL — NORMANDIE — BRETAGNE

SOMERSH. — DEVONSH. — CORNWALL — DORSETSH. — HAMPSH. — SUSSEX — KENT

EXPLANATION.
- Cities and Villages.
- Great Ports. Forts.
- Small Ports. Caſtles.

R.W. Seale del. et ſculp

EXPLANATION.

* Places whose Latitude & Longitude have been determined by Observation.

* Where the Latitude alone has been taken.

* Where the Latitude has been accurately observed by able Navigators.

Names of Capital Places are in the Roman Print Character.

The Longitude is reconed from London.

A correct CHART of the MEDITERRANEAN SEA,

from the Straits of Gibraltar to the LEVANT;

From the latest and best Observations:

For Mr. Tindal's Continuation of Mr. Rapin's History.

FRANCE

SPAIN

ITALY

GENOVA

TUSCANY

VENICE

PAPAL STATE

NAPLES

SICILY I.

CORSICA I.

SARDINIA I.

MINORCA I.

MAJORCA I.

Yvica I.

CATALONIA

LANGUEDOC

VALENCIA

MURCIA

GRANADA

ALGIER

TUNIS

BARBARY

FEZ

MOROCCO

TRIPOLI

Lesser Syrtis

GULF of SIDRA

The GREAT SYRTIS

Straits of Gibraltar

Gibraltar

Ceuta

C. de Gatte

I. Alboran

C. Spartel

Malta

Lampedosa

Pantelaria I.

Lipare Is.

Strombolo

Stromboli

Vulcano

Ustica

Trapani

Marsala

Messina

Augusta

Siracusa

Reggio

Tarento

Brindisi

Otranto

Valona I.

Corfou

Zante I.

Cerigo

Candia

Rhodes

Cyprus

Sicily

Naples

Rome

Genoa

Venice

Tripoli

Tunis

Algier

Fez

Morocco

Barcelona

Valencia

Alicant

Carthagena

Majorca

Minorca

Corsica

Sardinia

Marseilles

Toulon

Nice

Genoa

Leghorn

Civita Vecchia

Naples

Messina

Malta

Tripoli

Tunis

Algier

Gibraltar

ROMANIA

NATOLIA

CARMANIA

SYRIA

LEVANT

EGYPT

BARCA

GULF of SIDRA or The GREAT SYRTIS

POLI

GREECE

MORBA

CANDIA I.

CYPRUS I.

SICILY I.

Lipare Is

Malta

Rhodes I.

BLACK SEA

Constantinople

Nicomedia

Alexandretta or Scanderoon

Aleppo

Tripoly

Jaffa or Joppa

Jerusalem

Gaza

Suez

Damiata

Rosetta

Alexandria

Grand Cairo

Old Tripoli

Tripoli

Tagura

Magra

Barata

Sidra

Cape Matapan

Cape Malea

Cape Spada

Cape Passaro

Cape Bon

Cape Blanco

Cape Serpent

Cape Carmel

Cape Bianco

Cape Rosetto

Cape Salines

Cape Colonne

Cape Sunium

Cape Colonna

Cape Malabar

Cape Sidero

Cape Salomon

Cape Cruz

Cape Passaro

Cape Spartivento

Cape Palinure

Cape Circello

Cape Corso

Cape Bianco

Cape Negro

Cape Zibeleto

Cape Carmel

Cape Blanco

Cape Serpent

Cape Tyre

Cape Pelegrin

Cape Rosetto

Cape Damiata

Cape Bianco

Cape Durazzo

Cape Colonna

Cape Malea

Cape Matapan

Cape Spada

A correct CHART of the BAY of BISCAY, Part of the WESTERN OCEAN & MEDITERRANEAN SEA

Describing the Coasts of SPAIN and PORTUGAL, with Part of FRANCE, From Morlaix to Valencia; Done from the latest & best Discoveries:

For Mr Tindal's Continuation of Mr Rapin's History.

Degrees West 12 From London. 11 10 9 8 7 6 5 4 3 2 1

EXPLANATION.

Cities and Villages, Great Ports, Forts, Small Ports, Castles, BAY OF BISCAY

OCEAN

PART OF FRANCE

BRETAGNE

NANTOIS

POITOU

GUYENNE

GASCONY

THE WESTERN OCEAN

GALLICIA

ASTURIA

BISCAY

PORTUGAL

ENTRE MINHO DOURO

BEIRA

ESTREMADURA

ALENTEJO

ALGARVE

SPAIN

MADRID

ANDALUSIA

GRANADA

MURCIA

VALENCIA

GULF OF VALENCIA

CARTAGENA

GULF OF CADIZ

MEDITERRANEAN SEA

Morlaix, Ushant I., Lambour R., Conquet R., Portsal, Reyton, Goulvan, Brest, Blanquet R., Brest Harbour, Passage del Iroise, le Raz, Iroise, Audierne, Bay of Audierne, Penmark, Moulton Is., Glenan Isles, Quimper, Concarneau, St Philibert, Port l'Orient, Port Louis, St Barbe, Auray, Vennes, Sarzan, Pieres le Poſe, Quiberon I., Houat, Hedic, Palais, Bell Isle, Roch Bernard, le Cronic, le Four, le Blanche, Loire R., Nantes, Paimbeuf, Bourgneuf, Normutier I., Bouing I., Beaucoir, St Gille, St Hillary, Sables d'Olone, Talmont, St Benoit, Lucon, Marans, Rochelle, Chatelaillon, Rochfort, I. d'Aix, Ree Isl., Oleron Isle, Paſſe de Maumuſſon, P. de Coubre, Tour de Cordouan, Soulac, P.te de Lavardan, P.te de Raſinieres, Eſtang de Cannau, I. du Terrey, C. Ferret, Paſſ. du Papon, Bayonne, Bourdeaux, Blaye, Bourg, Macau, Medoc, Mapon, Meſſac, Merteuse, Ceſſac, Ceſſac Torr, Royan, Tallemont, St Pallais, Bignoes, le Tete de Buch, St Guiret, Memiſan, Contis, Leon, Cap Breton, Boucaut de Memiſan, Boucaut de Contis, Boucaut de Leon, Boucaut de Bayonne, C. du Nord la Bayonne, C. Machicaco, Porto Galleo, M. de St Antonio, C. Ortegal, Cotegra, C. Prior, C. Finisterre, R. Corunna, C. Bellin, C. Cortiane, Ferrol, Malpico, St Jacques, Ortegal, Meda, Fregate, Rock Mingo, C. St Jacques, C. St Cipriano, I. St Cipriano, C. de Burel, R. Miranda, C. de Avilles, Avilles, Mede, Riviradeo, Cosenga, Cosenga, C. de las Pinas, Torres, Villa Viciosa, Ribadeo, Rivadeo, Vivero, Cedeyra, Cedeyra, Mogias, Aſta R., Aſta, Illanes, Villa Viciosa, Sarraya, Rib

THE

INDEX

TO THE

Continuation of the History of England.

N. B. The Numbers III and IV. denote the Third and Fourth Volumes. K. ſtands for King, D. for Duke, &c.

A.

ABDICATION: debates about it, III. 24

Aberdeen, Earl of, William Gordon brought priſoner to London, IV. 65

Aberdeen, the Clergy and People of that place preſent addreſſes to the Pretender, IV. 465, 466

Abington, Earl of, Montague Bartie, his motion in the debate about the Union, III. 786, 787

Abington, Earl of, Montague-Venable Bartie, made Juſtice in Eyre, and his Counteſs one of the Ladies of the Bedchamber, IV. 195. is againſt the treaty of commerce, 520

Abjuration of K. James II. Bill for it, III. 131

Accounts, public, examined into, IV. 203

Acts for ſuſpending the Habeas Corpus act. III. 44. of Toleration, 48. for declaring the rights and liberties of the ſubject, and ſettling the ſucceſſion to the Crown, 55. and 444. act to explain this, IV. 432. for repealing a clauſe in it, 499. of ſettlement in Ireland, repealed, III. 87. for the relief of the Proteſtant Iriſh Clergy, 98. of indemnity, 132. for raiſing the ſubſidy in 1691, 161. for abrogating the oath of ſupremacy in Ireland, &c. 193. for recognition of their Majeſties title to the Crown of Ireland, 218. for encouragement of Proteſtant ſtrangers to ſettle in that Kingdom, ibid. to prevent frauds by clandeſtine mortgages, 236. to prevent malicious informations in the Crown-Office, ibid. to erect a company in Scotland trading to Africa and the Eaſt-Indies, 283. in favour of the epiſcopal Clergy in Scotland, 286. for regulating trials in caſes of high-treaſon, 304. for remedying the ill ſtate of the coin. 308, 333, 334. to enforce the ſigning of the aſſociation, 322. for attainting Sir John Fenwick, 345. and all concerned in the conſpiracy, 346. for ſettling the African Company, 371. againſt Papiſts, 401, 402. for renewing the Eaſt-India Company, 371. for the Proteſtant Succeſſion, 442, &c. for attainting the Pretender, 501. act that the ſolemn affirmation of the Quakers ſhall be accepted inſtead of an oath, 506. for the union of England and Scotland, 550. act of commiſſion for a treaty between England and Scotland, 692, &c. for regency, 722. the act which declared the Scots aliens, repealed, 723. for ratifying and approving the treaty of union, 775. for confirming the union, 787, 788. for ſettling the manner of election of the ſixteen Peers in Scotland, 777

Act for improving the union of the two Kingdoms, IV. 114. for naturaliſing all foreign Proteſtants, 110. for the South Sea trade, 204, 535. for encreaſing its capital ſtock, 612. See South-Sea Company. Act to ſuſpend the Habeas Corpus, 433. for ſeptennial Parliaments, 490. for a general fund, with a clauſe eſtabliſhing the ſinking fund, 534, 535. to reſtrain the Sub-Governor, &c. of the South-Sea Company from going out of the Kingdom, 632. in favour of the Sufferers by the South-Sea affair, 645. for ſuppreſſing the Mint, 672

Addiſon, Joſeph, his letter to the E. of Manchester, about the affair of the Ruſſian Ambaſſador, IV. 103. made Secretary to the Lieutenant of Ireland, 104. has a hand in the Criſis, 335. aſſiſts R. Steele at his trial, 343. appointed Secretary to the Lords of the Regency, 395. made Secretary of State, 525. added to the ſecret Committee, 541. writes the Old Whig, 586. dies, 606. an account of him, ibid.

Addreſſes to K. James II, III. 17

Addreſs of both Houſes to K. William, promiſing aſſiſtance for the reduction of Ireland, III. 53. of the Houſe of Commons for a war with France, 89. for removing French Papiſts, ibid. from the Lords, to put the Iſles of Wight, Jerſey, Guernſey, &c. in a poſture of defence, 96. for removing the Marquiſſes of Caermarthen and Halifax, 97. from the Convocation, 110. to Q. Mary, from the City of London, 141. from the Tinners in Cornwal, ibid. from Middleſex, ibid. from both Houſes to the King and Queen, 159, 189. of advice from the Lords to the King, 233. upon the ſtate of Ireland, 234. addreſſes to the King on the Queen's death, 264, 282. about the Scottiſh Eaſt-India Company, 308. about a grant made to the E. of Portland, 310. of both Houſes on the diſcovery of the Aſſaſſination plot, 320. againſt profaneneſs and immorality, 374. againſt the woollen manufacture in Ireland, 376. upon diſbanding the army, 388. about the Dutch Guards, ibid. againſt the Papiſts and Jacobites, 389. about the Navy, 390. from Scotland, about the affair of Darien, 407. of the Commons againſt the Partition treaty, 447. of the Lords complaining of the ſame, 452. of the Commons deſiring the King to remove the Lords Somers, Orford and Halifax from his Preſence and Councils, 460. counter-addreſs of the Lords, ibid. addreſſes of the City of London, and other parts of the Kingdom, upon the proclaiming of the Pretender in France, 495. from the Lords and Commons upon that occaſion, 499, 500. from the Commons to the King, that he would deſire the Allies to increaſe their quotas of land-forces, and provide for the half-pay Officers in the firſt place, 504. from the Convocation to the King, 526. addreſs of condolance to Q. Anne from the Biſhops and Clergy in London, from the Diſſenters, and from Counties, Cities, &c. 540. of the Commons about the Princeſs Sophia, 550. concerning Bp. Lloyd, 575. of the Lords, ibid. on the ill-managers of the funds, 585. of the Commons on account of the plot in Scotland, 630. their addreſs upon the Lords appointing a ſelect Committee, 632. from the Parliament of Scotland, 652, 653. from the Houſe of Lords in England about Scotland, 675. from the Commons, to deſire that the Allies might furniſh their compleat quota's, 678. about the Succeſſion of Scotland in the Houſe of Hanover, and for promoting the Union, 719. addreſs from both Houſes, concerning the endeavours uſed for creating jealouſies between the Dutch and us, 723. of both Houſes concerning the danger of the Church, 728. of thanks from the Commons to the Queen, for her tender regard to the privileges of their Houſe, 729. draught of an addreſs from the Upper Houſe of Convocation, 733. another form drawn up by the Lower Houſe, ibid. of Scotland againſt the Union, 774. congratulatory addreſſes upon the Union, 791. from the French Refugees to the Queen, in favour of their brethren perſecuted in France, ibid.

Addreſs from the Lords about the Admiralty, IV. 42. from the Commons for the relief of the Scotch Merchants, 43. from both Houſes, not to make peace without the reſtitution of all Spain, 46. of the Commons about the number of Engliſh forces in Spain and Portugal, at the time of the battle of Almanza, 53, 54. the ſame addreſs renewed, 54. their addreſs of thanks to the Queen, for taking meaſures to reſtore the affairs in Spain, ibid. addreſs of the Lords and Commons, upon the news of the Pretender's intended deſcent in Scotland, 57. another of the Commons thereupon, 59. and of the Lords, ibid. of condolance upon the death of Prince George, 108. for demoliſhing of Dunkirk, 117. to the Queen, for marrying again, ibid. about Dr. Sacheverel's Tryal, 196, 185. of both Houſes to order the Duke of Marlborough into Holland, 186. againſt the offers of France, 249. addreſs of thanks by the Commons about the peace, 269. of the City of London, and other places, 273. addreſſes on account of the peace, debates about them, 312, 314. of thanks from the Commons for the treaties of peace and commerce, 319. for having the Pretender removed out of Lorrain, 323, 350. againſt the public ſpirit of the Whigs, 341. about the Spaniſh trade, 365. about the Aſſiento contract, 366. from the Corporation of Wigan, in behalf of Q. Anne's late Miniſtry, 419. addreſſes upon the intended invaſion from Sweden, 510, &c. for a copy of the treaty with Sweden, 522. about the E. of Oxford, 545. of the Commons, in the relation to their proceedings againſt the South-Sea Directors, 643. upon the diſcovery of the plot, 662

Admiralty, a motion made in the Houſe of Commons, to adviſe his Majeſty to make ſuch Commiſſioners of the Admiralty, as were of known experience in maritime affairs, III. 230. the ſtate of it inquired into by the Houſe of Lords, 678

Advocates, faculty of, the Pretender's medal ſent to them, IV. 117

Aeth taken by the French, III. 353. by the Allies, 751. a deſcription of that place, ibid.

African Company of Scotland, III. 283

African trade regulated, III. 371

Aghrim, battle of, III. 177

Ailesbury-men; five of them bring an action againſt the Conſtable of that Corporation, III. 679

Aiſlabie, John, ſpeaks againſt the bill for confirming the treaty of commerce, IV. 320. leaves the court-party, and is removed from being one of the Lords of the Admiralty, 355. ſpeaks againſt the peace, ibid.

An INDEX to the Continuation of the History of England.

Treasurer of the Navy, 406. his speech against the E. of Strafford, 429. and upon the E. of Oxford's impeachment, 430, & 434. proposes the lowering of the gold species, 553. resigns his places, 634. has great quantities of South-Sea stock given him, 637. expelled the House, and ordered to be committed to the Tower, 641

Alberoni, Cardinal, makes great preparations in Spain, IV. 562. his anger at receiving Admiral Bing's letter, 566. account of him, 569. his letter upon the defeat of the Spanish fleet, 573. acts in favour of the Pretender, 575, 582. forms a plot against the Regent of France, 582. consents to a peace, 604. disgraced, and ever unfortunate, 605

Alexander VIII. Pope, chosen, III. 104

Algiers; the peace between that Regency and England renewed, III. 615

Alicant castle surrenders, IV. 141

Alliance, offensive and defensive concluded between the Emperor and the States-General, III. 102. between England, Holland, and Denmark, 483, 484. between France and Portugal, 487. between the Emperor, England, and Holland, ibid. triple alliance, IV. 508. triple and quadruple, 562. between England and Sweden, 588. between Great-Britain, France, and Spain, 650. between Great-Britain, France, and Denmark, 706

Allex, Peter, his Ecclesiastical History, III. 398.

Almanara, battle of, IV. 176

Almanza, battle of, IV. 5, &c. English regiments there, 7, &c. and 197, 198

Almirante of Castile proposes that Archduke Charles should be made K. of Spain, III. 624

Altena burnt by the Swedes, IV. 309

Ambassadors, bill for preserving their privileges, IV. 117

Ambrun taken by the D. of Savoy, III. 215

Anabaptists, account of them, III. 45, 515, 520

Anjou, D. of. See Philip V. K. of Spain.

Anglesea, Arthur Annesley, E. of, votes with the Whig Lords, IV. 348. and again with the Court Lords, 350. set down for one of the Regency, 349. sups with Bollingbroke, ibid. promised the Government of Ireland, ibid. joins with the Whigs, 352. speaks for the schism-bill, 361. moves to have that bill extended to Ireland, 363. voted an enemy to the Kingdom, for being one of the advisers for breaking the army, 479, 480. removed from the King's council and service, ibid.

Annandale, William Johnstoun, Marquis of, takes upon him the government of Scotland, III. 61. in a plot against K. William, 122, &c. made President of the Council in Scotland, 595. and Kt. of the Thistle, 604. made Secretary of State, 689. presses the settling of the Succession, ibid. presents a memorial to the Parliament, 690. made President of the Council, 697. caressed by the Cavaliers, ibid. was against the Union. 770, &c.

Annandale, James Johnstoun, Marquis of, his speech about the Peerage-bill, IV. 586

Q. ANNE, her accession to the Crown, III. 533. the Prince of Hanover comes over to make his addresses to her, 534. is married to Prince George of Denmark, ibid. their issue, ibid. makes the Lady Churchill her favourite, ibid. her Father's endeavours to pervert her to Popery, 535. withdraws from Court, and goes to Nottingham, after the Prince of Orange's landing, 536. a great coolness between her and K. William and Q. Mary, ibid. was prejudiced against the Whigs, 538. her speech to the Privy-Council, ibid. her agreeable manner in pronouncing her speeches, 539. forms her Ministry, and admits many Tories, 544. her letter to the States of Holland, 541. her Civil List settled, 543. declares war against France, 546. orders the Princess Sophia's name to be put into the publick Prayers, 550. recommends to the Parliament the Union of England and Scotland, ibid. a pretended design to exclude her from the Succession, ibid. refuses to receive an address from the Duke of Hamilton, and other Lords in Scotland, 557. resolves to maintain the Session of the Parliament there, ibid. appoints Commissioners to treat about an Union between England and Scotland, ibid. makes an order against selling of offices in her Household, 572. goes to Bath, &c. ibid. dines at Guildhall in London, 574. goes in state to St. Paul's on the thanksgiving-day for the victory at Vigo, ibid. desires some provision for her husband Prince George, 575. touches for the evil, 592. the K. of Spain, (Charles III.) has an interview with her at Windsor, 625. her sentiments about the Occasional Conformity-bill, 627. endeavoured to dissuade the Parliament from bringing it again, ibid. her speech on account of the plot in Scotland, 630. her answer to the Lords address about settling the Crown of Scotland in the House of Hanover, 639. gives the first-fruits and tenths to the Clergy, 641. pressed by the E. of Nottingham to dismiss the Dukes of Somerset and Devonshire from her Cabinet-Council, 647. is desirous of having the Succession settled in Scotland, 649. her answer to the Commons about the Ailsbury-men, 681. her answer to the representation of the Lords upon the same subject, 684. her letter to the Parliament of Scotland, 690. another letter of her's, appointing the Lord Archibald Campbel to have the place and vote of High-treasurer, ibid. amazed at the Tories proposal, of bringing over the next Successor, 720. her answer to the address about the danger of the Church, 728. another about the privilges of the House of Commons, 729. her letter to the Archbp. of Canterbury about the Convocation, 734. goes to the meeting of the Commissioners for the Union of the two Kingdoms, and makes speeches to them, 739. the articles of the Union are presented to her, ibid. &c. her speech of thanks to them, 740. inclined to pacific measures, 780. Mr. Harley in her confidence, ibid. her speech concerning the Union, 781. another at passing the bill for enacting it, 788. revives the Parliament, and declares her pleasure for holding the first Parliament of Great-Britain, 791. was against the E. of Sunderland's being made Secretary of State, 793. forms a project jointly with the States-General and the D. of Savoy to invade Provence, IV. 23. her letter to the Emperor about the conquest of Naples, 24. takes Mrs. Masham and Mr. Harley into her utmost confidence, at which the Dutchess of Marlborough is extremely uneasy, 34, 35, &c. the Dutchess's letters to her Majesty upon that occasion, 36. is made jealous of the Duke of Marlborough's too great power, 35. the L. Godolphin threatens to quit her service if Mr. Harley continued in her confidence, 36. her speech to her first British Parliament, 39. displeased with the Lords address about the Admiralty, 43. uneasy at the D. of Marlborough's offering to resign, 55. remarkable variations in her speeches, 60. a letter from her to the D. of Marlborough, 69. another to him after the victory at Oudenard, 104. does not come to Parliament, but grants a commission to several Lords to represent her, 105. her answer to the Commons's address for marrying again, 117. ratifies the Preliminaries of peace, 130. books written against her title, 150. Bp. Burnet speaks to her with great freedom about the Pretender, 165. begins a change in her Ministry, ibid. and 165, &c. her answer to the addresses about Dr. Sacheverell's trial, 185. writes to the D. of Marlborough to give the E. of Essex's Regiment to J. Hill, ibid. desists from her undertaking, ibid. communicates to the E. of Godolphin her resolution of making the E. of Shrewsbury Lord Chamberlain, 187. the Dutchess of Marlborough waits upon her Majesty for the last time, 186. the Queen dismisses the E. of Godolphin from his employments, 190. delighted with the alterations she had made in the Ministry, 192. tells the D. of Marlborough he was not to expect the thanks of both Houses, as usual, 196. her name exposed to cover all the negotiations of the peace, 222. Mr. Mesnager has a private conversation with her, and speaks to her in favour of the Pretender, 223. the Elector of Hanover's memorial shewn to her, 225. she closets the D. of Marlborough and several other Lords, 226. dismisses the D. of Marlborough from all his employments, 232, 233. her proclamation for suppressing the Mobocks, 245. acknowledged Queen by the K. of France, 249. her answer to the Lord's address against the offers of France, 251. communicates the plan of peace to the Parliament, 267. her answer to the Commons address of thanks upon that occasion, 269. and to the Lords address, 270. her new plan of peace, 300, 301. tries to prevent the Electoral Prince of Saxony's turning Papist, 304. her answer to the letter of the States-General, 305. ratifies the treaty of peace and commerce, 311. causes several French Protestants to be released from the gallies, 329. is ill, 335. Dr. Shadwell's account of her illness, 335, 336. has a fit of the gout, 336. the Protestants write a letter to her, concerning the clause in the fourth article of the treaty of Ryswick, 337. is taken ill again, 346. her answer to the Lords address in behalf of the Hanover Succession, and for removing the Pretender out of Lorrain, 351. her letter to the Princess Sophia, 357. is again indisposed, 364. has an imposthumation, ib. her answer to the address about the Spanish trade, 365. and about the Assiento, 366. extremely shocked at the quarrel between her Ministers, 368. her last illness, ibid. constitutes the D. of Shrewsbury Lord Treasurer, 369. dies, 370. not able to receive the Sacrament nor sign her will, ibid. her character, ibid. a strict observer of forms, 371. questioned, whether she knew any thing of the design of bringing in the Pretender, 372. imposed upon by her Ministry, 373

Anspach, Carolina, Princess of, is courted by K. Charles III, but refuses to embrace Popery, IV. 34. is married to the Electoral Prince of Brunswick, and becomes Q. of Great-Britain, ibid.

Antinomians, III. 515, &c.

Antwerp reduced by the Allies, III. 751

Argyle, Archibald Campbel E. of, account of him, III. 59. Commissioner from the Convention to K. William, 74. made Duke, 425. is head of the Presbyterians in Scotland, 596. made High Commissioner, 676. created Baron of Chatham, and Earl of Greenwich, 724. is present at the battle of Oudenarde, IV. 74. takes possession of Ghent, 92. at the battle of Malplaquet, 136. his speech at Dr. Sacheverel's Tryal, 157. objects against the Duke of Marlborough's being thanked by the House of Lords, 195. recalled from the service in Flanders, and appointed to command the English forces in Spain, 212, 213. had acted in constant opposition to the Duke of Marlborough, 213. goes through the Hague without visiting that Duke, ibid. does not receive the expected remittances, ibid. borrows 10,000 l. on his own credit, ibid. complains of his not being supported, ibid. returns to England, and is silent, 214. speaks against the resumption of K. William's grants, 245. excuses the orders given to the D. of Ormond, not to fight, 261. opposes the malt-tax in Scotland, 318. reflected on in the Public spirit of the Whigs, 340, 341. breaks all measures with the Ministry, ibid. removed from all his places, 346. his account of the distressed condition of France, 349. repairs to Council, 369. made Groom of the Stole to the Prince of Wales, 402. and Commander in Chief of the forces in Scotland, 404. sent out for that Kingdom, 438. engages the E. of Mar near Dumblain, 459, &c. speaks for the Septennial bill, 494. removed from all his employments, 500. made Steward of the Household, 585

Arminius and Arminians, III. 511, 514

Army; the Agents of the army oppress the common soldiers, III. 267, 268. the King orders the officers of the army to examine all informations and complaints, ibid. consultations about the standing army, 364. papers for and against a standing army, 365. the commons resolve to pay off and disband the army, 366. list of the army, 367. reduced to ten thousand men, ibid. the Confederate army, their bravery at the battle of Ramillies, 746, &c. defeat the French at Oudenarde, IV. 74, 75. demolishes the French lines, and raises contributions as far as Arras, and plunders Picardy, 79. motion for reducing the army, 526. is reduced, 551.

states about a standing army, 552, 558. articles for the regulation and government of the army, 559

Arran, James Hamilton, Earl of, endeavours to restore K. James, III. 441. sent to the Tower, ibid. his proposal to the Scotch Lords assembled at London, 65

Asgil, John, his absurd notions, III. 520. speaks against the bill for farther preventing the growth of Popery, 730. expelled the House of Commons for a book of his, IV. 44

Ashburnham, John Lord, made Deputy-warden of the Cinque-Ports, and Colonel of the first troop of Horse-guards, IV. 325. votes with the Whig Lords, 348. and again with the Court, 350. reflected on by the D. of Argyle, 349

Ashby and White, their case, III. 639

Ashby, Sir John, his conduct at la Hogue fight, III. 203. examined before the House of Commons, 222

Ashley, Lord, unable to proceed in his speech in the House of Commons, III. 304. See E. of Shaftesbury.

Ashton enters into a plot to restore King James III. 166. seized, ibid. tried, condemned, and executed. 169, 170. his dying speech, ibid.

Assassination plot, III. 196, &c. 312

Association signed by the Commons, III. 321. and by the Lords, ibid. and all over England, 322. an act to enforce the signing of it, ibid. signed in Scotland, 332. entered into throughout the Kingdom, IV. 451

Athanasian Creed, III. 107

Athlone, summoned, III. 146. besieged, 174. and taken, 176

Athlone, E. of, See Ginckle.

Athol, John Murray, Marquis of, created Duke, III. 604. made Knight of the Thistle, ibid. a letter from the Pretender directed to him, 629. the conspiracy in Scotland said to be a contrivance to ruin him, 634. his memorial hereupon, ibid. Lord Privy-Seal for Scotland, his speech in his own vindication about the plot, 694. his protest against the Scots being declared aliens, 696. letter sent to him by the Pretender, III. 768. is against the Union, 770. was for violent measures, 771. ingaged deeply in the Pretender's interest and receives letters from him IV. 63. sworn of the Privy-Council, 311 causes K. George to be proclaimed at Perth, 403

Atterbury, Francis, his letter to a Convocation man, III. 523. his character, ibid. his letter reprinted with additions, 524. approved of, 529. chosen Prolocutor of the Convocation, IV. 206. draws up a representation, 207. thought that a prorogation put an end to all matters not finished, 254. made Bishop of Rochester, and Dean of Westminster, 325. he is the supposed author of English advice, 415 advises the Duke of Ormond to leave England, 428. refuses to sign the Declaration, testifying an abhorrence of the rebellion, 452. endeavours to justify the University of Oxford, with regard to the riot there, 519. his speech about the South-Sea affair, 633. against the Quakers, 655. is apprehended and committed to the Tower, 660. his commitment causes great uneasiness, 661. he is prayed for, ibid. Sir William Young's speech against him, 668. it is voted that he had been concerned in the Conspiracy, ibid. bill to inflict pains and penalties upon him, ibid. is brought to his trial, ibid. the bill against him passes, 670. deprived of all his offices, and banished the realm, ibid. carried to France, 674. says, he was exchanged, ibid. Dr. Sacheverel left him 500 l. 681

Augsburg: the Elector of Bavaria endeavours to seize it, III. 621. a description of that city, ibid. taken by the Elector of Bavaria, 622. the Czar complains of him, 792

Auguſtine, St. his doctrine made by our reformers the standard of religion, III. 511

Auguſtine, Fort St. in North America, attacked by the English, III. 594

Auguſtus K. of Poland, ingaged in a war with the K. of Sweden, III. 559. defeated by that King, 568. is deposed, 626. retires into Saxony, ibid. causes the two Princes Sobieski to be taken prisoners, ibid. his Saxon Dominions are invaded by the K. of Sweden. 763. makes a peace with that King, ibid. resigns Poland and Lithuania, ibid. serves as volunteer at the siege of Lisle IV. 81. pretends that the resignation of the Crown of Poland was extorted from him, 142

Auguſtus King of Poland, his forces assist the Czar, IV. 183

Auſtin, Robert, made one of the Commissioners of the Admiralty, III. 236

Auſtrian Dominions; the succession gaurantied by Spain, IV. 689

Auxiliaries in British pay, retained by the States, IV. 274. refuse to march with the D. of Ormond, 277. their pay and subsidies from England taken from them, 281

Aylesbury, Thomas Bruce, E. of, proclamation for apprehending him, III. 142. concerned in the assassination plot, 312. goes to France and has a secret conference with K. Lewis, 313. committed to the Tower, 326. released upon bail. 350

B.

BADEN, Prince Lewis of, his bravery in Hungary, III. 187. and in Germany, 241. comes to England, 252. commands on the Rhine which he passes and takes a great booty, 257. commands the Imperialists, 300. takes Eberenburg, 363. invests Landau, 561, 562. defeats the French at the battle of Fridlinguen, 565. hinders the Elector of Bavaria from seizing Augsburg, 621. sends the D. of Marlborough an express with intercepted letters, 654. it is agreed that he and the Duke should command each day alternately, 655. wounded at the battle of Schellenberg, ibid. jealous of the D. of Marlborough's success, 661, and 698, 699. promised to join him, but failed him, 698. suspected of favouring the French, ibid. the Emperor sends to expostulate the matter with him, 703. publishes thereupon a manifesto, ibid. forces the French lines at Hagenau, ibid. nothing however considerable done by him, 704. the Emperor Joseph dissatisfied with him, ibid. dies, IV. 4.

Baden, a Congress there, IV. 337

Baker, Major, bravely defends Londonderry, III. 81

Baltick; a fleet sent thither, IV. 525, 538, 589, 618. which is affirmed to be an infringement of the act of settlement, 654. a motion to know the reasons of sending it, 704

Bangor, Bishop of, See Hoadly.

Bank erected, III. 253. complaints against it, 267. 800,000 l. ingrafted upon it, 335. Bank-notes, ibid. Land-bank, 322. fails, 334. great demand upon it, IV. 61. their loans, 530. the Bank act, 535. the Bank present their proposals to the Government, 611. Bank contract, 625. dropped, 628

Barcelona besieged by the Allies, III. 708, &c. surrenders, 710. besieged by King Philip, who raises the siege, 752

Barrier-Treaty with the States, IV. 240. complained of, 241. condemned by the House of Commons, 242. a new one proposed, 300. signed, 302. See also 408. ratified, 464

Barsello, a description of it, III. 621. taken by the French, ibid.

Basville, Monsieur de, intendant of Languedoc, III. 613

Bath, order of the, revived, IV. 687

Bathurst, Allen, created a Baron, IV. 235. his speeches in Parliament, 647, 663, 666, 669, 678, 696, 701, and 702

Battle of Boyne, III. 136. of Aghrim, 177. of la Hogue, 201. of Steenkirk, 208. of Landen, 238. of Marsaglia, 241. of Seardingen, 616. of Schellenberg, 655. of Hochstet, 657. of Ramillies, 746. of Turin, 759. of Kalish, 763. IV. 5, &c. of Oudenard, 74. of Blaregnies or Malplaquet, 136. of Almanara, 176. of Saragoza, 178. of Villaviciosa, 181. of Preston, 456. of Dumblain, 459

Bavaria, Maximilian Elector of, commands the Imperialists, III. 158. made Governor of Flanders, 188. puts that country in a good state, 206. left Commander in chief there, 219. commands an army in the Netherlands, 288. at the siege of Namur, 289. his bravery, 298. was to have Spain, &c. by the partition-treaty, 383. has several Negotiations with the Emperor, 559. declares for France, ibid. and 564. surprises Ulm, 564. defeated by Count Stirum, 616. defeats the Imperialists, ibid. takes Ratisbon, 617. marches into Tirol, and takes Inspruck, 620. driven out by the boors, ibid. takes Ausburg, 622. the D. of Marlborough enters into a Treaty with him; but the Elector refuses to sign it, 656. surprises Diest, 703. appointed to command on the Rhine instead of the Netherlands, IV. 68. gains some interest in that country by his profuseness and popular behaviour, 70. besieges Brussels, and raises the siege, 88. gives out hopes of a peace, 121. proposal from France to restore him to his dominions, and to give him Sardinia and Sicily, 288, 293. comes to Paris and has a conference with L. Bolingbroke, 289. Sardinia to be given to him, 301. renounces to the Spanish Netherlands, 313

Baxter, Richard, his reformed Liturgy, III. 518. refuses the See of Hereford, 519

Beaufort, Henry Somerset, Duke of, his saying to the Queen, IV. 190. sworn a Privy-Counsellor, 195. appointed Captain of the Band of Gentlemen Pensioners, 234. moves for an address of thanks about the peace, 312. installed Knight of the Garter, 308. dies, 364

Bedford, Earl of, created Marquis of Tavistock, and D. of Bedford, III. 253

Benson, William, writes the Plebeian, IV. 586. removed from his place, 587

Bentinck, William, a great favourite of K. William, made Groom of the Stole, and Privy Purse, III. 39. created Baron of Cirencester, Viscount of Woodstock, and E. of Portland, 45. See Portland.

Beretti Landi, Marquis de, signs the quadruple alliance, IV. 600. delivers a plan of peace to the States-General, 605

Berkley, James, Earl of, appointed to command the fleet, IV. 370. sails to Holland to bring over K. George, 399. made one of the Lords of the Bedchamber, 401

Berwick, James Fitz-James, D. of, sails from Ireland into France with King James, III. 138, 145. returns, and is left Commander of the French forces in Ireland, 151. taken prisoner at the battle of Landen, 239. takes Segura, Salvaterra, and many other places in Portugal, 667. defeats a body of the Dutch, passes the Tagus, and invests Portalegre, ibid. defeats the Allies at Almanza, IV. 5, &c. plunders the neighbourhood of Saluſſes, 294. takes Fontarabia and Port-Passage, 603. and St. Sebastian and Port-Antonio, 604

Bethune, description of it, IV. 174. taken, ibid.

Beveridge, Dr. William, is offered the Bishoprick of Bath and Wells, which he declines, III. 173. one of the promoters of the Society for Reformation of Manners, 374. made Bishop of St. Asaph, 687. dies, IV. 67

Bill for excluding Placemen from sitting in Parliament, III. 226, 227, 587. IV. 162, 200. for limiting their number, IV. 342, 344. for ascertaining the fees of Officers of Justice rejected, III. 227. touching the free and impartial proceedings in Parliament, 228. passes both Houses, but the King refuses it, 250. for frequent calling and meeting of Parliaments, 231, rejected, 249. passed at last, 260. for continuing the Parliament notwithstanding the King's death, 321. to prevent the publishing of any news without licence, 350. for disbanding the army, 387. Preliminaries of the bill of succession, 443, &c. that bill passed, 445. for the Union of England and Scotland, 550. against occasional conformity, 578, 627. that no persons be chosen Members of Parliament but such as have a sufficient real estate, 588. to prevent occasional conformity, 671, &c. for an Union with Scotland, 675. for the naturalization of the French Protestants, 684, 685. self-denying bill, 685. for a Regency, entitled a bill for the better security of her Majesty's person and government, and of the succession to the Crown of England, 720. for further preventing the growth of Popery, 730. for correcting some of the proceedings in the Common Law and Chancery, 731. for enacting the Union, 787. for a general naturalization of all Protestants, IV. 110. about privileges of Ambassadors, 117. to repeal the naturalization act, 200. for building fifty new churches in and about London, 208. to give the Electoral Prince of Hanover as D. of Cambridge the precedence of all Peers, 231, 238. for a Toleration of the Episcopal Clergy in Scotland, 243.

243. for making good the 8th and 9th article of the Treaty of Commerce, 315. rejected, 317. to regulate the land-forces, 423, 425. for recognizing K. George's title to the Crown, and for the better ſecurity of his Perſon and Government, in the Parliament of Ireland, 478. to attaint the Pretender and D. of Ormond, ibid. for ſeptennial Parliaments, 490, &c. to prohibit commerce with Sweden, 519. about mutiny and deſertion, ibid. Peerage-bill, 585, &c. rejected, 608. for ſecuring the dependency of Ireland, 609. for enabling the South-Sea Company to encreaſe their ſtock, 610, &c. for ingrafting nine miſſions of the South-Sea ſtock into the bank, 631, &c. for the relief of the ſufferers by the South-Sea Company, 642, &c. to prevent the infection from the Plague, 654, &c. for altering the Quakers affirmation, 655. for the freedom of elections of Members of Parliament, 656. to lay a tax on Papiſts, 665. to inflict pains and penalties on Kelly and Plunket, and on Biſhop Atterbury, 667, 668. to prevent the King's ſubjects from being concerned in the Oſtend Eaſt-India Company, 672. for leſſening the public debts, 677. to indemnify the Maſters in Chancery, 684

Births, marriages and burials, a tax on them, III. 259

Biſhops, their votes taken away, III. 8. excuſe themſelves from cauſing K. James II. declaration to be read in all churches, 20. cried for the ſame and acquitted, ibid. excuſe themſelves from declaring under their hands their abhorrence of the Prince of Orange's invaſion, 22. ſeveral of them refuſe to take the oaths, 43. move for a bill of Toleration, and another of comprehenſion, 44, 106. Biſhops of Gloceſter, Ely, Norwich, Bath and Wells and Peterborough ſuſpended, 105. letter from the Biſhops in Scotland to K. James, 58. their proceeding in the Convention there, 64. nonjuring a ſevere pamphlet againſt them, 143. diſown what was therein aſſerted, 144. are in a plot, ibid. neglect the concerns of the church, 172. the Biſhops looked upon by many of the Clergy as betrayers of the rights of the church, 524. blame upon the loſs of the occaſional conformity bill, 581. conteſt between them and the Lower-Houſe of Convocation, 590. their behaviour upon the occaſional conformity bill being brought in again, 628. diſputes between them and the Lower-Houſe of Convocation, 645

Blackall, Ofſpring, made Biſhop of Exeter, IV. 36

Blenheim, a deſcription of that place, and battle near it, III. 657. the ſtandards and colours taken there hung up in Weſtminſter-Hall, 677

Blenheim-Houſe, III. 678

Blount, Charles, his book to prove K. William and Q. Mary conquerors, burnt, III. 232

Bolingbroke, L. Viſcount, See St. John.

Bolton, Charles Paulet, D. of, dies III. 394. his odd character, ibid.

Bolton, Charles Paulet D. of, made Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, IV. 525. his ſpeech to the Parliament of that Kingdom, 606

Bonne beſieged by the Allies, III. 615. taken, 617. a deſcription of it, ibid.

Bonneval, Monſieur de, invades Ferrara, and takes ſeveral places belonging to the Pope, IV. 98, 99

Booth, George, Lord de la Mere, afterwards Earl of Warrington made Chancellor of the Exchequer, III. 40. his character, ibid. proteſts againſt rejecting the clauſe for taking away the Sacramental Teſt, 46. infuſes jealouſies of the King into the Whigs, 54. diſmiſſed from his employments, 126

Boroughs, ſmall, the rotten part of our conſtitution, III. 497

Bothmar, Baron de, publiſhes the Elector of Hanover's memorial, IV. 225. cauſes a clauſe relating to the Regency to be rectified, 329

Bouffliers, Marſhal de, his proceedings in Flanders, III. 288, &c. throws himſelf into Namur, 289, &c. arreſted by way of repriſal, and releaſed again, 299. paſſes the Maes, 560. tries to ſurprize Nimeguen, 561. ſent to beſiege Liege, 618. diſgraced, 619

Bourbon, D. of, nominated Prime Miniſter in France, IV. 676. removed from that employment, 690

Boyle, Robert, ſounds his lecture, III. 238

Boyle, Henry, Secretary of State, IV. 103. his ſpeeches, &c. at the trial of Dr. Sacheverel, 153. removed from his place of Secretary of State, 191

Brandenburgh, Frederic, Elector of, enters into a league againſt Sweden, III. 410. expects the title of King, 412

Bremen and Verden made over to K. George, IV. 424. the Pretender's obſervation about it, 454. the K. of Sweden enraged at this acquiſition, 505, 509, &c. annexed to the Electorate of Hanover, 674. the Emperor denies K. George the inveſtiture of them, 690

Bribery, proceedings in Parliament againſt it, III. 263, &c.

Bridgwater, Scroop Egerton, E. of created Duke, IV. 617. forms a bubble for building houſes in London, &c. 621

Briſac taken by the French, III. 566. Old Briſac taken alſo by them, 621. a deſcription of it, ibid.

Bromley, William, one of the Managers of the Occaſional Conformity Bill, III. 579, &c. 627. brings in the bill to prevent Occaſional Conformity, and his ſpeech upon it, 671, 672. his ſpeech on the debate about the danger of the church, 728. his ſpeeches, &c. at the trial of Dr. Sacheverel, IV. 152, 154. choſen Speaker of the Houſe of Commons, 194. made Secretary of State, 328. promotes the Schiſm Bill, 360. diſmiſſed from his place, 404

Brown, Dr. Chairman of the Committee of Convocation, IV. 149. made Biſhop of Cork, ibid. writes and preaches againſt drinking to the memory of K. William, ibid.

Bruges, a deſcription of that place, IV. 70. ſurprized by the French, 71. abandoned by them, 92

Bruſſels, a deſcription of that city, IV. 70. ſurpriſed by the French, 71. abandoned by them, 92

Buckinghamſhire, John Sheffield, D. of, removed from the office of Privy-Seal, III. 687. ſeconds the motion for inviting the Princeſs Sophia over, 719. his ſpeech about the Union, 781. ſpeaks in behalf of Dr. Sacheverel, IV. 158, 159, 160. made Lord Steward, 191. moſt verſed in Parliamentary Proceedings, 228. does not attend at the Coronation of K. George, 407. dies, 651

Bull, George, made Biſhop of St. David's, III. 687

Burgundy, Lewis, D. of, dies, IV. 246. his character, 247

Burnet, Gilbert, made Biſhop of Salisbury, III. 41. is againſt the laity being put into the commiſſion for a comprehenſion, 50. concerned in the bill of Succeſſion to the Crown, 55. writes a paſtoral letter, 56. is againſt the inquiry into the murder of the Earl of Eſſex, 95. diſcovers a plot againſt the King, 118. his letter to Mr. Johnſton, 160. his paſtoral letter burnt, 231. his reaſons for Sir John Fenwick's attainder, 343. does him ſome ſervice, 346. made Preceptor to the D. of Gloceſter, 380. addreſs for removing him from that poſt, 397. publiſhes his expoſition of the 39 articles, ibid. which is cenſured in Convocation, 529. his method of inſtructing the D. of Gloceſter, 409. is one of the Commiſſioners for diſpoſing of church preferments, 523. one of the Managers againſt the Occaſional Conformity Bill, 581. cenſured for it, ibid. inſtrumental in obtaining the firſt fruits and tenths, 642. reflected upon by the Lower-Houſe of Convocation, 686. propoſes the firſt model of the act of Regency, 720. his ſpeech about the danger of the church, 725, 726. Chairman of the Committee in the debates about the Union, 783. reports the reſolutions of the ſame, 787. ſpeaks in favour of the bill for naturalizing Proteſtant Foreigners, IV. 112. his notions upon the acts of treaſons in Scotland, 115. Dr. Sacheverel reflects upon him, 150. threatened by the mob, 155. his ſpeech at Dr. Sacheverel's trial, 157, 158. ſpeaks to the Queen with great freedom againſt the Pretender, 163. the Queen ſpeaks to him about the peace, 226. his ſpeech about the peace, 320, &c. his preface to his paſtoral care complained of in Parliament, 345. makes a long ſpeech, 352. his ſpeech about the peace with Spain, 353

Byng, George, made Rear-Admiral of the Red, III. 590. goes into the Mediterranean, 612. at the taking of Gibraltar, 664. made Vice-Admiral of the Blue, 678. ſails towards Dunkirk, to defeat the Pretender's deſigned expedition to Scotland, IV. 58. comes back into the Downs, and ſails towards the coaſt of France, ibid. purſues the French fleet, and comes near the Firth of Edinburgh, 66. his two letters, ibid. thanked by the Houſe of Commons, 61. one of the Lords of the Admiralty, 192. made Admiral of the White, 219. made one of the Commiſſioners of the Admiralty, 406. takes upon him the command of the fleet, 433. made one of the Commiſſioners of the Admiralty, 525, 562. ſent with a fleet into the Baltick, 525. and with a large ſquadron into the Mediterranean, 562, 565. his inſtructions, ibid. diſpatches his Secretary with a letter to Colonel Stanhope, 566. the King of Spain's anſwer to his letter, ibid. ſends a letter to the Marquiſs de Lede, 568. defeats the Spaniſh fleet, ibid. the King's letter to him upon that occaſion, 569. receives a gracious letter from the Emperor, with his picture, 571. motion in the Houſe of Lords to have his inſtructions laid before them, 576. confiſcates all French ſhips in the ſervice of Spain, 589. lends the Imperialiſts cannon and ammunition, 594. deſtroys ſome Spaniſh men of war in Meſſina-Road, 596. ſends cannon to Sicily, 597. convoys the Imperialiſts to Trepani, 599. returns to England, 603. account and character of him, ibid.

C.

CABAL, III. 13. diſſolved, 14

Cabinet-Council appointed for Q. Mary, III. 139. detriment to the public for affairs paſſing through the Cabinet-Council, 223. IV. 404

Cadiz, attack of the Engliſh upon that place, III. 568

Cadogan, Major-General, gives the Queen information of the Pretender's deſigns againſt Scotland, IV. 57. ſends ſome regiments from abroad upon that occaſion, 58. his bravery at the battle of Oudenarde, 74, 75. at the battle of Wynendale, 84. forces the French lines, 170. removed from being Lieutenant of the Tower, 234. receives the Duke of Marlborough with great reſpect at his landing at Oſtend, for which he is diſmiſſed, 300. takes meaſures to ſecure the Proteſtant Succeſſion, 347. appointed Colonel of the 2d regiment of foot-guards, 407. ſent as Plenipotentiary to Antwerp, about the barrier treaty, 408. his proceedings againſt the Rebels in Scotland, 467, &c. created Baron of Reading, 499. negotiates a treaty between England and the Duke of Orleans, 565. a cenſure deſigned to be paſſed upon him, 526. made General of the forces in England, 548. ſent Ambaſſador to the Hague, 549. created an Earl, 562. made Maſter-General of the Ordnance, 658

Cambray; a Congreſs there, IV. 619. the ſole mediation there offered to K. George, who refuſes it, 689

Cammock, a Spaniſh Rear-Admiral, IV. 561, &c. gets into Meſſina, 572. account of him, 589. his romantic offers to Admiral Byng, ibid.

Campain in Flanders, III. 102, 154, 184, 255. IV. 19, 69, 139. in Germany, III. 103, 654, &c. IV. 101. in Italy, III. 184. in Italy and Provence, IV. 21. in Italy, IV. 93. on the Rhine, III. 187, 257, 328. IV. 140, 175. in Catalonia, III. 328, 705, &c. in Portugal, III. 665. IV. 183. in Piedmont and Dauphiné, IV. 140, 175

Cape-Breton yielded up to the French by the Engliſh, IV. 303, &c. left to the French by the treaty of Utrecht, 314, 391

Carlos, Don, a marriage concluded between him and one of the Duke of Orleans's daughters, IV. 674. ſhe is ſent back, 689. a match deſigned between the Emperor's eldeſt daughter and him, 690. the ſucceſſion to Tuſcany preſerved to him, 711 Carmarthen, Marquiſs of. See Osborn, Thomas.

Carnwath, Robert Dalziel E. of, takes arms for the Pretender, IV. 445. his character, 448. taken priſoner at Preſton, 459. brought up to London and examined, 465. committed to the Tower, ibid. impeached, 482. brought to the bar of the Houſe of Lords, and pleads guilty, 484. condemned, 487. ibid. reſpited,

Carſe

INDEX to the Continuation of the History of England.

Carolina Wilhelmina, Princeſs of Wales, delivered of Prince William, IV. 651. and of the Princeſs Louiſa. 686

Carpenter, General, in Spain, IV. 94. at the battle of Almanara, 176. ſent to ford over the Ebro, 177. his good advice not followed, 180. taken priſoner at Brihuega, 181. made Commander in Chief of the forces in Scotland, Governor of Minorca, &c. 501

Carteret, John Lord, votes with the Whig Lords, IV. 348. made one of the Lords of the Bedchamber, 407. his ſpeech about the Septennial bill, 492. about a ſtanding army, 558. Ambaſſador and Plenipotentiary to Sweden, 588. concludes an alliance between England and Sweden, 614. made Secretary of State, 649. motion for his private inſtructions to be laid before the Parliament, 654. appointed Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, 679

Carthagena in America taken by Pointis, III. 354

Caſtlemain, Roger Palmer, E. of, impeached, III. 113. excepted out of the Indemnity, 132

Catalans very kind to the Engliſh troops, IV. 213. forſaken by the Engliſh, 296. amnaſty for them, 307. reſolved to defend their liberty, 335. are to have a full pardon, 339. their caſe taken into conſideration by the Houſe of Lords, 345, 347. reflection on their condition, 373. their caſe reported by the Committee of Secrecy, 379. the Lords of the Regency write to the King of France in their behalf, 398

Catalonia, affairs there, III. 300, 328

Catharine, Empreſs of Ruſſia, her anſwer to K. George's letter to her, IV. 698. dies, 710

Ceſſation of arms propoſed, IV. 275. proclaimed, 281. prolonged, 304

Cevennois riſe in arms, III. 613. the Engliſh fleet attempts in vain to aſſiſt them, 614. ſuffer much, and are not relieved, 668. enter into a treaty with the French General, ib.

Chancery, Maſters in, their affair, IV. 683

Charles II. See Spain, K. of.

Charles XI, K. of Sweden, Mediator, III. 351. dies, 352

Charles XII, K. of Sweden, Mediator, III. 354. See Sweden.

Charles, Archduke of Auſtria, proclaimed K. of Spain, III. 614. ſeveral Spaniards declare for him, 615. lands in England, 625. his character, 626. is beſieged in Barcelona, 753. delays going to Madrid, which is a great injury to him, 754. comes to Tarragona, and thence to Saragoſſa, and is acknowledged by the Kingdoms of Valencia and Arragon, 755. comes up near Madrid, ibid. joins the E. of Galway, and advances againſt K. Philip, 757. concludes a treaty of commerce with England, IV. 12. but ratifies it with reluctance, ibid. courts the Princeſs of Anſpach, who refuſes to change her Religion, and he marries the Princeſs of Wolfenbuttle, 32. the Pope acknowledges him, 100. the French offer to give him Spain and the Weſt-Indies, 121, &c. comes to Madrid, 179. no care is taken by the Allies to ſupport him, 180. his affairs are in a bad ſituation, 182. is elected Emperor, 214. See Emperor.

Cholmondley, Hugh E. of, objects againſt the ratification of the treaties of peace and commerce, IV. 311. removed from the place of Treaſurer of the Houſhold, ibid. received with great favour by K. George, 402. appointed Treaſurer of the Houſhold, 406. his ſpeech in Parliament, 579

Cholmondley, George E. of, his ſpeech upon the Septennial bill, IV. 492

Church of England ſaid to be in danger, III. 715. memorial of the Church of England, ibid. danger of the Church inquired into by the Houſe of Lords, 724, &c. proteſts about it, 728, 729

Churchill, Lord John, made a Privy-Counſellor, III. 38. and Gentleman of the King's Bedchamber, 39. created E. of Marlborough, 45. acts in Flanders, 103. See Marlborough.

Civil Liſt, III. 51, 52

Clarendon, Henry Hyde E. of, in great credit in Ireland, III. 77. aſpires to the poſt of Lord-Lieutenant, ibid. diſcontented, ibid. ſpreads ſlanders againſt K. William, 105. enters into a plot to reſtore K. James, 166. committed to the Tower, and releaſed, 171. the Earl's Hiſtory publiſhed, 592. appointed Envoy Extraordinary to Hanover, IV. 352. his ſpeeches, ibid.

Clarke, Dr. Samuel, publiſhes his Scripture Doctrine of the Trinity, IV. 412. lays a paper before the Convocation to vindicate himſelf, 413

Clement XI, Pope, dies, IV. 651. was a great friend to the Pretender, ibid.

Clergy, adhere to the divine rights of Monarchy, and lineal Succeſſion, and to the diſtinction of a King de jure and de facto, III. 27. it is propoſed in Parliament to excuſe them from taking the oaths to K. William, 47. but they are at length obliged to take them before Auguſt 1, 1689, 48. ſhew their hatred to the Diſſenters, 49. epiſcopal Clergy in Scotland zealous for K. James, which proves the ruin of Epiſcopacy in that Kingdom, 58, &c. Proteſtant Clergy in Ireland, deſign to ſuppreſs them, 88. Clergy in England take the oaths to K. William with reſervations and diſtinctions. 105. excepted out of the abjuration bill, 131. the Clergy in England give offence by their behaviour about the oaths, 218. ſign the Aſſociation, 322. diviſions among them encourage profaneneſs, 374. ſome of them againſt a toleration, ibid. complain of the Convocation's not ſitting, 522, &c. hoped to recover many privileges by the help of Mr. Atterbury's book, 524. uſed to grant their own ſubſidies apart, ibid. taxed by the Houſe of Commons ever ſince the year 1665, ibid. and 525. promote the notion of the Church's being in danger, 715

Coin, the loſs the Nation ſuffered by recoining the money, III. 327. proceedings of the Commons about it, 333, 334

Collier, Jerem. gives abſolution to Sir John Friend, and Sir William Perkins, III. 325. vindicates that practice, ibid. his ſhort view of the ſtage, 391

Commerce, treaty of, between England and France, IV. 303. rejected by the Parliament, 304. between the Emperor and Spain, 690

Commiſſion for reviewing the Liturgy and the Commiſſioners names, III. 106, 107. eccleſiaſtical Commiſſion for diſpoſing of Church preferments, 523

Commiſſioners to treat of an Union between England and Scotland, III. 557, &c. 736, &c. they meet, 737

Committee of both Houſes to adviſe K. William, III. 223, &c. 235. of Secrecy choſen, IV. 420. meets, 421. their report, 426, &c. their report concerning Mr Prior, 435. a ſelect one to inſpect into the execution of the South-Sea ſcheme, 632. their report, 636, &c. of the Houſe of Commons examines Layer, 666. their report, ibid.

Commons, Houſe of, will not agree to excuſe the Clergy from taking the oaths, III. 47. preſent an addreſs of thanks to the King, for his having diſcharged chimney-money, 52. addreſs to the King for a war with France, 89. ſettle upon the King the hereditary exciſe for life, and grant him the cuſtoms for four years, 128, 129. vote a Supply of four millions, 160. another of above three millions, 190. one of above five millions, 226, &c. of five millions and a half, 249, &c. of almoſt five millions, 259. their repreſentation to the King upon his refuſing to paſs the Place-bill, 250. their proceedings againſt Pauncefort and others guilty of bribery, 267, 268. debates in that Houſe about recoining the money, 305. their proceedings about the Coin, 333, 334. bent upon diſbanding the forces, and grant a Supply for that purpoſe, 387. their addreſs of thanks to the King upon diſbanding the army, 388. the King's meſſage to them about the Dutch Guards, and their addreſs thereupon, ibid. many hard things ſaid in that Houſe againſt the Court and the King, 389. find fault with the partition treaty, 447. vote forty thouſand ſailors, and the ſame number of ſoldiers, 501. vote that it is the undoubted right of the People to petition, 503. preſent an addreſs to the Queen on the ill-management of the funds, 584. diſputes between them and the Houſe of Lords, in the caſe of Aſhby and White, 639, &c. ſhew a great neglect in all that related to the fleet, 642. loſe much of their reputation, 644. their proceedings about the five Aileſbury men, 679, &c. motion for excluding Penſioners and Placemen from the Houſe of Commons, 722. debates about the danger of the Church, 728. their reſolutions for making the Union more compleat, IV. 43. and about the trade to Portugal, Italy, and Spain, ibid. enquire ſtrictly into the E. of Galway's conduct at the battle of Almanza, 53. their reſolution for the preſervation of public credit, 61. their partiality in judging of conteſted elections, 108. great debates about the Peers of Scotland's eldeſt ſons, ibid. impeach Dr. Sacheverel, 151. their Managers at his tryal, 153, 154. take into conſideration the management of the war, and find ſome abuſes in the victualling, 199. inquire into the affair of the Palatines, 200. grant 1,500,000 l. for the ſervice in Spain, 212. reject in their addreſs of thanks a clauſe that had been inſerted in the Lords addreſs, 229. form ſeveral reſolutions injurious to the States, 242. and condemn the barrier treaty, ibid. debates there about the negotiation of peace, 263. order Bp. Fleetwood's Preface to be burnt, 270, 271. their reſolution againſt the letter from the States, 272. and about the Queen's care for the Proteſtant Succeſſion, ibid. they ſtigmatize thoſe that delighted in war, 313. vote the Proteſtant Succeſſion to be in no danger, 354. debates about K. George's proclamation for calling a new Parliament, 419. on the bill for Septennial Parliaments, 494, &c. meaſures taken by them for reducing the public debts, 527, &c. debates there about the repeal of the Schiſm and Occaſional bills, 578. and about the South-Sea ſcheme, 611. their proceedings about the South-Sea affair, 630, &c. their reſolutions about the South-Sea Directors, 637, &c. in favour of the Sufferers by the South Sea ſcheme, 642, &c. they preſent an addreſs to the King, demonſtrating the neceſſity and wiſdom of their proceedings, 643. debates there about the Subſidy to Sweden, 647. and about the Navy debt, 653. their votes againſt the Oſtend Eaſt-India Company, 672. their proceedings againſt the Maſters in Chancery, 683

Comprehenſion, bill for it, III. 49. why miſcarried, 51. attempted again, 106

Compton, Henry, Biſhop of London, made Privy-Counſellor, III. 38. and Dean of the Royal Chapel, 39. crowns K. William and Q. Mary, 45. his ſpeech in the Convocation, 109. twice diſappointed of the See of Canterbury, 529. oppoſes the Court, ibid. had the education of the Princeſs (afterwards Q. Anne) 534. marries her to the Prince of Denmark, ibid. helps to convey her from the Court to Nottingham, 536. his ſpeech about the danger of the Church, 725. his death and character, IV. 328

Compton, Spencer, choſen Speaker of the Houſe of Commons, IV. 416

Congreſs at Abo and Aland between the Swediſh and Ruſſian Miniſters, IV. 540, 616. at Brunſwick and Cambray, 619

Conſpiracy in Scotland, III. 629. the papers relating to it laid before the Houſe of Lords, 633. endeavours uſed to ſtifle it, 634. account of that Conſpiracy, 637. the Lords vote about it, 639. in England, IV. 436. diſcovered, 438. carried on, 443. another Conſpiracy, 506

Convention turned into a Parliament, III. 41. the Convention in Scotland meets, 64. proceeding therein, 65, &c. the lawfulneſs of it, 67. their acts for the ſecurity of the Nation, 68. ſend relief to Ireland, ibid. their anſwer to K. William's letter, 69. publiſh a proclamation againſt K. James, 73

Convocation meets, and their proceedings, III. 109, &c. their addreſs to the King, 110. books about it, 522. regularly called by K. William, but always prorogued, 524. is allowed to ſit, ibid. pretended they had a right to ſit whenever the Parliament ſate, ibid. and that they had no need of a licenſe to enter upon debates, ibid. diſputes between the Lower-Houſe and the Archbiſhop about adjourning, 525. report of the Lower-Houſe, 526. their power as to cenſuring of books, 527. whether diſſolved by the King's death, 531,

531, 582. their proceedings in 1702, 589, &c. their petition to the Queen, 591. fit again, their proceedings, 644, &c. meets again, and presents a representation, 645. remarks upon it, ibid. a new one meets, 732. difference between the two Houses, 733. meets again, 793. speaks against the Union, and names a Committee to consider of the present danger of the Church, ibid. prorogued, ibid. order a representation to be made to the Bishops, 794. the Lower-House continues sitting after the prorogation, 795. and prepares a protestation against the Archbishop, ibid. the Prolocutor absents himself, for which he is declared contumacious, ibid. the Convocation opened, IV. 206. the Queen's license for the sitting of it, ibid. their representation to the Queen, 207. has a jurisdiction, and may proceed in case of heresy, ibid. whether the Queen's license to it subsisted after a prorogation by a Royal writ, 254. meets again, 340. and 412

Cooke, Sir Thomas, Governor of the East-India Company, proceedings of the Commons against him, III. 270. committed to the Tower, and a bill brought in against him, 272. act to indemnify him, 273. examined before the Commons, ibid. act for imprisoning him, 279

Corporation-Act repealed, IV. 578, &c.

Corruption, an universal one complained of, III. 269

Cottonian Library, III. 731

Cowper, William, made Lord-Keeper, III. 716. his character, ibid. discourages the great number of private bills, 731. his proceedings and speeches about the Union of the two Kingdom, 737, &c. presents the articles of Union to the Queen, 739. is created Baron of Wingham, 781. declared Lord High-Chancellor, 792. his speech to the Parliament, IV. 106. speaks at Dr. Sacheverel's tryal, 158. delivers up the Great Seal, 191. speaks against the resumption of K. William's grants, 245. his speech about the peace, 261, 269. represents the dangers that threatened the Protestant Succession, 345. his speech about the Catalans, 347. made Lord Chancellor, 404. Lord High-Steward at the time of the condemnation of the seven impeached Lords, 484. and of the E. of Wintoun, 488. his speech on the Septennial bill, 493. appointed Lord High-Steward at the E. of Oxford's trial, 541. resigns the Great Seal, 562. created an Earl, ibid. is against the repeal of the Schism Act, 579. his speeches about the Peerage-bill, 586. and 608. and about the South-Sea scheme, 611. was against securing Knight, 633. dies, 676, his character, ibid.

Court of Conscience erected in Bristol, Gloucester, and Newcastle, III. 98. Court of the Marshes of Wales abolished, ibid.

Craggs, James, sent to the Tower, III. 269. concerned in clothing the army, ibid. examined in the House of Commons about the East-India Company, 277. act for imprisoning him, 279. speaks against the Assiento trade, IV. 339. sent to K. George with a letter, 370. returns to England with letters to the Lords Justices, 397. made Secretary at War, 525. made Secretary of State, 562. his answer to Marquis de Monteleon's letter, 574. gives the House of Commons an account of the measures pursued by the King, 577. was to have been created a Peer, 609. challenges the House of Common, 632. dies, 635

Crawford, William Lindsay E. of, appointed to preside in the Parliament of Scotland, III. 74. against the Episcopal Clergy, 105. his character, ibid. and 118

Credit, the public, restored, III. 334. very high, 729. the Commons care for preserving it, IV. 61

Crew, Nathaniel, Bishop of Durham, takes the oaths, III. 112. excepted out of the Indemnity, 132

Cromarty, George Mackenzie E. of, Secretary of State for Scotland, III. 649. his speech, 650. is made Justice-General, 653

Czar, Peter I, travels to Holland and England, III. 356. his character, ibid. successful against the Tartars, 363. defeated at Narva, 438. over-runs Poland, IV. 15. presses the Poles to chuse another King, ibid. tries to make a peace with the K. of Sweden, ibid. reduces Livonia to his obedience, 183. the Grand Signior declares war against him, 184. has an engagement with the Turks, and concludes a peace with them, 214. the K. of Sweden endeavours to stir up the Turks against him, 309. makes himself master of Finland, ibid. had taken from the K. of Sweden his German Dominions, 505. angry with K. George, 506, 511, &c. misunderstanding between him and the Court of Hanover, 538, 539. goes to France, and concludes a treaty with that Court, 540. a peace between him and Sweden, ibid. ravages part of Sweden, 589. his Minister's Secretary committed, 606. alliance between England and Sweden against him, 614. continues the war, and makes peace without any Mediator, 615. refuses the mediation of England, 618. peace between him and Sweden, 650. his memorial upon Mr. Bestuget's being ordered to leave England, ibid. dies, 697

Czarina. See Catharine.

D.

Dalrymple, John, made joint Secretary of State for Scotland, III. 182. undertakes to bring the Jacobites into the King's service, ibid. created Lord Stair, 194

Dalrymple, Sir David, frames a bill to discharge the Clans of Scotland from their vassalage, IV. 58. Lord Advocate of Scotland, ordered to inquire into the affair of the Pretender's medal, 218. removed, ibid. made Auditor of the Exchequer in Scotland, 617

Danby, E. of. See Osborne, Thomas.

Danes refuse to stir from their quarters till their arrears were paid, III. 743. join the Allies, 744

Darien; account of that Settlement, III. 283, 308, 392. miscarries, 392, &c. the French King complains, and the K. of Spain presents a memorial against it, 393. great discontent upon the loss of it, 394. and 406

Dartmouth, William Legg, Lord, made Secretary of State, IV. 189. created Viscount Lewisham and Earl of Dartmouth, 219. made Lord Privy Seal, 328

Davenant, Dr. Charles, some of his books censured, III. 551. appointed Secretary to the English Commissioners for the Union, 558. his Essays upon peace at home, and war abroad, 627

D'Aumont, E. of, appointed Ambassador Extraordinary to England, IV. 296. comes to England, 300. his character, ibid. insulted, and his house burnt, 325, 326. the Pretender thought to be with him, ibid. presents a memorial against Mr. Dubourdieu, an eminent French Preacher, ibid. makes his public entry, 327. leaves England, 328

Dauphin, an attempt to carry him off, IV. 32. he dies, 203. two other Dauphins died, 246

Dawes, Sir William, Bp. of Chester, speaks against the bill for naturalizing Protestant foreigners, IV. 112. votes for the E. of Oxford, 431. endeavours to justify the University of Oxford, with relation to the riot there, 519. speaks against the Quaker's bill, and presents a petition against it, 655

Debts; measures for reducing the public debts, IV. 527. state of them, 528, &c. bill for lessening them, 677. debts of the Civil List, 684

De Foe, Daniel, his shortest way with the Dissenters, III. 582

De la Mere, Lord. See Booth, George.

Deleval, Sir Ralph, presides at the Court-martial which tried the E. of Torrington, III. 145. examined in the House of Commons about a letter from the E. of Nottingham, 192. made one of the Commissioners of the Admiralty, 236

Dendermonde, described, III. 751. taken by the Allies, ibid.

Denmark, George Pr. of, created Baron of Oakingham, E. of Kendall, and D. of Cumberland, III. 45. attends K. William in Ireland, 133. is married to the Princess Anne, 534. their issue, ibid. prejudiced against the Whigs, 538. is declared Generalissimo of all the Queen's forces by sea and land, 544. made Lord High-Admiral, 545. a bill for settling a provision upon him, if he survive the Queen, 575, 576. protests against it, 576. is for the Occasional Conformity bill, 581. understood sea-affairs very little, and was imposed upon, 611. negligent in the management of the Admiralty, 678. declared High-Admiral, 792. his Council in the affairs of the Admiralty, ibid. they manage badly, IV. 30. engages in Mr. Harley's party, 35. great complaints against his Council, 41. is thanked by the House of Commons for his diligence in fitting out a fleet when Scotland was threatened with an invasion, 61. dies, 104. his character, ibid.

Denmark, Anne Princess of, 50,000 l. a year settled upon her, III. 52, 120. K. William and Q. Mary uneasy at her requiring a provision, ibid. motion for her maintenance causes the E. of Marlborough's disgrace, 195. Q. Mary falls out with her because she would not dismiss the Countess of Marlborough, 196. retires to Sion-House, 197. not admitted to see her Sister Q. Mary on her death-bed, 263. the King reconciled to her, ibid. how put at the head of the Lords Justices, 280. See Q. ANNE.

Denmark, Frederick IV. K. of, travels through the Courts of Germany and Italy, IV. 143. it is given out that he intended to change his Religion, ibid. attacks Sweden, ibid. and 184. invades Pomerania, 214. takes Sweden, and reduces the Duchy of Bremen, 308. exacts 300,000 l. of the City of Hamburgh, ibid. defeated by the Swedes, 309. the Czar's designs against him, 538. his manifesto against the Czar, 538. treaty between England and Denmark, 617. restores all the places taken from Sweden, and makes peace, 618. treaty between Denmark, Great-Britain, and France, 700

Derwentwater, James Ratcliffe E. of, engaged in the Rebellion, IV. 443. his character, 450. taken prisoner at Preston, 458. brought up to London, and examined, 465. impeached of High-Treason, 482. brought to the bar of the House of Lords, and pleads guilty, 484. his Lady intercedes with the King for mercy, 485. petitions the Parliament in his behalf, 486. he is executed, and his dying speech, 487

Descent, one in France intended, III. 761. one designed by the Pretender in Scotland, IV. 5

Devonshire, William Cavendish E. of, made Lord Steward of the Houshold, III. 39. and Knight of the Garter, 45. his case taken into consideration by the Parliament, 92, 93. created Marquis of Harrington, and D. of Devonshire, 253. made one of the Lords Justices, 280. made Lord Steward, 545. is for declaring war against France, ibid. against the Occasional Conformity bill, 581, 628. has a meeting with some of the eminent Members of the House of Commons, IV. 37. removed from being Lord Steward, 191. his speech on occasion of the D. of Ormond's refusing to fight, 261. made Steward of the Houshold, 404. brings in the bill for Septennial Parliaments, 490. made President of the Council, 500. resigns his place of President of the Council, 525. brings about a reconciliation between the King and the Pr. of Wales, 617. brought again into favour, and made one of the Lords Justices, ibid.

Deynse and Dixmuyde surrender, III. 294. their garrisons treacherously detained by the French, 295

Dissenters, K. William endeavours to have them admitted into civil employments, III. 45. their state at the Revolution, ibid. K. William's great indulgence to them creates jealousies of him, 105. blackened after K. William's death, 578. complaint from the Lower-House of Convocation, for their Teachers administring private Baptism, 686. Schism-bill against them, IV. 359, &c. motion to allow them schools to teach their own children, 362. a design to ease them, 524. encouraged, 551. get the Schism-act repealed, 578. some of them make an ill use of the indulgence shewn to them, 579. a great dispute amongst their Ministers, about subscribing articles of peace, 607. an act for exempting the Protestant Dissenters in Ireland from certain penalties passed in the Parliament of that Kingdom, 60

Deddington

INDEX to the Continuation of the History of England.

Doddington, George, Secretary to the English Commissioners for the Union between England and Scotland, III. 736. made one of the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, IV. 143

Dodwell, Henry, account of him, IV. 254.

Dolben, John, complains to the House of Commons of Dr. Sacheverel's sermons, IV. 151. carries up his impeachment, 152

Dorset, Charles Sackville E. of, Lord Chamberlain, made one of the Lords Justices, III. 280. resigns his office of Chamberlain, 350. his character, ibid.

Dorset, Lionel Cranfield Sackville D. of, made Constable of Dover, and Warden of the Cinque-Ports, IV. 105. removed, 325. made one of the Lords of the Bedchamber to K. George, 401. and Knight of the Garter, 407. made a Duke, 617

Douay besieged and retaken, IV. 171, &c. account of that place, 174

Drake, James, against the Partition treaty, III. 448. his history of the last Parliament, 475, 479. censured, 551

Dubois, Abbot, comes to London, IV. 549. helps to discover the plot against the D. of Orleans, 582

Dumblain, battle of, IV. 459. prisoners taken there, 461, 462

Duncomb, Charles, Receiver-General of the Excise, sent to the Tower for false indorsements on Exchequer bills, III. 373. purchased the manor of Hemsley, ibid.

Dundee, Viscount, acts for K. James in Scotland, III. 64, &c. raises a Rebellion, 68, &c. defeats Mackay, but is slain, 76. his character, ibid.

Dunkirk, address for demolishing it, IV. 117. the French offer to demolish it, 125, 129, 163. is to be demolished, 221, 251, 268. the English take possession of it, 280, &c. an equivalent for the demolition of it, 314, 320. Tugghe presents a petition for preserving that harbour, 327. Mr. Steele's reflection on that petition, ibid. Dunkirk demolished, but a new canal made at Mardyke, 328. Steele's motion about it, 343. and Mr. Walpole's, 344. De Torcy's letter about it, 379. Prior presents a memorial about the demolition of it, 408

Dutch, their charges for K. William's expedition into England repaid, III. 54. six hundred thousand pounds granted them, 98. treaties with them, 91, 102. are thought to be too much favoured by K. William, 189, 212. the service of their fleet at la Hogue, 201, 202. Dutch-Guards; the King's uneasiness at disbanding of them, 387. his message about them, 388. motion for obliging them to leave off trading with France, 724. the bravery of their cavalry at the battle of Ramillies, 747

E.

East-India Company, III. 190. King's message to the Commons about it, 222. proceedings of the House of Commons upon their affairs, 223, &c. obtains a new Charter, 250. their affairs examined by the House of Commons, 269, &c. a new East-India Company erected, 369. petition of the old East-India Company to the House of Commons, 390. the Old and New bribe the Members of Parliament, 439. do not like the proceedings of the House of Commons, 471, 472. these two Companies come to an agreement, 503. public debts due to them, IV. 530, 531. an union proposed between them and the South-Sea Company, 624

East-India Company in Scotland, III. 283, 308. gives a great alarm to that in England, 283. proceedings in the Parliament of Scotland about it, 308. they lay open their grievances before the Parliament of Scotland, 380, &c.

East-India Company settled at Ostend, IV. 672. guaranteed by Spain, 689, &c. suspended, 710. stopped, 711

Eckeron, battle of, III. 619. description of that place, ibid.

Edgcombe, Richard, made one of the Lords of the Treasury, IV. 499. removed from his employment, 525. made one of the Commissioners of the Treasury, 617. appointed one of the Vice-Treasurers of Ireland, 679

Edict of Nantes revoked. III. 36

Edinburgh-Castle kept by the D. of Gordon, III. 68, &c. surrenders, 76. several suspected persons committed to the Castle there, IV. 437. plot to seize that Castle, 438. the heads of the disaffected are summoned to come thither, and surrender themselves, 445. the Rebels march towards that City, 447. some Ministers there refuse to acknowledge King George, 606

Emperor, Leopold, resolves to be master of Transylvania, III. 188. led on by prophecies, and hates Heresy and France, ibid. declares against the Partition treaty, 413, &c. alliance between him, England and Holland, 487. declares war against France and Spain, 546, 564. disorders in his Court, 622. reduced to the last extremities, implores Q. Anne's protection, 653. his ill conduct with regard to Hungary, 668. dies, 704. his character, ibid.

Emperor, Joseph, succeeds his father, his character, III. 704. 500,000 l. lent to him upon a branch of his revenue in Silesia, 729. bent upon the reduction of Hungary, 759. recalls his troops from the Upper Rhine, ibid. makes a treaty for evacuating the Milanese, without the participation of his Allies, IV. 4. conquers Naples also without their consent, 21, &c. the King of France endeavours to unite the Princes and States of Italy in a league against him, 98. difference between him and the Pope, ibid. his troops seize Comachio, and other places possessed by the Pope, ibid. interposes by his Ambassador in favour of the D. of Marlborough, and the Ministry, 190. dies, 203

Emperor, Charles VI, elected and crowned, IV. 214. writes a circular letter to the Electors, upon the receipt of the preliminaries of peace, 224, 225. and another letter to the States, ibid. sends Prince Eugene to England, 236. sends his Plenipotentiaries to the Congress at Utrecht, 247. makes preparations for the campain, 254. the number of men he offered to furnish in divers places, 276. offers to contribute towards the subsistance of the auxiliary troops, 287. disposed to promote a general peace, 304, &c. his Ministers are against signing the treaty of Utrecht, 310. his Ministers had Conferences at Radstadt with the French King's, 337. resolves to conclude his treaty with France, without the intervention of the maritime powers, 338. the King of Spain pretended to have numberless complaints against him, 504. persuades the D. of Savoy to take Sardinia in exchange for Sicily, ibid. treaty between him and K. George, 508. attacked by the Spaniards, 549. the Courts of England and France try to bring about a reconciliation between him and the K. of Spain, ibid. renounces all pretensions to the Crown of Spain, ibid. quadruple alliance concluded with him, 562. peace concluded between him and the Sultan, 565. writes a gracious letter to Admiral Byng, and sends him his picture, 571. enters into a Convention with the D. of Savoy, ibid. sends to Sicily the troops designed for Sardinia, 596. rejects the mediation of the Dutch, 604. continues to take the title of K. of Spain, 615. refuses the sole mediation of K. George, 689. concludes two treaties with Spain, ibid. and a private treaty, 690. had acted with uncommon coldness towards K. George, ibid. denies him the investiture of Bremen and Verden, ibid. and 694. complains that the Court of Great-Britain and France had endeavoured to stir up the Othoman Porte against him, 705. prepares to attack the Dutch in the Netherlands, 709. concludes a peace with Great-Britain, 710. ratifies the Preliminaries, 711

England to furnish twenty thousand men for the general war against France, III. 165. in great danger from the French for want of intelligence, 201. a great corruption throughout England, 218. England guarantee of the Neutrality of Italy, IV. 549. the Spanish squadron sails for England, 583. peace concluded between England and Sweden, 588

English army very sickly in Ireland, III. 133. defeats the Irish. See Boyne. English fleet has an engagement with the French near Beachy, and is worsted, 140. English Ministry act without union, 243. blamed for the ill success at sea, ibid. and 244. English fleets bombards Dieppe, Havre de Grace, &c. 254, 255. English Nation highly inflamed at the King of France's proclaiming the Pretender, 495. very eager for the war with France, 503. their success in America, 594. attack Fort St. Augustin and Guadalupe, ibid. defeat the French at Ramillies, 746. defeated at Almanza, IV. 6, &c. several battalions surrender themselves, 9. the rest retire to Xativa and Alcira, 10. the English alarm the coast of Normandy, 83. the English troops not suffered to march through any of the towns garrisoned by Dutch, in their way to Dunkirk, 274, 282. those in Spain called home, 296. the English too jealous of their liberty to suffer foreign forces, 404

Episcopacy abolished in Scotland, III. 58, 72, 124, &c. Episcopal Clergy in Scotland deprived, 105, &c. See Clergy and Scotland.

Episcopal Clergy in Scotland encouraged by Q. Anne, and presents an address to her, III. 595. the Episcopal party had the majority in the Parliament there, 596

Ernest, Bp. of Osnabrug, created E. of Ulster, and Duke of York and Albany, IV. 500

Essex, Arthur Capel E. of, Committee to inquire into his death, III. 95

Essex, Algernoon Capel E. of, sworn a Privy-Counsellor, IV. 105

Evans, George, created Baron Carbery, IV. 404

Eugene, Prince, of Savoy, goes to Vienna to solicit succours, III. 184. commands the Imperial troops, 330. defeats the Turks at Zenta, 363. marches into Italy, passes the Mincio, and routs the French near Carpi, 484, 485. his attempt upon Cremona, takes Marshal Villeroy prisoner there, 486. defeats the French at the battle of Luzzara, 567. visits the D. of Marlborough, and concerts measures with him, 654. commands a separate army upon the Rhine, 655. his saying about the English forces, ibid. at the battle of Hochstet, 657. ten thousand men taken into the pay of England and Holland, to reinforce his army, 704. has a weak army in Italy, ill provided and ill paid, 705. has an engagement with the D. of Vendosme, ibid. money borrowed in England for his use, 729. marches to the relief of Turin, 758. joins the D. of Savoy, and defeats the French, ibid. commands the Imperial army at the siege of Toulon, IV. 25. he and the D. of Marlborough act with perfect unanimity, 72. his bravery at the battle of Oudenard, 74, 75. lays siege to Lisle, 80. wounded, 83. Q. Anne and the States-General desire that he may be sent to Spain to command in chief, 93. comes to Holland upon proposals of peace made by France, 124. chuses to serve in Flanders with the D. of Marlborough, 133. wounded at the battle of Malplaquet, 137. invests Douay, 171. concerts at Francfort the necessary measures with the Elector of Mentz, 209. comes to England, 236. receives an account of the D. of Marlborough's disgrace, ibid. conducted to Leicester-house, ibid. the Whigs glad, and the Jacobites displeased at his coming, 237. scandalous reflections in the Post-Boy on his mother, ibid. his compliment on the D. of Marlborough, ibid. in the note. said, the D. of Marlborough was always successful, 240. presents a memorial about the Emperor's conduct in the war, 244. loses his nephew, ibid. returns to the Hague, 245. the States give him the supreme command of their army, 255. besieges Quesnoy, 259. detaches troops to make an irruption into France, 276. refuses to give over the siege of Quesnoy, 277. resolves to attack Landrecy, 281. his memorial to the D. of Ormond, 282. his lines at Denain forced by the French, 284. marches to the relief of Douay, 286. defeats the Turks, 548

Exchange, bills of, drawn from Genoa for Spain protested, IV. 193

Exchequer bills, III. 336. false indorsement on them inquired into by the Commons, 373. their currency, 730

Exeter; disputes there about the Trinity, IV. 607

INDEX to the Continuation of the History of England.

Eyles, Sir John, his speech at the General Court of the South-Sea Company, IV. 646

Eyles, Francis, expelled the House of Commons, IV. 634

Eyre, Robert, made Sollicitor-General, IV. 105. advises only the imprisoning Sacheverel, and burning his sermon, 150. made one of the Justices of the Queen's-Bench, and knighted, 192

F.

Faction, one in the Church and State set up, III. 51

Fagel, one of the Dutch Generals, III. 654. commands the Dutch auxiliaries in Portugal, 665. upon no good terms with the Portuguese Generals nor D. Schomberg, 666. made Velt-Marshal General of the Portuguese forces, ibid. his sleeve taken off by a cannon-ball, 706. recalled, ibid. the not taking of Badajox ascribed to him, ibid.

Falkland, Anthony Cary Lord Viscount, sworn of the Privy-Council, III. 195. made one of the Commissioners of the Admiralty, 236. accusation against him by the Admirals, 249

Falmouth, Hugh Boscawen, Lord Viscount, made one of the Treasurers of Ireland, IV. 679

Fellows, Sir John, Sub-Governor of the South-Sea Company, IV. 624. ordered to be taken into custody, 634

Fenwick, Sir John, engaged in the Assassination-plot, III. 312. gets troops ready, 314, 315. seized, 336. his letter to his Lady, ibid. sets up a counter-plot, 337. examined by the House of Commons, 338. bill for attainting him, 339, &c. names of the Members of the House of Commons that were for and against attainting him, 343. beheaded, 346

Ferguson, Robert, enters into a plot against K. William, III. 118, 128. seized, 133. writes in defence of the Yorkshire plotters, 266. offers to make discoveries about the plot in Scotland, 630. discovers an intention of placing the Pretender on the Throne after the Queen's death, ibid. and 636. the Lords offended with his papers, 638, 639

Finch, Daniel Lord, speaks in behalf of R. Steele, IV. 343. made one of the Gentlemen of the Bed-chamber to the Prince of Wales, 402. impeaches the E. of Cornwath, 482. removed from the place of one of the Lords of the Treasury, 487. his speech in Parliament, 523. his speech in behalf of the L. Bolingbroke, 685

Findlater, James Ogilvy E. of, against the malt-tax being extended to Scotland, IV. 317. made Chancellor of Scotland, 328. chosen one of the sixteen Peers, 334

First-Fruits and Tenths given by the Queen for the augmentation of small livings, III. 641. an account of them, ibid. Bp. Burnet instrumental in that, 642. Sir John Holland and Sir Joseph Jekyll were for taking them quite away, but Sir Christopher Musgrave, &c. were for continuing them, ibid.

Fitton —— a zealous Papist, Chancellor of Ireland, III. 77, 87. his character, ibid.

Flanders; campains there, III. 154, 182, 255

Flanders, if lost, Holland and England in danger, III. 189. the House of Commons against sending forces thither, 224

Fleet; the English cannot bring the French to a general engagement, III. 182. inquiries into the conduct of our fleets, 191, &c. 222. K. James endeavours to corrupt some of the Commanders of our fleet, 199, 200. miscarriages of the fleet inquired into by Parliament, 248. the French fleet avoids an engagement with the English, and goes into the Mediterranean, 253. the miscarriages of the fleet inquired into, 349. their proceedings much censured, 355. the English fleet bombards Copenhagen, 410. destroys the French fleet and galleons at Vigo, 570. great complaints about the management of it, 613. the French fleet beaten by the English near Malaga, 664. the English fleet goes to the relief of Barcelona, 752. keeps in the Mediterranean, and blocks up the French in Toulon, 756. takes Alicant, ibid. a fleet prepared with great expedition, upon the news of the Pretender's intended descent in Scotland, IV. 58. a fleet sent into the Baltic, 525, 538. the King's message about the fleet, 561. a strong fleet fitted out by England, 562. the Spanish fleet sails to Sicily, 562. English fleet sent to the Mediterranean, 565. See Byng. they defeat the Spanish fleet, 568. the Spanish fleet sails for England, 583. but is dispersed, 584. an English fleet sent to the Baltic, 589, 618. joins the Swedish fleet, 619. the Russian fleet lands a body of men near Uma, ibid.

Fleetwood, William, Bishop of St. Asaph, his Preface to his four Sermons burnt, IV. 270. his letter to Bishop Burnet, 272. the Queen called him her Bishop, ibid.

Foley, Thomas, appointed Auditor of the Imprest, IV. 328. seconds a motion made by Mr. Hungerford against R. Steele, 342. another motion of his, 343

Fonterabia and Fort-Passage taken by the French, IV. 603

Forces; foreign forces in England, debate about them, III. 227

Forfeited estates, IV. 547. bill for vesting them in Trustees, to be sold for the use of the public, 560

France, K. of. See Lewis XIV.

France; war declared against her by the diet of Ratisbone, Holland, Spain, Brandenburgh, &c. III. 88. and by England, 90. concerts measures with the Jacobites to restore K. James, 139. resolution of the Congress at the Hague to employ 222,000 men against France, 165. famine in France, 244. tries to obtain a peace, ibid. and 257. makes a separate peace with the D. of Savoy, 329. endeavours to set the Prince of Conti on the throne of Poland, 353. tries in vain to resettle the trade with England, 380. her intrigues to secure the Crown of Spain, 384. great rejoicings there upon the news of K. William's death, 542. reduced to straits, 685. Court of France makes proposals for a peace, 763. their offers rejected, 764. they apply to the Pope, ibid. suffers greatly by the frost in 1709, IV. 119. reduced to great extremities, particularly by the general decline of the public credit, 121, &c. renunciation of the Crown of France by the King of Spain, 263. the allies make an irruption into France, 276. peace signed between England and France, 310. the distressed condition of that Kingdom, 349, 371. the Court of France acknowledges K. George for King of Great-Britain, 398, 400. declares war against Spain, 582. four English Gentlemen murdered in France, 676. persecution there, 681. treaty between France, England, and Prussia, 690. and Sweden and Denmark, 705

Frederic IV, K. of Denmark, his manifesto against the Czar, IV. 539. makes preparations against Sweden, but at length agrees to a peace, 589, 616, 617

Frederic, Prince of Hesse-Cassel, elected K. of Sweden, IV. 619

Frederic, Prince, inoculated for the small-pox, IV. 680

Frederickstadt, the K. of Sweden killed before that place, IV. 540

Freeman, Samuel, Dean of Peterborough, protests against the irregularities of the Lower-House of Convocation, III. 733

Freind, Sir John, ingaged in the Lancashire plot, III. 365. and in the Assaffination-plot, 312. had a Commission from K. James, 314. tried and executed, 324. absolved by Jer. Collier, &c. 325

Freind, Dr. his account of the E. of Peterborough's conduct in Spain, III. 707, &c.

French attack the Spanish Netherlands, III. 35. surprize Courtray and Dixmuyden, and besiege and take Luxemburg, 36. invade Germany, and take Philipsburg, ibid. land in Ireland, and assist K. James, 79. annoy our trade, 102. their fleet enters the Channel, and engage the English near Beachy, 139, &c. remain masters at sea, 141. burn Tinmouth, 143. endeavour to intercept the Turkish fleet, 182. lose several officers of distinction at Steenkirk, 209. surprize the D. of Wirtemberg in his camp, but are beaten by the Landgrave of Hesse-Cassel, 213. gain the battle of Landen, 238. take Heidelberg, and commit great barbarities in the Palatinate, 241 endeavour to raise commotions in England on account of the coin, 303. their plot to invade England, 312. offer to make peace with England, Holland, &c. 327. resolve to make peace, 351. their preliminaries, ibid. and see Ryswick. slow in disbanding their army, 364. they bribe some of our Members of Parliament, 439. involve us in contentions at home, 447. their insolent behaviour towards the Spaniards, 484. corrupt most Courts, 486. try to engage the Turks in a new war with the Emperor, 568. encourage the troubles in Poland, 626. their lines forced by the D. of Marlborough, 699. and at Haguenau by Prince Lewis of Baden, 703. take Nice, 705. defeated at the battle of Ramillies, 746, &c. besiege Turin, 757, &c. defeated at the battle of Turin, 759, &c. make a descent on Nevis and St. Christopher, 791. their great success on the Upper Rhine, IV. 13. lay several places under contribution, 14. retire with great precipitation before the D. of Marlborough, and cannot be brought to an engagement, 19, 21. their fisheries in North America damaged by Capt. Underwood, 30. the French design to recover by surprize and treachery, the places they had lost in the Netherlands, 70. take Ghent and Bruges, 71. defeated at the battle of Oudenarde, 74, 75. set on foot negotiations for a peace, 120, &c. their insincere offers, 125, &c. defeated at the battle of Malplaquet, 136, &c. make new overtures for a peace, 144. and 163, 219. See Peace. they insert the E. of Sunderland's removal in their Gazette, 190. their lines surprized by the D. of Marlborough, 210. their expedition to Brasil, and unsuccessful attempt on the Leeward-Islands, 214, 215. their proposals at Utrecht rejected with indignation by the Allies, 248, &c. defeat the Allies at Denain, and take Marchiennes, Douay, Quesnoy and Bouchain, 284, &c. destroy the English Sugar-Islands, 293. debate in the House of Lords about their buying ships in England, 655

French Protestants encouraged to come into England, III. 89. Refugees petition the House of Commons and the King for relief, 192

Fulham, act for building a bridge between that town and Putney, IV. 696

Fund-Act, IV. 535. aggregate, sinking and South-Sea funds, 707

G.

Galleons; some Spanish ones destroyed, IV. 101

Galloway taken, III. 179

Galway, —— de Ruvigny E. of, K. William's General, and Envoy into Savoy, III. 329. made one of the Lords Justices in Ireland, 350. grant of lands to him there, 399. appointed Commander of the English forces in Portugal, 667. his exploits there, 705. loses his right hand, 706. his proceedings and conquests in Spain, 752, 753. takes Alcantara, ibid. is joined by all the troops both English and Dutch, IV. 5, 6. his Narrative, ibid. is defeated at the battle of Almanza, 8, 9. wounded, 9. watches the D. of Orleans's motions, 11. that Duke makes him some proposals, in order to his being made K. of Spain, ibid. attempts the relief of Lerida, ibid. his list of the forces at the battle of Almanza, 53, 54. his conduct severely examined by the House of Commons, ibid. his bravery at the battle of Caya, where he has a horse shot under him, 141. orders forces to Catalonia, 142. returns home, 183. is removed from being Commander in Portugal, 192. blamed for the miscarriages in the war in Spain, 196, 197. was for an offensive war, 197. examined in the House of Lords about it, ibid. blamed for the loss of the battle of Almanza, and censured for giving the precedence to the Portuguese in Spain, 199. appointed one of the Lords Justices in Ireland, 478

Garrard, Sir Samuel, desires Dr. Sacheverel to print his sermon, IV. 150. disowns it, 152

Garroway, Mr. his speech in the House of Commons, III. 97

Gastrel, Francis, Bp. of Chester, his speech at Dr. Atterbury's trial, IV. 669

Gaultier, Abbot, makes overtures for a peace between England and France, IV. 219. employed employed to convey Count Tallard's letters between Paris and Nottingham, ibid. Mr. St. John and Mr. Harley had private meetings with him, ibid. betrays Count Gallas, and is made an Abbot, 224. his negotiations at London, 252, &c. comes from London to Utrecht, ibid. promoted the Pretender's intereſt, ibid. his memorial about the renunciation, 263. goes to Paris along with the L. Bolingbroke, 288. ſwears falſly, 289. returns to London, 290. employed to tranſact the Pretender's affairs in England, 377, 378. leaves England, 399

George Lewis, Prince of Hanover, afterwards K. GEORGE I, comes and makes his addreſſes to the Lady Anne, III. 534. a report of K. William's intending to get him declared his immediate Succeſſor, 550, 551. reaſons for inviting him over, 553. diſarms the D. of Wolfenbuttle, 558. inſtalled Knight of the Garter, 590. does not readily come into the peace of Utrecht, IV. 312. concludes a treaty with the States-General, 347. a writ demanded for him to ſit in the Houſe of Peers as D. of Cambridge, 351. a rumour of his intention to come over to England, ibid. reaſons and neceſſity of his coming and reſiding in Great-Britain, 357. orders given to the Heralds, &c. to be ready to proclaim him on the Queen's demiſe, 369. account of him, and his character before he aſcended the Britiſh Throne, 393. is proclaimed in England, Scotland, and Ireland, 394. receives the news of it with great ſerenity, 401. arrives in England, ibid. makes his public entry, 402. was a powerful Prince, and had on foot a good number of troops, 404. expreſſed at his firſt coming a diſlike of the Tories, and his attachment to the Whigs, ibid. abſolute maſter in his German Dominions, 405. his declaration in Council about Toleration, 405, 406. is crowned with great ſolemnity, 407. applies himſelf to get the article of the treaty of Utrecht, relating to Dunkirk, to be put in execution, 407, 408. and to have the faults in the treaty of Spain rectified, 408. his directions concerning Preachers, 413, &c. his proclamation for calling a new Parliament objected againſt in the Houſe of Commons, 419. debates about his Civil Liſt, 422. the Dutchies of Bremen and Verden are made over to him, 424. receives ſome intelligence of the Rebellion, 433. the E. of Mar's letter to him, 436, &c. great interceſſion uſed with him in favour of the condemned Lords, but in vain, 485. his anſwer to the Lords addreſs in their favour, 486. the clauſe in the act of Settlement againſt his going abroad repealed, 499. in what reſpect he was like the D. of Orleans, 506. the K. of Sweden plots to dethrone him, ibid. recommends to the Commons the leſſening of the public debts, 526. his anſwer to the Czar's memorial, 540. guarantee of the neutrality in Italy, 549. tries to bring about an accommodation between the Emperor and the K. of Spain, ibid. difference between him and the Prince of Wales, 550. had, ever ſince his Acceſſion to the Throne, declared for Toleration, 551, 578. conſults the Judges about the diſpute between him and the Prince, 555. a deſign upon his life by John Shepheard, ibid. publiſhes articles for the regulation and government of the army, 559. mediates a peace between the Emperor and the Turks, 565. his meſſage to the Commons about declaring war againſt Spain, 581. and to the Houſe of Lords, ibid. his meſſage to the Houſe of Lords about the Peerage, 585. refuſes the mediation of the States for a peace between England and Spain, 604. forms projects to take Corunna or Peru, ibid. intercedes for the Proteſtants in Germany, 605. his meſſage about the Royal and London Aſſurances, 613. the Czar's memorial againſt him, 615. reconciliation between him and the Prince of Wales, 617. was well ſkilled in negotiations, and looked into every thing himſelf, 619. publiſhes a proclamation againſt the bubbles, 621. expreſſes ſent to haſten his return to England upon the falling of the South-Sea, 628. his anſwer to the Commons addreſs about the South-Sea Directors, 645. his proclamation about the Hell-fire Clubs, 646. his directions about the Trinity, ibid. his meſſage about the ſubſidy given to Sweden, 647. and about the debt of the Civil Liſt, 648. his meſſage to the Houſe of Lords about the Pretender's manifeſto, 664. founds Profeſſorſhips of Modern Hiſtory in the two Univerſities, 680. his ſpeech to the Commiſſioners of the Great Seal, 683. his meſſage to the Commons about the Maſters in Chancery, ibid. and about the debts of the Civil Liſt, 684. the ſole mediation at Cambray is offered him, which he refuſes, 689. alarmed at the private treaty between the Emperor and Spain, 690. his anſwer to the Commons addreſs about the treaty of Hanover, 694. his meſſage to the Commons about an extraordinary ſupply, 695. his letters to the Czarina, 697. ſets out for his German Dominions, is taken ill, dies at Oſnabrug, and is buried at Hanover, 711, 712. his circumſtances and character, 712

George Auguſtus, Prince, arrives in England, IV. 401. is declared Prince of Wales, 399, 406. the Tories move to have a hundred thouſand pounds per ann. ſettled upon him, 422. is made Guardian of the Realm, 500. takes a progreſs through ſome part of the Kingdom, 502. difference between him and the King his Father, 550. is ordered to quit St. James's, ibid. not appointed Regent, and retires into the country, 588. who promoted this difference, 609. the King is reconciled to him, 617

Gertruydenberg; negotiations for a peace there, IV. 164, 165, 169. a motion to examine them, 262

Ghent; a deſcription of that place, IV. 70. ſurprized by the French, 71. by the Confederates, 91, 92. the Britiſh troops make themſelves maſters of it, and of Bruges, 283. and refuſe to admit any Dutch troops, 297

Gibraltar taken by the Engliſh, III. 664. beſieged in vain by the Spaniards and French, 667, &c. 705. yielded to England, IV. 339, 392. the Spaniards deſire to have it reſtored, 600, 605. Gibraltar and Port-Mahon, report of Spain giving ſome places in Peru in exchange for them, 620. thoſe places abſolutely yielded by Spain to Great-Britain, 650. the reſtitution of them inſiſted upon by Spain, 674, 690, 699. the Spaniards prepare to recover them, 694, 699. they make preparations for the ſiege of Gibraltar, and beſiege it actually, 709. whether there was a promiſe to reſtore it, 701, 703

Gildon, Charles, publiſhes a letter from Sir Rowland Gwynne to the E. of Stamford, for which he is fined, III. 722, &c.

Ginckle, Lieutenant-General, at the battle of Boyne, III. 137. at the ſiege of Limerick, 147. left Commander of the army in Ireland, 150. Commander in chief, 174. is created E. of Athlone, and has lands granted him in Ireland, 181. is thanked by the Houſe of Commons, ibid. Preſident of the Court-Martial to try Grandval, 210. General of the Dutch horſe, 288. inveſts Namur, 289, 295, 296. burns the French magazine at Givet, 326. commands a Dutch army, 560. repulſes the French, 561. was inclined to cautious but feeble counſels, 562

Gironne taken by the French, III. 256. IV. 182

Glouceſter, William D. of, his Houſhold ſettled, III. 380. dies, 409

Godolphin, Sidney Lord, made one of the Lords of the Treaſury, III. 40. his character, ibid. made firſt Commiſſioner of the Treaſury, 163, 253, 437. removed, 504. is made Lord High-Treaſurer, 544. is for the Occaſional Conformity-bill, 581. but thought it unſeaſonable, 628. is for ſtriking the flags in the ports of Portugal, 624. his proceedings reconciled many to him, ibid. is for ſettling the Succeſſion in Scotland, 648. reflected upon for permitting the act of ſecurity in Scotland to paſs, 651, &c. attacked by the Tories, and preſerved by the Whigs, 652. is againſt tacking the Occaſional Conformity-bill to the land-tax bill, 672. his ſpeech, in anſwer to the E. of Rocheſter's, againſt the exportation of Coin, 674. K. Charles writes a letter to him, 710. declares himſelf in favour of the Whigs, 716. the Tories very angry with him, 721. is againſt adjourning the Parliament of Scotland, and orders the Union to be compleated, 776. created Viſcount Rialton, and Earl Godolphin, 780. his ſpeech in the debate about the Union, 780. his ſpeech in the debate about the Union, 781. exerts himſelf in the affair of the Union, 790. threatened to be impeached; ibid. appointed Lord High-Treaſurer of Great-Britain, 792. Mr. Harley begins to act againſt him, IV. 34; and to create jealouſies of him in the Whigs, 36. he threatens to quit the Queen's ſervice, if Mr. Harley had ſo much intereſt with her Majeſty, ibid. promiſes that preferments ſhould be beſtowed on men well principled, ibid. backs the motion for encouraging trade to the Weſt-Indies, 40. refuſes to ſerve any longer, if Mr. Harley was not removed, 55. the Queen not much concerned at it, ibid. it was part of Mr. Harley's ſcheme to remove him, ibid. offers the Bank a conſiderable ſum of money to preſerve its credit, 61. the Whigs jealous of him, 110. adheres to the Scotch Miniſters, and ſupports them, 112. deſcribed in Sacheverel's ſermon under the name of Volpone, 150, 151. ſpeaks to the Queen about her recommendation of Hill, 185. the Queen's letter to him about the D. of Shrewsbury being made Lord Chamberlain, 187. his letter to her Majeſty upon that point, ibid. diſmiſſed from the office of Lord-Treaſurer, 190. his death and character, 298

Gordon, George D. of, Governor of Edinburgh-Caſtle, III. 64. refuſes to deliver it up to K. William, 67. amuſes the Convention, 69. yields up Edinburgh-Caſtle, 76

Gordon, Ducheſs of, ſends the Faculty of Advocates a medal of the Pretender, IV. 217.

Gortz, Baron, IV. 507. ſeized, ibid. his letters, 509, &c. forms the project of making a peace between Sweden and Ruſſia, 539. his letters publiſhed, ibid. carries the K. of Sweden the plan of peace between him and the Czar, 540. had an interview with the Czar at Loo, 616. arreſted and put to death, 541.

Gower, Colonel, the Commons adviſe the King to remove him, III. 225, 227. continued, 233

Graſton, Henry Fitz-Roy D. of, at the ſiege of Cork, III. 150. killed, 151

Graſton, Charles Fitz-Roy D. of, appointed one of the Lords Juſtices of Ireland, IV. 478. made Colonel of the royal regiment of horſe-guards, 503. made Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, 617. choſen Knight of the Garter, 651. made Lord-Chamberlain, 679

Graham, Richard, one of the wicked Solicitors employed in the Reigns of K. Charles II and James II, III. 96, 113. excepted out of the Indemnity, 132

Grandval, Mr. Bartholomew de Liniere de, enters into a plot to aſſaſſinate K. William, III. 209, &c. executed, 212

Grants; bill to examine thoſe made ſince the Revolution, IV. 245

Granville, George, made Secretary at War, in the room of R. Walpole, IV. 192. created Baron Lanſdown, 234

Gregg, William, his treaſonable correſpondence with France, IV. 47. a Committee of Lords appointed to examine him, ibid. tried and condemned, 48. executed, 52. his dying ſpeech ſaid to have been drawn up by Mr. Harley, ibid.

Griffin, Edward Lord, proceedings againſt him, III. 113

Guernſey, Heneage Finch E. of, his ſpeech in the debates about the Union, III. 786. urges to have the ſtate of the Nation taken into conſideration, IV. 40. ſpeaks in Dr. Sacheverel's behalf, 158, 159, &c.

Guernſey, Heneage Finch Lord, his ſpeech in Parliament, IV. 227. created E. of Aylesford, 407

Guiſcard, Marquiſs de, account of him, and his project for a deſcent into France, III. 761, &c. examined about it, ibid. expected to have found a great ſupport in Mr. St. John, IV. 201. being diſappointed he correſponds with the Court of France, ibid. apprehended, ſtabs Mr. Harley, and dies of his wounds, 202, &c.

Guy, Henry, Secretary of the Treaſury, turned out of his place, and ſent to the Tower for bribery, III. 268. concerned in corrupting the Members of the Houſe of Commons, 276

Guy, Thomas, founds an hoſpital for incurables, IV. 686

Gwyne, Sir Rowland, removed from the place of Treaſurer of their Majeſty's Chamber, III. 193. examined before the Council, for

INDEX to the Continuation of the History of England.

for words reflecting on Lord Viſcount Sidney, ibid. and 194

Guyn, Francis, one of the Committee for inſpecting the books of the Chamberlain of London, &c. 269

Gyllemburg, Count, the Swediſh Reſident, enters into a conſpiracy to ſet the Pretender on the Engliſh Throne, IV. 506. ſecured, 507. author of a libel, ibid. ſcheme of his Conſpiracy, 509. extracts of his letters, ibid. &c. releaſed, 540

H.

Haddington, John Hamilton E. of, was for the Union, III. 771

Haguenau, the French lines forced there, III. 703. taken by the Confederates, 764. a deſcription of that place, ibid.

Halliſax, George Saville Marquiſs of, made Lord Privy-Seal, III. 38, 39. hated both by Whigs and Tories, ibid. addreſs to remove him from the King's preſence and Councils, 97. quits the office of Speaker of the Houſe of Lords, 112. reſigns the Privy-Seal, 114, 115. joins with the Tories, ibid. oppoſes the Court, 231

Halliſax, Charles Mountague Marquiſs of, left out of the Privy-Council, III. 545. one of the Managers againſt the Occaſional Conformity bill, 581. his ſpeech about the danger of the Church, 725. cauſes the public records and offices to be put into good order, and moves that the Queen ſhould buy the Cottonian library, 731. his ſpeeches about the Union, 781, 785, &c. moves for a Committee to receive propoſals for encouraging the trade to the Weſt-Indies, IV. 40. his ſpeech in relation to the affairs of Spain, 45. his ſpeeches at Dr. Sacheverel's tryal, 158, &c. ſpeaks againſt the reſumption of K. William's grants, 245. moves for an addreſs againſt the offers of France, 249. complains of the D. of Ormond's refuſing to fight, 260

Halliſax, Charles Mountague Lord, has a hand in the Britiſh Merchant, IV. 316. his ſpeech about the Union, 318. repreſented the danger threatening the Proteſtant Succeſſion, 345. his ſpeech about the Catalans, 347. moves to have the Pretender removed out of Lorrain, 349. a conſultation at his houſe, 351. made one of the Commiſſioners of the Treaſury, 406. created E. of Halliſax, 407. and Knight of the Garter, ibid. his character of Bp. Burnet, 419. his death and character, 424

Hamilton, William Douglas, or Hamilton D. of, Preſident at the Scottiſh Lords meeting in London, III. 63. choſen Preſident of the Convention in Scotland, 64. his character, 73. appointed High-Commiſſioner, 74

Hamilton, James Hamilton D. of, was for calling a new Parliament in Scotland, III. 556, 557. ſets up for patron of the Epiſcopal Clergy, 595. the Conſpiracy in Scotland ſaid to be a contrivance to ruin him, 634. his part in it, 637. keeps a correſpondence with the Court at St. Germain, 648. preſents a reſolve in Parliament for a treaty with England, 650. his motion for limitations of government, ibid. declares he ſhould be one of the firſt to draw his ſword againſt a Popiſh Succeſſor, 651. is at the head of the Cavaliers, 690. preſents again a reſolve for a previous treaty with England, 691. moves for enacting limitations, 692. makes a ſpeech in his own vindication about the plot, 694. preſents a clauſe about the Union, 695. deſerts the Cavaliers, 696. letters ſent to him from the Pretender, 767, 768. was againſt the Union, 770. his debates about it, 771, &c. propoſes the renewing of the motion for ſettling the Crown on the Houſe of Hanover, 773, 774. encouraged the tumults againſt the Union, 775. does not oppoſe it at laſt, and makes his terms with the Court, 776. how far he went into the Pretender's intereſt, IV. 62, 63. choſen one of the ſixteen Peers, 64. artfully ſaves himſelf and his friends, 66. ſets himſelf in oppoſition to the D. of Queensberry's power, 110. created D. of Brandon, but a caveat is entered againſt his patent, 219, 229. his patent examined, 229. made Maſter of the Ordnance, and appointed Ambaſſador extraordinary to France, 296. killed in a duel, 297

Hamilton, Lieutenant-General, ſent over to command in Ireland, III. 77. diſappoints K. William's expectations, and joins with his enemies, ibid. routs the Proteſtants in Ireland, 80. taken priſoner at the battle of the Boyne, 137

Hampden, Richard, made Privy-Counſellor, III. 38. and one of the Commiſſioners of the Treaſury, 40. moves for a further ſupply, 97. made Chancellor of the Exchequer, 120. his ſpeech about the negotiation of peace, IV. 246. moves for the Allies to guarantee the Proteſtant Succeſſion, 272

Hampden, John, moves for an addreſs for a war with France, III. 89. account of his proſecution and fine, 114. concerned in the D. of Monmouth's affair, ibid. his character and ſpeech, ibid. his ſpeech againſt the Miniſtry, 115, 116

Hanmer, Sir Thomas, ſpeaks for the treaty of commerce, IV. 315, cauſes the bill for approving it to miſcarry, 319. moves for an addreſs of thanks for the treaties of peace and commerce, ibid. choſen Speaker of the Houſe of Commons, 338. his ſpeech about the danger of the Proteſtant Succeſſion, 354. his ſpeech upon preſenting the Civil Liſt and Lottery bills, 397

Hanover, Houſe of, put into the Succeſſion to the Crown, III. 55. raiſed to the Electoral dignity, 217. deſigned for the Throne of England, 410. Hanover Succeſſion. See Succeſſion. pretended deſign to bring them in before the Princeſs of Denmark, 502

Hanover, George Elector of, commands the Imperial army, and beats the French, IV. 14. adviſes the Court of England to ſend the D. of Marlborough to the K. of Sweden, 15. commands again in the Empire, 100. acknowledged Elector of Brunſwick Lunenburg, 101. commands on the Rhine, 140. his memorial, 225. his Succeſſion ſecured at the treaty of Utrecht, 267. offers to maintain, at his own expence, half of the troops he had in the ſervice of Great-Britain, 287. refuſes to come into the Britiſh meaſures, 294

Hanover, George Auguſtus Electoral Prince of, his great bravery at the battle of Oudenarde, IV. 74

Harcourt, Simon, carries up to the Houſe of Lords an impeachment againſt the Lord Sommers, Orford, and Halliſax, III. 459. reports the Lord Haverſham's ſpeech, 467

Harcourt, Sir Simon, made a Privy-Counſellor, III. 545. and Sollicitor-General, 554. draws up artfully the bill for enacting the Union, 787. made Attorney-General, 792. tries to engage the Tories in the Queen's intereſt, IV. 38. reſigns his place, 56. is Council for Dr. Sacheverel, 154. made Attorney-General, 191. and Lord-Chancellor, ibid. complained againſt by the E. of Rocheſter, 195. his ſpeech to the E. of Oxford, when ſworn Lord-Treaſurer, 202. created Baron of Stanton-Harcourt, 219. author of the advice to the October Club, 234. declared Lord High-Chancellor, 311. rectifies a miſtake concerning the Regency, 329. obtains a pardon for L. Bolingbroke, 674

Hare, Dr. Francis, his letter about the management of the war, III. 764. his pamphlet intitled, The Allies, &c. defended, IV. 28. his thankſgiving-ſermon, 70, 90. his book intitled, Negotiations for a treaty of peace, &c. 120. his letters to a Tory Member, 138, 144, 147, 168. vindicates the barrier-treaty, 241

Harley, Robert, one of the Commiſſioners of the public accounts, III. 162. his character, 238. brings in the bill for frequent Parliaments, 260. was for the land-bank, 322. is againſt Sir John Fenwick's bill of Attainder, 343. choſen Speaker, 438. his character, ibid. moves for the ſettling of ſome conditions of Government, before the bill of Succeſſion paſſed, 443. makes the E. of Rocheſter more ſubmiſſive, 488. choſen Speaker again, 498, and 572. made Secretary of State, 647. in the Queen's confidence, 780. was for pacific meaſures, ibid. gains great credit with the Queen, and begins to ſet up for himſelf, without the Lord-Treaſurer, IV. 34, 35. aſſiſted in that by Mrs. Maſham, ibid. created jealouſies in the Whigs of the D. of Marlborough and L. Godolphin, 36. tries to engage the chief of the Tories in the Queen's intereſt, 38. was for having the Parliament to be an old one, 39. Gregg's affair does him a great prejudice, 52. reſigns his place of Secretary of State, 55. the D. of Marlborough and L. Godolphin refuſe to ſerve, if he continued any longer in that poſt, ibid. part of his new ſcheme was to remove the L. Godolphin, ibid. his intrigues with the Queen, 165, &c. his ſpeeches at Dr. Sacheverel's trial, 152, &c. cabals with Mrs. Maſham, 187, 188. made Commiſſioner, Chancellor, and Under-Treaſurer of the Exchequer, 190, 191. ſends Agents in the City of London to raiſe money, 193. his deſigns, ibid. the Tories are jealous of him, and form an oppoſition againſt him, 201. is ſtabbed by the Marquiſs de Guiſcard, ibid. this attempt diſconcerts the party formed againſt him, 202. becomes Prime Miniſter, ibid. created Baron of Wigmore, and E. of Oxford and Mortimer, and made Lord-Treaſurer, ibid. had private aſſurances of advantages from Spain, when he formed the South-Sea project, 219. reſolves to make a peace, ibid. his ſpeech in Parliament, 227. blamed by his friends for not diſplacing all the Whigs, 235. his ſpeech about the reſumption of K. William's grants, 246. his ſpeech on the D. of Ormond's refuſing to fight, 261. miſunderſtanding between him and the L. Bolingbroke, 295. Mr. Prior's letters to him, 306. concerned in giving up the fiſhery of Newfoundland, ibid. &c. orders the Britiſh Plenipotentiaries to ſign a peace with France, 310. his oppoſition to the Pretender's being removed out of Lorrain, 322. inſtalled Knight of the Garter, 328. hated both by Whigs and Tories, and upon ill terms with L. Bolingbroke, notwithſtanding which he brings his own ſcheme to bear, ibid. raiſes a million in two or three days, 329. L. Bolingbroke, Secretary Bromley, and Sir William Wyndham, gain the aſcendant over him, upon which he thinks of retiring, 335. endeavours to ſupport the Bank, 336. moves for a bill to make it treaſon to bring any foreign troops into the Kingdom, 345. vindicates the peace, 349. and his paying a yearly ſum to the Highlanders, 350. his letter to the Elector of Brunſwick, 358. doubtful whether he was for or againſt the Schiſm-bill, which he had caſtrated, 360. kept to himſelf the principal direction of domeſtic affairs, and diſpoſal of places, and advanced his children, 266, 267. endeavours to reconcile himſelf to the Whigs, to gain E. Cowper's friendſhip, and to remove L. Bolingbroke, 367. his attachment to the Houſe of Hanover the cauſe of his removal, ibid. goes to wait upon K. George at Greenwich, but is not taken notice of, 401. erects a Chamberlain's Court in Scotland, 403. attends at the King's Coronation, 407. his conduct very extraordinary, 418. takes his ſeat in the Houſe of Lords, 421. impeached of high-treaſon, 427. his ſpeech in his own defence, 431. he is carried to the Tower, 432. debate in the Houſe of Commons on his anſwer, 434. preſents a petition to the Houſe of Lords, 541. his trial, ibid. he is diſcharged, 545. forbid the Court, ibid. excepted out of the act of Grace, 546. his ſpeech upon the mutiny-bill, 557. and on the repeal of the Schiſm-bill, 579. is againſt the Peerage-bill, 585. he dies, 680. his character, ibid.

Haverſham, John Thompſon Lord, words of his at a Conference between the Lords and Commons excepted againſt, III. 466, 467. his anſwer to the Commons, 472. one of the Lords of the Admiralty, 480. his ſpeech for inviting over the next Succeſſor to the Crown, 719. moves that the miſcarriages of the laſt campain, occaſioned by the Allies, might be inquired into, 723

Haverſham, Maurice Thompſon E. of, his ſpeeches in the debates about the Union, III. 783, 786. was an Occaſional Conformiſt, 786. his ſpeech about the ſtate of the Nation, IV. 40. and the affairs of Spain, 45. his ſpeeches about the Scottiſh Invaſion, 112. his account of it, 113. his ſpeeches at Dr. Sacheverel's trial, 157, 159

Havre de Grace bombarded, III. 456

Heathcote, Sir Gilbert, Governor of the Bank, IV. 190. endeavours uſed to put off his being choſen Lord-Mayor, but he is choſen notwithſtanding, 192. inſulted, 193. ſworn in Lord-Mayor, but inſulted again, 194. is againſt addreſſing the Queen about the peace, 273

INDEX to the Continuation of the History of England.

Heidelberg taken and burnt by the French, III. 241

Heinſius, Penſionary, his ſpeech againſt a peace, IV. 290

Herbert, Arthur, firſt Commiſſioner of the Admiralty, his character, III. 41. his engagement with the French at Bantry-Bay, 91. created E. of Torrington, 92. attempts to ſurprize Cork, 102

Herbert, Henry, made Baron Herbert of Cherburg, III. 252

Heſſe-Caſſel, Landgrave of, beats the French before Rhineſeld, III. 213. commands part of the German army, 240

High-Church-men had a great confidence in the E. of Rocheſter, III. 481. complain of the Convocation not ſetting, 523

Highlanders in Scotland do not declare themſelves, but provide powder and ball, IV. 416. attempt to ſurprize Edinburgh-Caſtle, 438. cannot be perſuaded to enter England, 454. had been tutored by the E. of Winton, and told, that if they entered England, they would be all cut to pieces, or taken and ſold for ſlaves, ibid. diſguſted at being joined with Papiſts in Lancaſhire, 456. See Rebels. Act for diſarming them, 686

High-Treaſon; bill for regulating trials in caſes of High-Treaſon, III. 191, 221, &c.

Hill, Abigail, account of her, and her father, and family, IV. 34. raiſed by the Ducheſs of Marlborough, ibid. married to Mr. Maſham. See Maſham, ibid.

Hill, John, an account of him, IV. 34. raiſed and taken care of by the Ducheſs of Marlborough, ibid. the Queen writes to the D. of Marlborough to give him a regiment, 185. gives him a penſion, and makes him a General, 186. he commands the forces in the Canada expedition, 215. made Lieutenant of the Tower, 234. is Brigadier, and commands the forces that were to take poſſeſſion of Dunkirk, 280

Hiſtory, Modern, Profeſſors of it founded, IV. 679, 680

Hoadly, Benjamin, his ſermon about reſiſtance, III. 726. his ſermon before the Lord-Mayor, IV. 150. ſeveral books written againſt him, ibid. Dr. Sacheverel reflects upon him, ibid. votes of the Commons in his favour, 152. vindicates the Revolution, ibid. the mob threaten to pull down his Church and Houſe, 155. Biſhop of Bangor (now of Wincheſter) publiſhes his Preſervative and Sermon, 536. repreſentation of the Convocation about them, with his anſwer, ibid. &c. his ſpeech in Parliament, 579

Hochſtet, a deſcription of that place, and of the battle near it, III. 657

Holland; account of its Government, III. 31, &c.

Holland, States of, require all that had been declared Rebels in England to depart their Dominions, III. 394. See States.

Holſtein, attacked by the Danes, III. 419

Holt, John, Lord Chief-Juſtice, his arguments in the Bankers caſe, III. 404. refuſes the Great Seal, 406. ſworn of the Privy-Council, IV. 105. his death and character, 156

Hoſier, Francis, ſails with a ſquadron to the Weſt-Indies, IV. 698

Howe, John, made Vice-Chamberlain to Q. Mary, III. 39. moves for an addreſs to the King to remove the Marquiſſes of Caermarthen and Halliſax from his Preſence and Counſels, 97

Hudſon's-Bay left to the Engliſh, IV. 314, 391

Hume, E. of, letters ſent to him by the Pretender, III. 767. dies, 768

Hungary, a Conſpiracy there, III. 486. the inhabitants oppreſſed, ibid. an inſurrection there, 622. malecontents there make a great progreſs, 653, 668. miſuſed by the Court of Vienna, 669. treaty with them, ibid. ſupported by France, ibid. routed, ibid. almoſt intirely ruined, 715

Huntington, Theophilus Haſtings E. of, proteſts againſt the Succeſſion-bill, III. 445

Huy taken by the Confederates, III. 256. and 620. a deſcription of it, ibid. taken by the French, 698. and by the Allies, 699

I.

Jacobites concert meaſures with France for K. James's Reſtoration, III. 139. keep out of the way for fear of being inſulted, 143. their Leaders ſeized, ibid. their plot for reſtoring K. James, 166. an artifice of theirs in Scotland, to induce the King to diſguſt the Preſbyterians, 181, 182. take the oaths, ibid. ſome reputed ſuch put into places, 190. enter into a plot for aſſaſſinating K. William, 196. grow outrageous, 218. induſtrious in their plots againſt the Government, 258. make rejoicings on the pretended Prince of Wales's birth-day, 281. endeavour to diſtreſs the Government, 303. eſpecially on account of the coin, 305. and on the King's diſowning the act for the Scottiſh Eaſt-India Company, 309. elevated at the thoughts of the Aſſaſſination-plot, 313. ready to take up arms, 314. divided into Compounders and Non-Compounders, 337. enraged at the K. of France's giving up K. James's intereſt, 361. addreſs of the Commons againſt them, 389. aſſert that K. William was a Papiſt, 390. endeavour to make an advantage of the affair at Darien, 393, 407. buſy in Scotland, 497. their hopes revive on the D. of Gloceſter's death, and the Partition-treaty, 421, &c. flock into Scotland, 596. employed, which brings a jealouſy, 611. in the plot in Scotland, 629. their ſurmiſes with regard to the act of Succeſſion in Scotland, 648. pretend the Church was in danger, 715. are againſt the Union, 770. ſome ſaid there was none in the Nation, IV. 35, 60. talk of a new Invaſion on Scotland and Ireland, 108. encouraged, 186. run to Court, ibid. impudent in Scotland, 217. their deſign in preſenting the Pretender's medal to the Faculty of Advocates, 218. buſy in England, ibid. publiſh an oath to an Invader, &c. ibid. elated at the proſpect of a peace, and congratulated by the Dauphin upon it, 225. promote addreſſes for diſſolving the Union, 412. carry on their deſigns in Scotland with ſecrecy and order, 433. importune the L. Kenmure to take arms for the Pretender, 445. their number increaſes, 501

K. JAMES II, offered to throw himſelf into the E. of Danby's hands, III. 39. the annual revenue of the Crown during his reign, 51. lands in Ireland, 53, 80. letter of the Biſhops in Scotland to him, 58. a letter from him to the Convention in Scotland, 67, 68. his violation of the fundamental laws and conſtitutions of Scotland, 71, &c. Commiſſions from him brought to Scotland, whereupon the Convention there puts out a proclamation againſt him, 73. his reception at the Court of France, 78. reaſons for his not meeting with ſo much encouragement from France as he expected, 79. the K. of France lends him, however, troops and money, ibid. makes a ſecret treaty with him, 80. comes to Cork, and thence to Dublin, and publiſhes five proclamations, ibid. uſes the Proteſtants very ill, ibid. comes before Londonderry, ibid. goes to meet his Parliament at Dublin, 81. his ſpeech, 84, 85. his declaration to the Iriſh, 85. paſſes the bill of attainder in Ireland, 87. his proceedings againſt the Univerſity of Dublin, 88. ſome letters of his intercepted, 97. ſends a ſupply to his friends in Scotland, 121. a bill brought in for abjuring him, 130. a propoſal made for ſeizing him, 133. believed that K. William durſt not leave England, nor venture over to Ireland, 134. marches from Dublin to join the reſt of his forces, ibid. advances to the Boyne, ibid. calls a Council of war, and reſolves to oppoſe the enemy's paſſing that river, 135. orders a ſhip to be got ready at Waterford to ſecure his retreat, ibid. defeated at the battle of the Boyne, 136. retreats to Dublin, and makes a ſpeech to the Magiſtrates, 138. embarks at Waterford, and returns to France, ibid. and 145. the braſs-money coined by him in Ireland is cried down, 146. plot for reſtoring him, 166. his anſwer to the Jacobites, who ſent to aſk his leave to take the oaths, 182. prepares for a deſcent into England, 197. his letter to ſeveral Lords and others of his late Privy-Council, upon his Queen's approaching delivery, ibid. ſends his declaration over to England, ibid. the perſons excepted therein, 199. at la Hogue, with an army ready to embark for England, 200, 201. his ſorrowful letter to K. Lewis, upon the defeat of the French fleet at la Hogue, 205. had prepared a declaration, but makes another in a different ſtrain, 246. a propoſal made to him, that he ſhould reſign his title in favour of his Son, ibid. he encourages the Aſſaſſination-plot, 313. grants the Plotters a Commiſſion, ibid. and 315. particularly one written with his own hand to Sir George Barclay, 315, 319, 320, 324. the Earl of Portland and Marſhal Boufflers have a conference about the manner of diſpoſing of K. James, 360. his intereſt left unregarded at the peace of Ryſwick, ibid. whereupon he publiſhes a manifeſto, 361, &c. the K. of France refuſes to remove him, 379. none of the Engliſh Noblemen in France will converſe with him, ibid. his letter, wherein he approved of aſſaſſinating Oliver Cromwell, 490. account of his behaviour the laſt years of his life, 489, &c. his death and character, 491. buried privately, ibid. his iſſue by Anne Hyde, 533. deſired to have the diſpoſal of his ſecond daughter Lady Anne, 533. memoirs of him voted ſeditious by the Houſe of Commons in Ireland, 611. his Queen-Dowager files a bill in Chancery for the arrears of her dowry, and has fifty thouſand pounds remitted to her, IV. 351

James. See Pretender.

Janſſen, Sir Theodore, writes againſt the treaty of commerce, IV. 315. had a hand in the Britiſh Merchant, 316. expelled the Houſe of Commons, and taken into cuſtody, 634. his information before the Committee of the Houſe of Commons, 638. Horatio Walpole and Sir Richard Steel ſpeak in his favour, 643

Jefferies, George, Lord-Chancellor, his caſe reported, III. 96

Jekyll, Sir Joſeph, was for taking away the firſt fruits and tenths, III. 642. one of the Managers of Dr. Sacheverel's trial, IV. 152. ſpeaks in behalf of Bp. Fleetwood's Preface, 271. ſpeaks againſt the treaty of commerce, 315. and againſt the Schiſm-bill, 360. his ſpeech in favour of the E. of Oxford, 427, 430. and of the D. of Ormond, 428. prepares a bill to attaint ſeveral of the Rebels, 483. is one of the ſelect Committee for the South-Sea affair, 632. made one of the Commiſſioners of the Great Seal, 683

Jennings, Sir John, at the engagement near Malaga, III. 664. made Rear-Admiral of the Blue, 678. ſails to the relief of Barcelona, 753. made Admiral, IV. 143. arrives with a fleet before Barcelona, 213. fetches the Engliſh troops from Spain, 296. made one of the Commiſſioners of the Admiralty, 406

Jerſey, Guernſey, &c. the Lords addreſs the King to put thoſe Iſlands into a poſture of defence, III. 96

Jerſey, Edward Villiers E. of, ſent Ambaſſador Extraordinary to France, III. 379. returns to England, 392. appointed Secretary of State, ibid. endeavours to diſpoſe K. William to change his Miniſtry, 404. ſent to demand the Great Seal from L. Sommers, 406. is one of the Plenipotentiaries at the ſecond Partition-treaty, 408. made Lord Chamberlain, 409. not queſtioned for the ſhare he had in the Partition-treaty, 457. his character, 509, 510. made Lord Chamberlain, 545. turned out, 647. his character, ibid. called upon by L. Sommers to vindicate K. William, 675. made Lord Privy Seal, IV. 219. dies, ibid.

Jerſey, William Villiers E. of, votes with the Whig Lords, IV. 348. a warrant iſſued out to apprehend him, 439

Ilay, Archibald Campbell E. of, choſen one of the ſixteen Peers, IV. 64. his ſpeeches about the malt-tax, 317. cauſes K. George to be proclaimed in Scotland, 394. ſaves Inverary from falling into the hands of the Rebels, 449. removed from all his employments, 500. made Lord Privy-Seal for Scotland, 649

Imperialiſts behave very ill, and do not join the D. of Marlborough, III. 698, &c. intrenched at Lauterburg, 793

Indemnity, act of, deſired by the King, III. 54. paſſed, 132. one proclaimed in Scotland, 596

Independents, an account of them, III. 45, 513, 514. are for a toleration, 515

Ingoldsby, Colonel, commands the forces in the Canada expedition, IV. 215. made one of the Lords Juſtices of Ireland, 217

Inniskillin, the inhabitants of that place take arms, III. 77. reſolve not to admit an Iriſh garriſon, 84. proclaim K. William and Q. Mary, ibid. defeat the Iriſh in ſeveral encounters, ibid. join the D. of Schomberg, 100. rout the Iriſh, 101. their bravery at the battle of the Boyne, 136, 137

Innocent XI, Pope, dies, III. 104

Innocent XII, Pope, choſen, III. 186. the Court of France comes to an accommodation with him, 214, 215. perſuades the K. of Spain to make a will in favour of the D. of Anjou, 418

Invaſion; the intended French invaſion, III. 312. of Scotland taken into conſideration by the Houſe of Lords, IV. 112. and by the Houſe of Commons, 113. an invaſion deſigned from Sweden, 507, &c.

Inverneſs; the French propoſe landing there with the Pretender, IV. 61

Jones, Edward, Bp. of St. Aſaph, proſecuted for Simony, III. 523

Joſeph. See Emperor.

Ireland, K. James lands in that Kingdom, III. 53, 80. Proteſtants in Ireland oppreſſed, many of them fly into England, 77. the Nobility and Gentry of Ireland preſent an addreſs to K. William, praying him to take that Kingdom into his protection, ibid. the miſcarriages in Ireland inquired into by the Parliament, 96. money raiſed for the war there, 97. Clergy of that Kingdom act for their relief, 98. expedition for the reduction of Ireland, 99. the miſcarriages in the management of the war there examined by the Houſe of Commons, 115. ſtate of affairs before K. William's arrival there, 133. bill for ſale of the forfeited eſtates there, and for attainting thoſe who had been in the Rebellion, 161. the army there oppreſs the country, and commit great outrages, 162. vacant Biſhopricks filled up, 163. continuation of the war there, 174. proceeding of the Parliament in that Kingdom, 218, 219. the ſtate of that Kingdom about forfeited eſtates, &c. examined by the Engliſh Parliament, 234. addreſſes to the King upon that head, 235. Parliament there, 247. great diſcontent in that Kingdom, in which the Natives were too much favoured, ibid. the Government of it put into the hands of three Lords Juſtices, ibid. ſtate of affairs there, and Parliament, 286, 287. addreſs of the Commons in England againſt the woollen manufacture in Ireland, 376. linnen manufacture there recommended, ibid. the forces in that Kingdom provided for by Parliament, 392. new Lord Juſtices of that Kingdom appointed, ibid. forfeited eſtates there reſumed by the Parliament, 398. proceedings of the Truſtees for the ſale of thoſe eſtates, 487. two of them ordered to attend the Houſe of Commons in England, 501. great oppreſſions committed by them, and they are complained of to the Houſe of Commons, 504. a clauſe in a bill for ſending the abjuration to Ireland, and obliging all to take it, 583. great diſcontents in that Kingdom, 605. diviſions between Whig and Tory, ibid. the Truſtees for the forfeited eſtates much cenſured, 606. raiſe a ſcandal upon the Iriſh, as if they deſigned to make themſelves independent from England, 606, &c. uneaſineſs there fomented by the E. of Rocheſter, and connived at by the D. of Ormond, 688. bill for improving the hempen and flaxen manufactures in Ireland, ibid. ſome forces ordered to march towards the North of that Kingdom, IV. 60. bill to prevent the growth of Popery there, 148. Convocation there, 149. the Jacobite intereſt promoted there, 330. deſigns of new-modelling the army there, 346. the Schiſm-bill extended to that Kingdom, 363. great number of Papiſts there to be dreaded, 403. Wood's half-pence coined for that Kingdom, and great uneaſineſs about them, 675

Judges in Scotland; debate concerning them, III. 75

Jura Populi Anglicani; ſome account of that book, III. 475

Juſtices appointed in the King's abſence, III. 280. their proceedings, 281

Juſtices of Peace; bill for qualifying them, III. 403

K.

Kaliſh, battle of, III. 763

Keating, —— Chief Juſtice of Ireland, his ſpeech, III. 78. draws up an addreſs againſt repealing the act of Settlement, 87

Kehl, Fort, taken by the French, III. 615. a deſcription of it, ibid.

Kelly, Hugh and William, liſt in the Pretender's ſervice, and are apprehended, IV. 364

Kelly, George, alias Johnſon, taken up, IV. 660. burns his papers, ibid. employed in the Conſpiracy, 667. bill to inflict pains and penalties on him, 667, 668

Ken, Thomas, Bp. of Bath and Wells, refuſes to take the oaths, III. 43

Kenmure, William Gordon Lord Viſcount, takes up arms for the Pretender, IV. 445. his character, 448. taken priſoner at Preſton, 459. brought to the bar of the Houſe of Lords, and pleads guilty, 484. condemned, ibid. great interceſſion in his behalf, 485. executed, 487

Kennet, White, his advertiſements about the Bp. of Bangor's Sermon, IV. 539

Kent, Henry de Grey Earl of, made Lord-Chamberlain, III. 647. created Viſcount Goderick, Earl of Harold, and Marquiſs of Kent, 780. his ſpeech in the debates about the Union, 786. made a Duke, IV. 187. declines the employment of Ambaſſador to Hanover, 338. made one of the Lords of the Bedchamber, 407. Lord Steward of the Houſhold, 500

Kentiſh petition, III. 472. the Petitioners impriſoned, 473. releaſed and entertained at Mercers-Hall, 480. further votes againſt them, 305

Keyſerſewaert, put into the hands of the French, and beſieged by the Allies, III. 504. beſieged by the Elector Palatine, 560. a deſcription of it, ibid.

Kidd, William, employed againſt the Pirates, turns Pirate himſelf, III. 396. ſeized, 397. tampered with by ſome of the Members of the Houſe of Commons, 458, &c. executed, 458

Kidnapping of ſoldiers, III. 236

King, Sir Peter, his ſpeeches againſt Dr. Sacheverel, IV. 151, &c. ſpeaks in behalf of Bp. Fleetwood, 271. ſpeaks againſt the treaty of commerce, 315, 320, 341. made a congratulatory ſpeech to K. George on his public entry, 402. appointed Chief-Juſtice of the Common-Pleas, 412. made Speaker of the Houſe of Lords, Lord-Keeper, and Baron of Ockham, 684

King's-Evil, Q. Anne touches for it, III. 592. a new office for it, ibid.

Kingſton, Evelyn Pierpoint E. of, created Marquiſs of Dorcheſter, III. 780

Kingſton, William Pierpoint D. of, appointed Keeper of the Privy-Seal, IV. 504

Kinnoul, George Hay Lord, engaged in the Rebellion, IV. 436. impriſoned, 437

Knight, Robert, Caſhier of the South-Sea Company, examined by the Lords, IV. 633. withdraws out of the Kingdom, ibid. proclamation to apprehend him, 634. his books and papers ſecured, and the whole account relating to him, 635—637

Knocque, Fort, ſurprized by the Allies, IV. 286

L.

Lambert, Sir John, ordered to be taken into cuſtody, IV. 634

Lamberti, Marquiſs de, the D. of Lorrain's Miniſter forbidden the Court, and goes to Oxford, IV. 410

Lancaſhire-Plot, III. 166, 191, 196, 265. the Plotters tried, 266. bring their affair before the Parliament, 267. votes of the Commons about it, ibid.

Land-Bank erected, III. 322. fails, 334

Land-forces; debates in the Houſe of Commons about them, III. 224. eſtimates for their maintenance, 225. debates upon the bill for regulating them, IV. 423

Land-tax bill, debate about the preamble of it, IV. 488

Landau; deſcription of that place, III. 561. taken by the French, 621. beſieged and taken by the Allies, 661, 662. by the French, IV. 337

Landen, battle of, III. 238

Landrecy attacked by the Allies, IV. 278, 281

Lanſdown, George Granville Lord Viſcount, Treaſurer of the Houſhold, IV. 328. taken into cuſtody, 439

Lauſun, Count of, intended to command the troops ſent by France into Ireland, III. 79. but does not go at laſt, ibid. K. James makes him Knight of the Garter, 80. adviſes K. James, at the battle of the Boyne, to retreat, 137. retires to France, 151

Law; bill for regulating proceedings at law, III. 731

Law, John, account of him, IV. 619. kills Beau Wilſon, 620. author of the Miſſiſſippi ſcheme, and made Comptroller of the Finances in France, ibid. comes to England, and pleads his pardon, 653

Lawſon, Sir Gilfrid, his ſpeeches in Parliament, IV. 521, 576. made Groom of the King's Bed-chamber, 617

Lay-Baptiſm, diſputes about it, IV. 254

Layer, Chriſtopher, apprehended, and makes his eſcape, IV. 660. retaken and committed to the Tower, ibid. brought to his trial, and found guilty, 666. reprieved from time to time, ibid. examined by a Committee of the Houſe of Commons, ibid. his trial publiſhed, ibid. report of the Committee appointed to examine him, ibid. executed, ibid.

Leake, Sir John, commands a fleet, III. 665. ſent to relieve Gibraltar, 668. made Vice-Admiral of the White, 678. relieves Gibraltar a ſecond time, and deſtroys ſeveral of the enemy's ſhips, 705. ſails to the relief of Barcelona, 752. diſperſes a fleet of Tartans near Barcelona, IV. 94. aſſiſts in the conqueſt of Minorca, 95, 96. made one of the Lords Commiſſioners of the Admiralty, 143. carries to Dunkirk the Engliſh forces that were to take poſſeſſion of that place, 280

Lechmere, Nicholas, ſpeaks againſt the treaty of commerce, IV. 315. ſeconds a motion of General Stanhope about the Pretender, 323. had a hand in the Criſis, 335. finds fault with the lenity ſhewn to Mr. Bedford, 337. affirms the Proteſtant Succeſſion to be in danger, 354. ſpeaks againſt the Schiſm-bill, 360, &c. moves to have the Toleration-bill extended to Ireland, 363. received by K. George with particular marks of favour, 402. made Sollicitor-General, 412. impeaches the E. of Derwentwater, 482. Chairman of the Committee to draw up articles againſt the ſeven impeached Lords, ibid. prepares a bill for attainting ſeveral of the Rebels, 483. moves for a proclamation, offering a pardon to thoſe that were in arms in Scotland, 484. moves for a clauſe to exclude Penſioners from Parliament, 495. made Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaſter, 541. made Attorney-General, 562. quarrel between him and Sir William Thompſon, 610. is one of the ſecret Committee, 632

Lede, Marquiſs de, takes Sardinia, IV. 549. lands in Sicily, 567. Admiral Byng's letter to him, 568. advances againſt Melazzo, 572. raiſes ſome regiments in Sicily, 573. account of him, 590. retires to Francavilla, 591. is in the battle there, ibid. makes a ſhew of attacking the Imperialiſts, but fortifies Caſtro Giovane, 598. being hard preſſed by the Imperialiſts, he makes overtures for evacuating Sicily, 600. ſigns conventions for evacuating Sicily and Sardinia, 603

Leeds, Thomas Oſborne Marquiſs of Carmarthen, and D. of, accuſed of taking a bribe from the Eaſt-India Company, III. 270, 273, 277. ſpeaks againſt the bill for obliging Sir Thomas Cooke to make a diſcovery, 273. motion for impeaching him, 278. his ſpeech in the Houſe of Lords, ibid. ſifted by Mr. Lockhart with relation to the Pretender, 768. his ſpeech at Dr. Sacheverel's trial, IV. 157

Leeds, Peregrine Oſborne D. of, his proteſts, IV. 610

Leefdale, Frederic Adlbreyt Baron of, ſent to Paris to diſcover the Aſſaſſination-plot, III. 210, 211

INDEX to the Continuation of the History of England.

Legborn, to remain a free port, IV. 563
Legion's humble addreſs to the Lords, III. 647. proclamation againſt it, ibid.
Leiceſter, John Sidney E. of, made Conſtable of Dover-Caſtle, IV. 548
Leinſter, Meinherdt Schomberg D. of, is appointed Commander of the troops that were deſigned to make a deſcent in France, III. 105. the Engliſh forces under his command poſſeſs themſelves of Dixmuyde and Furnes, 212
Leopold. See Emperor.
Leſley, Charles, publiſhes a relation of the Glencoe buſineſs, III. 218. his acount of the Pretender, IV. 357
Levellers in Scotland. IV. 682
Leward-Iſlands ravaged by the French, IV. 293
Lewis XIV, K. of France, attacks the Spaniſh Netherlands, III. 35. reſolves to extirpate the Reformed Religion in his Dominions, 36. dragoons the Reformed, and repeals the edict of Nantes, ibid. declares war againſt the Pope, ibid. invades Germany, ibid. ſends troops into Ireland for K. James's uſe, 79. his private treaty with him, 80. promiſes to ſend a fleet to K. James's aſſiſtance to Ireland, 134. orders Mr. de Tourville to fight the Engliſh, 201, 205. his ſaying about the Engliſh rejoicing for the victory at la Hogue, 206. his letter of thanks to his army, for intrenching themſelves near the Scheld, 256. endeavours to reſtore K. James, 303. abandons him at the peace of Ryſwick, 360. will not remove him at a greater diſtance than St. Germains, 379. forms the project of ſecuring the Crown of Spain to his Grandſon the D. of Anjou, 382—384. his behaviour about the Partition-treaty, and the Spaniſh Succeſſion, 418, &c. accepts the K. of Spain's will, though he feigned at the ſame time to be ready to obſerve the Partition-treaty, 427. notifies to the States of Holland his reſolution of accepting that will, 429. propoſals made to him by the Court of England, for ſecuring the Netherlands, 446. his anſwer to thoſe propoſals, 447. reflected upon in the Houſe of Lords, 451. his letter and memorial to the States, 481, &c. viſits K. James, 490. owns the Pretender for K. of England, and cauſes him to be proclaimed, 491, 492, &c. preſſes all other Princes to own him, 491. his manifeſto for proclaiming him, 492, &c. rejoices at the news of K. William's death, 542. expreſſes great reſentment upon the Dutch declaring war againſt him, 548, 549. declares war againſt the Confederates, 560. arms part of the Empire againſt the Empire itſelf, 614. countenances a deſign of an inſurrection in Scotland, ibid. his letter to the D. of Savoy, 623. declares war againſt him, ibid. had Penſioners at the Courts of Denmark and Pruſſia, 743. ſends orders to Villeroy to fight the Allies, 744. had for his motto Nec pluribus impar, 752. makes advantageous offers to the D. of Savoy, 753. and to the Allies, 763. his letter to the Pope, 766. and to Scotland, 767. his equerry carried off, IV. 32. reſolves to ſend the Pretender to make a deſcent in Scotland, 56. goes to take leave of him, and preſents him with a fine ſword, ibid. writes a letter to the Pope upon that expedition, ibid. and a circular letter to his Miniſters in Rome, Switzerland, Geneva, &c. about the ſame, and boaſts of ſucceſs too ſoon, 62. endeavours to unite the Princes and States of Italy in a league againſt the Emperor, 98. offers to come to a treaty of partition, by allowing Spain and the Weſt-Indies to K. Charles, 121, 125, 126. rejects the preliminaries of peace, 129. writes to the K. of Spain that he would never abandon him, 147. ſets on foot negotiations for a peace, 121, 144, 163. reſolves to ſupport his grandſon Philip K. of Spain, notwithſtanding he pretends the contrary, and ſends him reinforcements, 179. aims at making a ſeparate peace excluſive of Spain, 195. entertains L. Bolingbroke with great magnificence, 287. demands great reparations for an inſult offered to Monſieur Meſnager's ſervants, 290. a declaration of his Miniſter at the Hague concerning the Pretender, 346. his treachery, 370. forced to abandon the Pretender, 394. promiſes to maintain the Hanover Succeſſion, 398. his anſwer about the Catalans, ibid. and about the demolition of Dunkirk, 408. his diſtinction upon the ſpirit and the letter of treaties, ibid. his death. 437, 476
Lewis XV, K. of France, IV. 477. a marriage concluded between him and the Infanta of Spain, 674. he ſends her back, 688, 689. takes the Government into his own hands, 690. marries Mary daughter of K. Staniſlaus, 691
Lewis, Prince of Aſturias, a marriage agreed on between him and the D. of Orleans's daughter, IV. 674. his Father the K. of Spain reſigns his Dominions to him; 681. he dies, 688
Libellers; proclamation againſt them, III. 218
Liege, a deſcription of it, III. 563. taken by the Allies, ibid. the French contrive to beſiege it, 618. beſieged by the French, and relieved by the D. of Marlborough, 698
Limburg taken by the Allies, III. 620. deſcribed, ibid.
Limerick beſieged, III. 147. the ſiege raiſed, 149. beſieged a ſecond time, 179. ſurrenders, 181
Limerick, Biſhop of, forms a Committee, to take care of things at Dublin, III. 139
Lines of the French forced, III. 618. by the D. of Marlborough, 699. thoſe of Buhl forced by the French, IV. 13
Linnen Manufacture in Ireland encouraged, III. 376, 610
Lintz taken by the French, III. 566
Liſle; deſcription of that place, IV. 80. beſieged by the Allies, ibid. a French officer wonderfully gets into that place during the ſiege, 82. the town ſurrenders, 87. the ſiege of the Citadel proſecuted, ibid. it capitulates, 90
Liturgy; a review of it, III. 106, &c. whence the Liturgy of the Church of England was taken, 513
Livonia taken by the Czar, IV. 183
Lloyd, William, Bp. of St. Aſaph, anſwers K. James's declaration, III. 199. Bp. of Litchfield and Coventry, adviſes Q. Mary to eſtabliſh a fund for Preachers and Schoolmaſters among the Vaudois, 217. his diſcourſe of God's ways, &c. complained of in Parliament, 231
Lloyd, William, Bp. of Worceſter, complaint in the Houſe of Commons, and addreſs to Q. Anne againſt him, III. 575. removed, ibid.
London, Lord-Mayor, &c. of, preſent an addreſs to Q. Mary, III. 141. and to K. William, 219. entertain K. William and Q. Mary, ibid. Lieutenancy of London, debates in the Houſe of Commons about it, 233. changed, 252. the City condemns the violence and ſlowneſs of the Houſe of Commons, 471. inclined to draw up an addreſs againſt the Parliament's proceedings, 478. their inſtructions to their Members, 497. Lieutenancy there changed, IV. 192. the Tories get the election of Members there, 193. fifty new Churches ordered to be built in and about London, 208. their inſtructions to their Repreſentatives, 415. riots and diſorders committed there on the Anniverſary of the Queen's Coronation, and on the D. of Ormond's birth-day, 421. on the King's birth-day, and on the 29th of May, 424. and on the E. of Oxford's Commitment, 432
London Aſſurance, IV. 613
Londonderry takes arms, III. 77. beſieged, 80. a little boy brings two letters to the beſieged, 82. relieved, 83
Lonſdale, Lord Viſcount. See Lowther.
Lords, Houſe of, ſign an Aſſociation, III. 321. the names of ſuch as refuſed to ſign it, 322. debates in that Houſe about Sir John Fenwick's Attainder, 341. their addreſs of thanks to K. William upon diſbanding the army, 388. their addreſs on the King's ſpeech about the Succeſſion, 441. find fault with the partition treaty, 447. adviſe the King to enter into leagues offenſive and defenſive with the Emperor, 453. ſeveral meſſages between them and the Houſe of Commons about the trial of the Lords Sommers, Orford, &c. 464. their reſolutions previous to thoſe trials, 465. diſpute between them and the Commons about ſome words of the L. Haverſham, 466, &c. their repreſentation on the caſe of the Ailesbury-men, 684. addreſs the Queen to ſettle the D. of Marlborough's honours on his poſterity, 766. examine the Merchants complaint, IV. 41. lay the whole matter before the Queen in an addreſs, 42. debates in that Houſe about the affairs in Spain, and the management of the war there, 45, &c. reſolve, that no peace could be ſafe, if Spain and the Spaniſh Weſt-Indies were ſuffered to continue in the Houſe of Bourbon, 46. debates about the elections of the ſixteen Peers of Scotland, 109. their votes againſt the Miniſtry with relation to the war in Spain, 197, 198. proceedings in this Houſe upon the Queen's laying the plan of peace before the Parliament, 269. debates about the Catalans, the Proteſtant Succeſſion, removal of the Pretender out of Lorrain, and the late treaties, 347. vote an addreſs againſt Jeſuits, Prieſts, and againſt all ſuch as bore arms againſt the late K. William, 350. move for a ſecond addreſs about the Pretender; 352. take into conſideration the trade to Spain and the Weſt-Indies, 365. debate about the Conſpirators againſt K. William, 426. petitions to them in behalf of the condemned Lords, 485. make ſome exceptions to the preamble of the land-tax bill; 488. debates about the Oxford riot, 516, &c. differences between them and the Commons about the E. of Oxford's trial, 541; &c. debates about the Mutiny-bill, 557; &c. and about the repeal of the Schiſm and Occaſional acts, 578. their reſolutions concerning the impriſonment of the Barons of the Exchequer in Ireland, 609, 610. debates about the South-Sea ſcheme, 611. their proceedings in the South-Sea affair, and South-Sea Directors, 632, &c. complaint in their Houſe about Law's coming over, 653. take into conſideration the treaty with Spain, 654. debates about the army, ibid. take into conſideration the treaties of Hanover, and addreſs the King thereupon, 694, &c. great debates on the King's ſpeech, 701
Lorrain, Duke of, declares war againſt France, III. 157. poiſoned by means of that perfidious Court, ibid. his character, ibid.
Lorrain reſtored to the Duke of that name, III. 328, 364
Lorrain, D. of, marries the D. of Orleans's daughter; III. 383
Lothian, William Ker Marquiſs of, preſents the draught of an act for a treaty between England and Scotland, III. 692. choſen one of the ſixteen Peers, IV. 64
Lotteries; bill againſt them, III. 235. encouraged, and money raiſed upon them, 251
Lovain taken by the Allies, III. 750. deſcription of that town, ibid.
Lovat, Simon Frazer Lord, ſurprizes Inverneſs for K. George, IV. 464, 472
Louvois dies, III. 209. had entered into the plot for aſſaſſinating K. William, 210
Low-Countries, a ſudden Revolution there, III. 751
Lowndes, William, preſents to the Houſe of Commons ſeveral papers relating to the coins, IV. 553
Lowther, Sir John, reſigns his place of Commiſſioner of the Treaſury, III. 195. made one of the Commiſſioners of the Admiralty, 236. created Baron Lowther, and Viſcount Lonſdale, 326. made Lord Privy-Seal, 392. raiſes the poſſe of Cumberland, 455
Ludlow, Edmund, comes to England, and is forced to return back, III. 120
Lumley, Richard, created E. of Scarborough, III. 132
Lumley, Richard Lord, makes a motion about removing the Pretender out of Lorrain, IV. 343. ſpeaks in favour of Richard Steele, 344. his ſpeech about the reward for apprehending the Pretender, 397. made one of the Gentlemen of the Bed-chamber to the Prince of Wales, 402
Lumley, Charles Lord, Gentleman of the Bed-chamber to the Prince of Wales, IV. 617
Lunt —— diſcovers the Lancaſhire plot, III. 265. his depoſitions, ibid. indicted for perjury, 267
Luteſtring Company ſettled, III. 219, 371
Luxemburg, D. of, General of the French, III. 154. tries to ſurprize Bruſſels, 182. attacks

INDEX to the Continuation of the History of England.

tacks the rear of the Confederate army, 183. covers the ſiege of Namur, 206. had the direction of the plot for aſſaſſinating K. William, 210. commands in Flanders at the battle of Landen, 238. dies, 288

Lyddal —— his ſpeech about the Septennial bill, IV. 495

M.

Macclesfield, Charles Gerrard E. of, aſperſed by the Jacobites, III. 267. divorced from his Counteſs, 375

Macclesfield, Thomas Parker E. of, complaints againſt him, IV. 683. impeached for high crimes and miſdemeanors, 684. his trial, ibid. committed to the Tower, and releaſed upon paying his fine of 30,000 l. ibid.

Macdonals of Glencoe, III. 283

Mackintoſh, Brigadier, Laird of Borlum, croſſes the Frith of Forth with a body of Highlanders, IV. 445, &c. his character, 449, &c. taken priſoner at Preſton, 459. brought up to London, and ſent to Newgate, 465. bill of high-treaſon found againſt him, 489. he makes his eſcape, 496

Mackworth, Sir Humphrey, the ſuppoſed Author of the memorial of the Church of England, III. 729. vote of the Houſe of Commons againſt him, IV. 162

Madagaſcar, Pirates there ſuppreſſed, III 791

Madrid poſſeſſed by the Allies, III. 754. they abandon it again, and K. Philip poſſeſſes himſelf of it, ibid.

Maintenon, Madam de, in a plot to aſſaſſinate K. William, III. 210. cauſes the K. of Spain's will to be accepted by the French Court, 427. her influence, 440. perſuades K. Lewis XIV. to acknowledge the Pretender for K. of England, 491. the K. of France's coolneſs towards her, IV. 132

Malaga, engagement near it between the Engliſh and the French, III. 664

Malo, St. bombarded by the Engliſh, III. 252, 300

Malplaquet, battle of, IV. 136

Malt-tax extended to Scotland, of which the Scots highly complain, IV. 316. riots in Scotland about it, 687. petitions againſt it from ſeveral Shires, 695

Mancheſter, Charles Mountague E. of, attends K. William to Ireland, III. 133. ſent Ambaſſador to Venice, 350. and to France, 392. ordered to leave the Court of France, ibid. his letters to Torcy, ibid. made Secretary of State, 504

Mancheſter, Robert Mountague E. of, ſent Ambaſſador to Venice, III. 792. takes Vienna in his way, IV. 21. letters to and from him about the reduction of Naples, ibid, &c. diſreſpect ſhewn to him at Venice, 65, 66

Manifeſto of the Pretender's adherents, IV. 438

Manreſſa; a deſcription of that place, IV. 11

Manſel, Sir Thomas, made one of the Commiſſioners of the Treaſury, IV. 190. created Baron Manſel, 234

Mar, John Erskine E. of, preſents a reſolve to Parliament, III. 690. and a draught of an act for a treaty with England, 692. made Secretary of State, 697. his ſpeech at Sacheverel's trial, IV. 160. tries to get the place of Secretary of State for Scotland, 219. is againſt extending the malt-tax to Scotland, 317. made third Secretary for that Kingdom, 328. removed from his place of Secretary of State, 404. had made many profeſſions of loyalty to K. George in a letter, 436. heads the Rebellion in Scotland, ibid. ſets up the Pretender's ſtandard at Brae-Mar, 437. aſſumes the title of Lieutenant-General of the Pretender's forces, and publiſhes a declaration to exhort the people to take arms, ibid. publiſhes a manifeſto, 438, &c. his men commit great diſorders, 449. receives three letters, which had been intercepted by Mr. Forſter, ibid. &c. two letters of his intercepted, 451. ſends a Commiſſion to T. Forſter to act as General in England, 455. reſolves to paſs the Forth, and to march into England, 459. engages the D. of Argyle near Dumblain, 459, 460, &c. waits upon the Pretender at Fetteroſſe, 465. his letter about the Pretender's proceedings, 467, &c.

March, William Douglaſs E. of, made Governor of Edinburgh-Caſtle, III. 595

Marchmont, Alexander Hume E. of, Commiſſioner in the Parliament of Scotland, III. 380. Chancellor of Scotland, 555. propoſes the ſettling the Crown of that Kingdom on the Houſe of Hanover, 557. turned out, 595

Mardyke, IV. 408. to be demoliſhed, 505, 508

Maria Tereſa's renunciation, III. 418

Marion, Elias, one of the Prophets, IV. 47

Mariſchal, Earl, letters ſent to him from the Pretender, III. 767, &c. was againſt the Union, 770, 772

Mariſchal, George Keith E. of, ſummoned to ſurrender himſelf at Edinburgh, IV. 445. joins the reſt of the Rebels, 446. waits upon the Pretender at Fetteroſſe, 465. forms the rear of the Rebels in their retreat, 472

Marlborough, John Churchill E. and afterwards D. of, takes Cork and Kingſale, III. 150, 151. ſent by K. William into Flanders to prepare things againſt his arrival, 182. diſcontented, 189. diſgraced and turned out of all his poſts, 195. committed to the Tower, 200, 218. bailed, 218. a plot againſt him, ibid. complains of his commitment to the Houſe of Lords, 221. the E. of Shrewsbury thought he was ungratefully and unjuſtly perſecuted, 231. reſtored to favour, made Privy-Counſellor, and Governor to the D. of Glouceſter, 380. made General of the army abroad, 480. account of him, 536, &c. 537, &c. K. James's great reſentment againſt him, ibid. writes a letter in the Queen's name to the States-General, 540, 541. made Knight of the Garter, Captain-General of the Engliſh forces both at home and abroad, and ſent Ambaſſador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to Holland, 541. his ſpeech to the States, ibid confirms the Dutch in their former reſolution, and ſettles ſome points with them, 543. agrees with the States and the Imperial Miniſter, that war ſhould be proclaimed againſt France, on the ſame day at Vienna, London, and the Hague, ibid. is reckoned a Tory, 544. made Maſter of the Ordnance, 554. declared Generaliſſimo of the Confederate army, 562. takes ſeveral places, particularly Venlo, Ruremond, and Liege, 563. is taken by a French party, but gets out of their hands, ibid. comes to London, and a Committee of the Commons wait upon him with the thanks of that Houſe, 576. the Queen creates him a Duke, and intends to grant him a penſion of 5000 l. but it being diſagreeable to the Commons, ſhe drops it for the preſent, 577. he is for the Occaſional Conformity bill, 581. loſes his only ſon, and goes to Flanders, 615. takes Bonne, 617. forces the French lines, 618, 619. takes Huy and Limburg, 620. endeavours in vain to bring the French to an engagement, ibid. meets Charles K. of Spain at Duſſeldorp, who preſents him with a ſword, 624. returns to England, 626. ſets out again for Germany, 654. defeats the enemy at Schellenberg, 655. defeats the French and Bavarians at Hochſtet, 657, &c. returns to England, 663. his victories levelled by the Commons with thoſe of Sir George Rooke, 671. ſome Lords take it ill that Prince Eugene ſhould be named before him, 674. is complimented by the Lord-Keeper upon his coming to the Houſe of Lords, 676. a Committee of the Houſe of Commons gives him alſo the thanks of that Houſe, 677. his friends offended at the Oxford addreſs, ibid. the manor of Woodſtock and the hundred of Woxton ſettled upon him and his heirs, 677. concludes a treaty with Pruſſia, 678. concerts meaſures for carrying on the war upon the Moſelle, 697. goes to Holland, and has Conferences with ſeveral Members of the States, ibid. his progreſs into Germany, where he is not joined by the Allies, 698. raiſes the ſiege of Liege, and forces the French lines, 699. in danger of being killed, 700. deſigns to attack the French, but is oppoſed by the Dutch Generals, of which he complains to the States, 701, 702. goes to the Hague, and confers with the States upon the orders he had received to go to Vienna, 702. goes to Vienna, and confers with the Emperor, 704. comes back to England, ibid. his conduct arraigned by the L. Haverſham, 719. is thanked by the Commons for his great ſervices, 729. defeats the French at Ramillies, 746, &c. is in danger of being killed or taken priſoner, 748. K. Charles writes to him, 754. the D. of Bavaria ſends propoſals to him, for opening conferences for a peace, 763. his anſwer to them, 764. a report ſpread that he found his account in continuing the war, and therefore would not be for peace, ibid. returns to England, 765. inveſted with the Principality of Mildenheim, 766. receives the thanks of both Houſes of Parliament, ibid. the Lords addreſs the Queen to ſettle his honours on his poſterity, which is done, ibid. Woodſtock manor and Blenheim houſe ordered to go with the titles, ibid. 5000 l. per annum out of the Poſt-Office ſettled on him and his poſterity, ibid. the Lord-Keeper's ſpeech to him and his anſwer, 767, 768. the Commons refuſe to confirm the grant made to him of the Royal Meuſe, 770. goes to the Hague, and has a conference with the Deputies of the States, IV. 14. goes to Alt-Ranſtadt to the K. of Sweden, 15. follows the French army, but cannot bring them to an engagement, 19, &c. goes to Germany, and confers with the Electors of Hanover and Mentz, 21. returns to England, ibid. his letter to his Ducheſs about Mrs. Maſham, 35. complaints of his too great power, ibid. his ſpeech to ſhew the neceſſity of augmenting the forces in Flanders, 45. refuſes to ſerve the Queen any longer, unleſs Mr, Harley was removed, 51. offers the Bank a conſiderable ſum of money to preſerve its credit, 61. appointed again Commander in Chief of the Confederate forces in the Netherlands, 69. acts with great unanimity with Prince Eugene, 72. his bravery at the battle of Oudenarde, 74, 77. his letter to the E. of Mancheſter about it, 78. covers the ſiege of Liſle, 80. prepares to give the enemy battle, but they retire, 81. ſtorms Liſle, 83. ſtops the Elector of Bavaria's deſign againſt Bruſſels, for which purpoſe he paſſes the Scheld, and comes to that City, 88, &c. retakes Ghent, 91, &c. the Queen's letter to him after the battle of Oudenarde, and his anſwer, 104. his intereſt with her begins to decline, ibid. two pieces publiſhed againſt him, 116. thanked by the Commons, with his anſwer to it from Bruſſels, ibid. comes to England, and is also thanked by the Lords, 117. ſent to the Hague upon propoſals of peace made by France, 121. convinces the States of the treacherous deſigns of France in that offer, ibid. beſieges and takes Tournay, 133, 135. reſolves to beſiege Mons, 135. defeats the French at the battle of Malplaquet, 136, &c. paſſes the Scarp and forces the French lines, 170, &c. the Queen writes to him, to give the E. of Eſſex's regiment to R. Hill, 181. he deſires to be excuſed, and not being able to prevail retires to Windſor, ibid. great uneaſineſs in the Nation on that account, ibid. he writes an expoſtulary letter to the Queen, ibid. the Queen's anſwer, 186. the Parliament addreſſes the Queen to ſend the Duke into Holland, ibid. he lives in friendſhip with the D. of Shrewsbury, 187. writes a moving letter to the Queen upon the E. of Sunderland's removal, 189. had not promoted the addreſs againſt Mr. Maſham, ibid. motion in the Houſe of Lords to thank him dropped, 195. ſome Officers turned out for drinking his health, ibid. he returns from Holland to England, and is received with acclamations, 196. is viſited by the new Miniſtry, but does not receive the thanks of both Houſes as uſual, ibid. deſired by the Queen to live well with the new Miniſtry, reſolves to be patient, in order to carry the war; carries a ſurrender of all the Ducheſs's places to the Queen, and retires to Blenheim-Houſe on the Queen's birth-day, ibid. his account in the Houſe of Lords of the Miniſtry's proceedings with regard to Spain, 197, &c. is continued in the command of the Britiſh forces in Flanders, 208. no confidence between him and the new Miniſtry, ibid. the Queen's letter to the States of Holland about him, 209. takes the field, ibid. amuſes the French, ſurprizes their lines, 210. beſieges and takes Bouchain, 211, 212. returns to Eng-

INDEX to the Continuation of the History of England.

Ibid. his ſpeech in the Houſe of Lords, 228. is turned out of all his employments, 232. his letter to the Commiſſioners about the preſent from Sir Solomon de Medina, ibid. the Queen ſends him word of her intentions to reſume all his employments, 233. his letter thereupon to her, ibid. he waits upon Prince Eugene, 236. that Prince's compliment on him, 237. cenſured for having taken large ſums of money, 239. ordered to be proſecuted by the Attorney-General, 240. many libels publiſhed againſt him, ibid. inquiries made into his conduct, but nothing material is found againſt him, ibid. Prince Eugene ſaid he was always ſucceſsful, ibid. bears all inſults with patience, and prepares a vindication of himſelf, ibid. his ſpeech on account of the D. of Ormond's being ordered not to fight, 261. ſends E. Paulet a challenge for his reflecting ſpeech on him, ibid. his ſpeech about the plan of peace, 269. two ſuits commenced againſt him, 300. leaves England, and goes to Aix la Chapelle, ibid. refuſes to ſign an aſſociation, 347. invited by the E. of Oxford to come over to England, 367. comes to Oſtend, ibid. embarks for England, 368. had vowed never to be reconciled with the E. of Oxford, ibid. invited over by L. Bolingbroke, 402. lands at Dover, ibid. makes a public entry into London, but his coach breaks down, ibid. kindly received by K. George, ibid. made Captain-General, Maſter of the Ordnance, &c. ibid. his ſpeech about regulating the land-forces, 423. reflected upon on account of the coarſeneſs of the ſoldiers ſhirts, and his advertiſement and ſpeech thereupon, 425. has the nomination of the Officers of the new-raiſed regiments, with the D. of Argyle, and the Generals Stanhope and Cadogan, 433. is ill, and never perfectly recovers, 503. his death and character, 657, &c.

Marlborough, Sarah Jennings Counteſs and Ducheſs of, made one of the Ladies of the Bed-chamber to the Princeſs Anne, and becomes her great favourite, III. 534. her character, ibid. and 535. perſuades the Princeſs againſt conſenting to have the Crown ſettled on K. William for life, 536. appointed Groom of the Stole, and Keeper of the Privy-Purſe, 544. endeavours to moderate Q. Anne's zeal for the Tories, ibid. occaſions the removal of Sir Nathan Wright, 717. reconciles the Whigs to the Queen, 719. compared to Allice Piers, ibid. her account of J. Hill, and Mrs. Maſham, IV. 34. her great uneaſineſs at that Lady's great credit with the Queen, and her letters thereupon, ibid. &c. her letter to the Queen, 105, &c. charged with being the cauſe of ſome diſagreeable votes paſſing in the Houſe of Commons againſt Mrs. Maſham, 185. is told that the Queen believed ſhe often ſpoke diſreſpectfully of her, 186. ſhe endeavours to vindicate herſelf in an audience ſhe had of the Queen, ibid. &c. writes to the Queen upon the E. of Sunderland's removal, 189. the Duke her huſband carries a ſurrender of all her places to the Queen, 196

Marriages; act againſt marriages without licenſe or banns, III. 323

Marſaglia, battle of, III. 241

Marſeilles; a project to deſtroy that place, IV. 21. a plague there, 652

Martin, Henry and David, had a hand in the Britiſh Merchant, IV. 316

Q. MARY proclaimed, III. 25. her houſehold ſettled, 39. uneaſy at the ſettlement required for her ſiſter the Princeſs of Denmark, 52, 120. an act paſſed to inveſt her with the adminiſtration of affairs during the King's abſence, 132. ſhews great tenderneſs for her father's perſon, 133. her behaviour was very exemplary, and ſhe read much, but did not meddle with public affairs, 139. was very charitable, ibid. takes upon her the adminiſtration of affairs, and has the right way of pleaſing England, ibid. becomes univerſally beloved and admired, ibid. puts out two proclamations againſt the Papiſts, ibid. tho' much afraid of a deſcent from France, ſhe conceals her own apprehenſions, and inſpires her ſubjects with reſolution, 141. puts out a proclamation for the encouragement of ſeamen, 142. gives Commiſſions for putting the ſtanding forces and the militia in the Weſt in a poſture of defence, ibid. publiſhes a proclamation for apprehending the E. of Litchfield, &c. ibid. falls out with her ſiſter the Princeſs of Denmark, becauſe ſhe would not diſmiſs the Counteſs of Marlborough, 196. prepares to defend England againſt the threatned invaſion of K. James, 200. orders ſeveral diſcontented perſons to be taken up, ibid. commands all Papiſts to depart from London and Weſtminſter, ibid. cauſes the militia of Weſtminſter, and the trainbands of London to be drawn up in Hyde-Park, ibid. eſtabliſhes a fund for maintaining Preachers and Schoolmaſters among the Vaudois, 217. iſſues out a proclamation againſt the exporting of corn to France, and orders the laws to be put in execution, 247. governs the Nation with great prudence, 258. had a particular eſteem for Archbp. Tillotſon, 260. ſeized with the ſmall-pox, of which ſhe dies, ibid. her character, 261. never guilty of an indiſcretion, 262. remarks on her unuſual gaiety at her coming to the Throne, 262. and on her quarrel with her ſiſter the Princeſs Anne, ibid. addreſſes to the King upon her death, 264. ſhe was a friend to the Diſſenters, and for a Comprehenſion, ibid. the Jacobites exalted at the news of her death, 312. her great care in diſpoſing of Church preferments, 523

Maſham, Mr. Samuel, preferred by the Ducheſs of Marlborough's means, IV. 34. marries Abigail Hill, ibid. made a General, 186. created Baron Maſham, 234

Maſham, Mrs. comes to be in great credit with Q. Anne, IV. 34. the Ducheſs of Marlborough's great uneaſineſs at it, ibid. &c. was related to Mr. Harley, 34. her intrigues with the Queen, 105, &c. ſhe undermines the D. of Marlborough's intereſt, 185. motion intended in Parliament againſt her, 186. made Privy-Purſe, 196. had part of the benefit of the Aſſiento trade, 366. reconciles the Favourites, 367. the Lord-Treaſurer demurs about a grant made to her by the Queen, 368. ſevere reproaches between her and the Treaſurer, when he was diſmiſſed, ibid.

Maſters in Chancery; proceedings againſt them, IV. 683

Maximilian Prince of Hanover joins Prince Eugene, III. 656

Mazarin, Ducheſs of, motion in the Houſe of Commons againſt her, III. 44.

Mead, Dr. Richard, attends Q. Anne in her laſt illneſs, IV. 369

Meath, Henry Jones Bp. of, endeavours to ſtop the execution of ſome cruel acts againſt the Proteſtants in Ireland, III. 83. argues againſt the repealing of the act of Settlement, 86

Mechlin ſubmits to the Allies, III. 751

Mecklenburg, D. of, marries the Czarina's niece, IV. 538

Meeting-Houſes; ſome pulled down, IV. 155

Melford, John Drummond E. of, King James's Secretary of State, III. 57, 68. odious to the Preſbyterians in Scotland, ibid. letters brought from him to Scotland, 73. excepted out of the Indemnity, 132. his letter to the E. of Perth, 440. Tallard's ſaying about him, 442

Melvil, ——Lord, made Secretary of State for Scotland, III. 75. promiſes to moderate the violence of the Preſbyterians in that Kingdom, but is not ſo good as his word, 105. his proceedings for ſettling Preſbytery, ibid. a great zealot for Preſbytery, 181, 182. made Privy-Seal, and moſt of his creatures laid aſide, 194. Preſident of the Council in Scotland, 555. turned out, 595

Memorial of the Dutch communicated to the Houſe of Lords and Commons, III. 440. of the French Ambaſſador to the States, 454. memorial by Daniel de Foe, 476. of the Church of England, 715, 716. preſented as a libel, 717. the Publiſher of it ordered to be proſecuted, 729. of the Elector of Hanover, IV. 225, &c. of the Dutch againſt the repreſentation of the Houſe of Commons, 242. of Prince Eugene and the Deputies of the States to the D. of Ormond, 282. of the Czar, 539, 615, &c. of Colonel Stanhope, 698. of the Marquiſs de Ponzobuena, 702. of Mr. Pointz, 703. of Mr. de Palms, 704. of the Britiſh and French Miniſters at the diet of Ratiſbon, 705

Menin taken by the Allies, III. 751

Mentz, Elector of, confers with the D. of Marlborough, IV. 21

Merchants deſign a fraud with regard to the goods imported into Scotland, III. 789. their petition, ibid. another petition of theirs, complaining of their great loſſes, IV. 40. and of the want of cruiſers, ibid. &c. petition of the Scotch Merchants for relief, 43. French, Dutch, and Jewiſh Merchants, inſtead of calling in the money they had in the Bank, they carried in more, 61, 62

Mercy, Count de, arrives at Naples, an account of him, IV. 589, 590. lands in Sicily, 591. his bravery at the battle of Franca-Villa, 591, &c. wounded there, 592. ſtruck blind, 595. has a conference with Admiral Byng, 599

Meſnager, Monſieur, his negotiations at the Court of England, IV. 212, 221. delivers the French King's anſwer to the demands laſt ſent over from England, ibid. ſigns the preliminaries of peace, 222. has a private converſation with the Queen, and ſpeaks to her in favour of the Pretender, 223. one of the Plenipotentiaries at the treaty of Utrecht, 247. his ſervants inſult Count de Rechteren, which ſtops for a while the negotiations at Utrecht, 290, 306, &c.

Meſſina taken by the Spaniards, IV. 567. the Engliſh fleet come thither, 568. the citadel ſurrenders, 570. beſieged by the Imperialiſts, the city ſurrenders, 595, &c. the citadel alſo ſurrenders, 598

Methuen, Paul, Envoy to Portugal, III. 554. concludes a neutrality, 559. and a treaty, 624. preſſes the K. of Portugal to carry on his conqueſts in Spain, 753. Envoy Extraordinary to the D. of Savoy, 758. made one of the Commiſſioners of the Admiralty, IV. 143. made one of the Commiſſioners of the Treaſury, 406. one of the Principal Secretaries of State, 499. reſigns his places, 523, 525. made Comptroller of the Houſehold, 617. made Treaſurer of the Houſhold, 687

Middleton, E. of, ſtarts up a difficulty when the Pretender was going to be proclaimed, III. 491. exhorted by K. James to embrace Popery, 492

Middleton, Alan Broderick Lord, Lord-Chancellor of Ireland, diſſents from ſome reſolutions of the Houſe of Lords, IV. 609

Milaneſe; treaty for evacuating it, III. 765. IV. 3, 4. evacuated, 4

Minas, Marquiſs des, aſſiſts at a Council of war, IV. 6. at the battle of Almanza, 8

Miniſters, diſtinction between the King and his Miniſters, IV. 578

Minorca, deſcription of that Iſland, which is taken by the Engliſh, IV. 95, &c.

Mint ſuppreſſed, IV. 672

Miremont, Armand de Bourbon Marquiſs de, goes to Utrecht, to take care of the intereſt of the French Refugees, IV. 245. intercedes for the Proteſtants in the gallies in France, 329

Miſſon, Maximilian, one of the Prophets, IV. 47

Modern Hiſtory; Profeſſors of it founded in our Univerſities, by K. George 1, IV. 679, &c.

Mohun, Charles Lord, tried for the murder of William Mountfort, III. 232. and for the murder of Captain Richard Coote, 391. is againſt the Occaſional Conformity bill, 628. carries E. Paulet a challenge from the D. of Marlborough, IV. 261. killed in a duel with D. Hamilton, 297

Moleſworth, William, reflects on the Convocation Houſes in Ireland, for which he is removed from the Privy-Council, IV. 331

Moleſworth, Robert Lord, his account of Denmark quoted, IV. 557. Envoy to Turin, 617

Molineux, William, his caſe of Ireland's being bound by acts of Parliament in England cenſured, III. 376

Money of braſs, coined by K. James in Ireland, cried down, III. 146

Monmouth, Charles Mordaunt E. of, goes with K. William to Holland, III. 164

Mons taken by the French, III. 166. K. William endeavours to ſurprize it, 208. blocked blocked up by the Allies, IV. 135. a deſcription of that place, 139. beſieged and taken, ibid.

Montague, Charles, made one of the Commiſſioners of the Treaſury, III. 195, 253. his character, 253. his reaſons for recoining the money, 305. the chief Manager of it, 308. inſtrument in reſtoring the public credit, 334. vote of the Commons in his favour, 374. had gained a great aſcendant in the Houſe of Commons, 378. reſigns the Chancellorſhip of the Exchequer, 394. made Auditor of the Exchequer, and created L. Halliſax, 437. impeached by the Commons, who addreſs the King to remove him from his Councils and Preſence, 459, 460. articles againſt him, 462. his anſwers, 463. acquitted, 467, 470

Montague, John D. of, ſworn of the Privy Council, IV. 105

Montague, Ralph D. of, travels beyond ſea, IV. 325. receives particular marks of favour from K. George, 402. Grand Maſter of the Order of the Bath, 687

Montague, Wortley, moves for a bill for naturalizing all foreign Proteſtants, IV. 110

Montague, Edward Wortley, made one of the Commiſſioners of the Treaſury, IV. 406

Monteleone, Marquiſs de, the Spaniſh Ambaſſador in England, IV. 562. his letter to Secretary Craggs, 573

Montgomery, Lord, proclamation for apprehending him, III. 142. in a plot againſt K. William, 199

Montmelian taken by the French, III. 187

Montroſe, James Grahdm Marquiſs of, a letter ſent to him by the Pretender, but not delivered, III. 768. created a Duke, 791. choſen one of the ſixteen Peers, IV. 64

Montroſe, James Graham D. of, ſworn of the Privy-Council, IV. 105. ſets himſelf up in oppoſition to the D. of Queensberry's power, 110. removed from the place of Lord Privy-Seal in Scotland, 325. made Secretary of State for Scotland, 404. made Lord Clerk Regiſter of Scotland, 501. and Keeper of the Great Seal, 504. is for the Peerage bill, 586

Moor, John, made Bp. of Norwich, III. 173

Moore, Colonel, Governor of Carolina, attacks Fort St. Auguſtin, III. 594

Moore, Arthur, made one of the Commiſſioners of Trade and Plantations, IV. 192. directs the Lord Privy Seal in matters of trade at the treaty of Utrecht, 247. Commiſſioner of trade, IV. 315. conſulted in the treaty of commerce, ibid. his ſpeech in vindication of it, ibid. account of him, 318. ſpeaks in favour of the treaty of commerce, 320. and of the Aſſiento trade, 339. gainer by the Spaniſh trade, and by the Aſſiento, 365, 366. intention to cenſure him, 366. concerned in a clandeſtine trade, ibid. removed from his place, 404. excepted out of the Act of Grace, 546

Mordaunt, Charles Lord Viſcount, made firſt Commiſſioner of the Treaſury, III. 40. created E. of Monmouth, 45. proteſts againſt rejecting the clauſe for taking away the Sacramental Teſt, 46. diſmiſſed from his employments, 126

Mordaunt, Colonel Henry, his ſpeech about the Union, III. 783. at Sacheverel's trial, IV. 153

Morel, Mr. gives Bp. Burnet an account of the intended Aſſaſſination of K. William, III. 210

Morpeth, Henry Howard Lord, moves for an addreſs, for reaſons why the ſquadrons was ſent into the Baltick, IV. 704

Mortmain, Statute of, repealed, III. 642

Mulgrave, John Sheffield E. of, his ſpeech on the bill for excluding Placemen from the Houſe of Commons, III. 229. oppoſes the Court, 231. created Marquiſs of Normanby, and ſworn of the Privy-Council, 252

Munden, Sir John, ſent againſt Du Caſſel's fleet, and does not behave well, III. 568. tried for it by a Court Martial, and acquitted, but is broke, 568, 569

Murray, John Lord, made Secretary of State, III. 309. created E. of Tullibardine, and appointed the King's Commiſſioner, 332

Murray, Charles Lord, in the Rebellion, IV. 449. his character, ibid. taken priſoner at Preſton, 459. ordered to be ſhot, 465. pardoned, 547

Muſcovite troops; diſpute between the Emperor and the K. of Sweden about them, IV. 17

Muſcovites and Saxons undertake to conquer Pomerania, IV. 308

Muſgrave, Sir Chriſtopher, at the head of a party againſt the Court, III. 237. took bribes, ibid. Clerk of the Ordnance, 327. objects to ſome words ſpoken by the L. Haverſham, 466, &c. made a Privy Counſellor, 545. and Clerk of the Ordnance, 554. his proceedings about the clauſe relating to the Succeſſion, 583. againſt the Place-bill, 587. oppoſes the taking away the firſt fruits and tenths, 642. ſilenced, 677

Mutiny and Deſertion; bill againſt it, III. 233, 234

N.

Nairn, William Murray, Lord, ordered to come and ſurrender himſelf, IV. 445. his character, 449. taken priſoner at Preſton, 459. impeached 482. brought to the bar of the Houſe of Lords, pleads guilty, and is condemned, 484. his Lady petitions the King for mercy, 485. reſpited, 487. diſcharged, 547

Nairne, Sir Daniel, Secretary to the Scottiſh Commiſſioners for the Union between England and Scotland, III. 736

Namur, beſieged and taken by the French, III. 206. and inveſted by the Confederates, 289. bombarded, 663

Nantz, Edict of, to be revived, III. 215, 216

Naples; deſigns of the Auſtrians upon it, III. 765. expedition there, IV. 3, 21. oppoſed by Great-Britain and Holland, ibid. conquered by the Imperialiſts, 22. inſurrection there, ibid. the inhabitants had an inbred hatred to the French, ibid. eccleſiaſtical revenues there, belonging to perſons reſiding out of the country, ſequeſtred, 98. the Viceroy forbids the remitting any money to Rome, 99. the great joy of the inhabitants upon the Engliſh fleet's coming there, 567. the weakneſs of that Kingdom, 597

Naturalization of the French Proteſtants; bill to repeal that act, IV. 200. that act repealed, 243

Navy; condition of it inquired into by the Houſe of Lords, III. 642. great debates in Parliament againſt the Navy-debt, IV. 653, &c.

Negroes, Aſſiento de, IV. 339

Nelſon, Robert, preſents Hereditary Right to the Queen, IV. 334

Netherlands. See Holland.

Neufchatel, Principality of, claimed by thirteen different perſons, IV. 30. adjudged to the K. of Pruſſia, ibid.

Newcaſtle, John Holles D. of, made Lord Privy-Seal, III. 687. offers the Bank a ſum of money to preſerve its credit, IV. 61. made Lord Privy-Seal, 190. dies, 219. was the richeſt ſubject in England, ibid.

Newcaſtle, Thomas Holles Pelham D. of, his ſpeech in the debates on the Septennial bill, IV. 492. made Lord Chamberlain, 525. quarrel between the Prince of Wales and him, 550. made Secretary of State, 679

New-England; that Colony by whom firſt founded, III. 513, &c.

Newfoundland; Q. Anne addreſſed to preſerve the fiſhery there, III. 791. reſtored to the Engliſh, IV. 129, 163. the taking of Canada a great ſecurity to it, 215. to be intirely given up to the Engliſh, 221, 251, 303. the French offer only the freedom of fiſhery there, 248. diſpute between the Courts of England and France, about the fiſhery there, 303, &c. given to the Engliſh, 314, 391

Newman, Mr. ſpeaks againſt the Aſſiento trade, IV. 339

News; a bill to prevent the publiſhing any without licence, III. 350

Newton, Sir Iſaac, his repreſentations about coins, IV. 553. his account of Wood's half-pence, 675

Nicholſon, Governor, takes poſſeſſion of Nova Scotia, puts a garriſon into Port-Royal, and calls it Annapolis, IV. 215. forms the deſign of the Canada or Quebec expedition, ibid.

Nicholſon, William, Bp. of Carliſle, his advertiſement about the Bp. of Bangor's ſermon, IV. 539

Nimeguen, peace concluded there, III. 35

Nithiſdale, William Maxwell E. of, takes up arms for the Pretender, IV. 445. ſummoned to ſurrender himſelf, ibid. taken priſoner at Preſton, 459. brought up to London, examined, and committed to the Tower, 465. impeached, 482. brought to the bar of the Houſe of Lords, pleads guilty, and is condemned, 484. his Lady petitions the King for mercy, 485. ordered for execution, 287. makes his eſcape, ibid. and 496

Nonjuring Party, riſe of them, III. 44. make a ſchiſm, 110, 111. a ſevere pamphlet againſt them, 143, &c. Nonjuring Biſhops and Clergy create a ſchiſm, 512

Norfolk, Thomas Howard D. of, committed to the Tower, IV. 664. debate about it, ibid. admitted to bail, 674

Normanby, John Sheffield Marquiſs of, makes an oppoſition to the bill for the Proteſtant Succeſſion, III. 445. finds fault with the Partition-treaty, 447. made Privy-Seal, 545. Q. Anne's regard for him, ibid. is againſt praying for the Princeſs Sophia, 550. created D. of Normanby and Buckinghamſhire, 589

Norris, Sir John, letters of his about the reduction of Sardinia, IV. 94, 95. made Admiral, 143. ſent to ſecure Sardinia, 176. ſails to the Baltic with a fleet, 423, 508, 538, 589, 618. made one of the Commiſſioners of the Admiralty, 562. writes to the Ruſſian Ambaſſadors, 618

North and Grey, William Lord, his ſpeeches about the malt-tax, IV. 317. is againſt addreſſing the Queen, to apply to the D. of Lorrain to remove the Pretender out of his Dominions, 322. moves to have all the ſtrangers that were in the Houſe of Lords put out, 349. ſpeaks againſt a reward being ſet on the Pretender's head, ibid. makes a motion for returning the Treaſurer thanks, 350. moves to have the treaties of peace and commerce taken into conſideration, ibid. ſpeaks for the Schiſm-bill, 362. his ſpeech about the South-Sea ſcheme, 611. ſeized near the Iſle of Wight, and brought up to London, 660. his houſe ſearched, ibid. admitted to bail, 674

Northumberland, George Fitz-Roy D. of, Capt. of the Life-guards, receives K. George I. at his landing, IV. 401. attends him at his public entry, 402

Nottingham, Daniel Finch E. of, made Secretary of State, III. 40. his character, ibid. offers to the Houſe of Lords the bill of Toleration and Comprehenſion, 44. infuſes jealouſies of the Whigs into the King, 54. K. William buys Kenſington Palace of him, 92. is at the head of the Cabinet Council, 139. reflected upon by the E. of Torrington, for ſuppreſſing ſome intelligence, 144. blamed for employing men that were reputed Jacobites, 190. a letter of his to Sir Ralph Delaval makes a buſtle in the Houſe of Commons, 192. complained of for giving improper orders to the fleet, 205, &c. complained of in the Houſe of Commons, 223, &c. his relation concerning the intended deſcent of the French upon England, 224, 226. Wharton moves for an addreſs to the King to remove him, 228. aggravates Admiral Ruſſel's errors, 230. thought to betray the King his Maſter's intereſt, 237. blamed for the ill ſucceſs of our fleet, 244. his intelligence of the fleet, 248. removed, 252. proteſts againſt the vote for acknowledging the reality of the Lancaſhire plot, 267. refuſes to take money from the Eaſt-India Company, 275. repreſents the bad ſtate of the coin in the Houſe of Lords, ibid. oppoſes the Aſſociation, and refuſes to ſign it voluntarily, 321, 322. oppoſes the Abjuration-act, 501. his motion for the Union of England and Scotland, 505. made Secretary of State, 545. excuſes Dr. Downant and Dr. Drake, 551. moves for an inquiry into thoſe books, wherein the murder of K. Charles I. was juſtified, 552. was againſt aſſiſting the Cevennois, 613, 614. thought it a diſhonour to England to ſtrike even in another King's Ports, 624. lays before the Houſe of Lords the papers relating to the Conſpiracy in Scotland, 633. vote of the the Commons in his favour, 635. his account of the Conſpiracy in Scotland, 637. &c. preſſes the Queen to diſmiſs the D. of Somerſet and Devonſhire from the Cabinet Council, 647. reſigns his place of Secretary of State, ibid. reflects on K. William with regard to the Partition treaty, 675. thoughts of ſending him to the Tower, ibid. urges the ill conſequences of the act of ſecurity in Scotland, ibid. was for inviting over the Princeſs Sophia, 719. ſeconds the E. of Rochester in the debates about the affairs of Spain, IV. 45. the Court endeavours to gain him on their ſide, 226. offers a clauſe to be inſerted in the addreſs of thanks to the Queen, 227. brings in the Occaſional Conformity bill, 230. moves for an addreſs to the Queen to deſire her to conſult with the Miniſters of the Allies in Holland, before the opening of the Congreſs, 231. advertiſement in the Poſt-Boy reflecting on him, 240. ſpeaks againſt the reſumptions of K. William's grants, 246. his ſpeech on occaſion of the D. of Ormond's being ordered not to fight, 261. and about the peace, 269. his ſpeech about the Union, 318. ſupports the motion for addreſſing the Queen to preſs the Duke of Lorrain to remove the Pretender out of his Dominions, 323. reflected upon in the public ſpirit of the Whigs, 340. repreſents the danger that threatened the Proteſtant Succeſſion, 345. his ſpeech upon the Lord Treaſurer's motion, for bringing in a bill to make it treaſon to bring any foreign troops into the Kingdom, ibid. his ſpeech about the peace with Spain, 352. ſpeaks againſt the Schiſm-bill, 362. moves for an addreſs of thanks for the Queen's proclamation againſt the Pretender, 365. his ſpeech about the Spaniſh trade, ibid. receives particular marks of favour from K. George, 402. made Preſident of the Council, 404. a letter of his to the D. of Roxburgh intercepted, 449, 450. is for receiving and reading the petitions of the condemned Lords, 486. removed from his place of Preſident of the Council, 487. ſpeaks againſt the bill for Septennial Parliaments, 490, 494. the penſion of 2500 l. per annum taken from him, 504. makes a complaint in the Houſe againſt the growth of profaneneſs and immorality, 646. thanked by both Univerſities and the Clergy, for his anſwer to Mr. Whiſton, ibid.

O.

OATES, Titus, debates about the judgment againſt him, III. 94. a conference thereupon, ibid.

Oath; Coronation-oath ſettled, III. 44

Oaths of Allegiance ordered to be taken, but refuſed by ſeveral, III. 43. oaths ſettled, 45. debates about them, 46

Occaſional Conformity; bill againſt it, III. 578. brought in again, 627, &c. 671. endeavours uſed to tack it to the land-tax bill, 672. thrown out by the Lords, 673. brought in again by the E. of Nottingham, IV. 230. the act repealed, 578, &c.

Orange, account of that Illuſtrious Family, III. 30, &c.

Orange, William III Prince of, born, III. 33. comes into the world under great diſadvantages, ibid. was of an infirm conſtitution, 34. the French King ſeizes his Principality of Orange, ibid. the Prince is choſen chief Nobleman in Zealand, and introduced into the Council, ibid. comes to viſit K. Charles II, ibid. is declared Admiral, and Captain General, ibid. and Stadholder, ibid. makes a ſtand againſt the French, ibid. retakes Narden and ſeizes Bonne, ibid. beats the French at the battle of Seneffe, ibid. offers the K. of France battle when before Bouchain, 35. marries Princeſs Mary, ibid. looked upon as the head of the Proteſtant Intereſt in Europe, and the greateſt check to the power of France, ibid. forms the league of Auſtria againſt France, 36. his character, 37, 38. See K. William III.

Ordinations of Diſſenters, III. 107, 108

Orford, Edward Ruſſel E. of, concerned in Kidd's affair, III. 396. impeached by the Commons, 459. their addreſs againſt him, 460. articles againſt him, 461. his anſwer, ibid. acquitted, 470. his accounts examined, 643. received with great favour by K. George, IV. 402. made firſt Commiſſioner of the Admiralty, 406. reſigns that place, 525

Orkney, Elizabeth Villiers Counteſs of, grants to her in Ireland, III. 399. K. William regards her, 509. the cauſe of L. Somers and E. of Portland's diſgrace, ibid.

Orkney, George Hamilton E. of, made Governor of Edinburgh-Caſtle, IV. 346

Orleans, D. of, is wounded at the battle of Turin, where he behaves bravely, III. 760. wanted to be made K. of Spain, and offers ſome propoſals to the Lord Galway for that purpoſe, IV. 11. ſuſpected of having poiſoned the two Dauphins, 246. had formed a project to make himſelf K. of Spain, 247. made Regent of France, 476. reſtores a juſt privilege to the Parliament of Paris, 477. reaſons of his acting towards England as he did, ibid. and 499. ready to contend for the Crown of France, 504. concludes a treaty with K. George and Holland, 505. murmurs in France againſt this treaty, ibid. guarantee of the Neutrality of Italy, 549. enters into the Quadruple-alliance, 562. Alberoni's plot againſt him, 582. declares war againſt Spain, ibid. offers K. George numerous forces, 584. offers his mediation to Sweden, 588. gives Admiral Byng leave to confiſcate all French ſhips in the ſervice of Spain, 589. refuſes the Marquiſs de Scotti a paſſport, 604. gives K. George I. notice of the plot againſt him, 659. projects a marriage between his daughters and the Princes of Spain, 674. dies, 676

Ormond, James Butler D. of, ſent to ſecure the quiet of Dublin, III. 145. wounded at the battle of Landen, 240. attends K. William in his laſt moments, 506. named Commander of a land army, 545. Commander in Chief of the forces at Cadiz and Vigo, 568. lands at Vigo, 570. rides to St. Paul's on the thankſgiving-day, amidſt loud acclamations, 574. thanked by the Lords for his ſervices at Vigo, ibid. they addreſs the Queen to order him to lay before them an account of his proceedings, ibid. he complains of Sir George Rooke's conduct at Cadiz, 575. is made Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, ibid. and 584. directed by the E. of Rocheſter, 605. his ſpeech to the Parliament of Ireland, ibid. &c. uneaſy at the inſpection of the public accounts, 609. foments the diviſions raiſed by the E. of Rocheſter, 688. deſires the Parliament of Ireland to adjourn, ibid. addreſſes preſented to him by the Diſſenters, ibid. favours the Pretender's friends, IV. 216. his ſpeech in the Parliament of England about the neceſſity of a peace, 228. made Commander in Chief of all the forces at home and abroad, 234. had orders not to engage neither in ſiege nor battle, 253. his inſtructions, 255. aſſures the Dutch of his intentions to carry on the war vigorouſly, ibid. receives orders from the Queen not to venture a battle, 256. his letters thereupon, 256, 257—259. refuſes to fight, 258. receives a letter from Villars, 257. correſponds with him, 274, 279. declares his orders about the ceſſation of arms, 274. deſires Prince Eugene to give over the ſiege of Queſnoy, 277. conference between him and one of the Dutch Deputies, 296. returns to England, 297. promotes Dr. Swift to the Deanery of St. Patrick, 325. made Governor of Dover, and Warden of the Cinque-Ports, ibid. a penſion of 5000 l. per annum ſettled upon him, ibid. L. Halifax's compliment on him, 352. ſends for Dr. Ratcliffe to attend the Queen, 396. not admitted into the King's bed-chamber, 401. diſmiſſed from his office of Captain-General, but the King ſends him word, he ſhould be glad to ſee him at Court, 404. made one of the Privy-Council in Ireland, ibid. riots in London on his birth-day, 421. cry of High-Church and Ormond, 425. his popular behaviour, 427, &c. attempt upon his Ducheſs, 428. impeached of high-treaſon, ibid. flies out of England, ibid. the articles againſt him, 434. his name and coat of arms razed, and inventories taken of his perſonal eſtate, 436. reſigns the place of Chancellor of the Univerſity of Oxford, 442. comes towards England, 450, 453. returns from the coaſt of England, 473, 475, 478. bill for attainting him in Ireland, 478. his letter to Baron Gortz, 511. comes to Spain, and ſails with the Spaniſh ſquadron for England, 583. a proclamation againſt him, ibid. concerned in Layer's plot, 666. ſome deſigns formed by his inſtigation in favour of the Pretender, 698

Orphans of the City of London; their affairs examined by Parliament, III. 269

Orrery, Charles Boyle E. of, created Baron Boyle of Marſton, IV. 219. ſent to the Hague to redreſs ſome diſorders, 302. committed to the Tower, 660. admitted to bail, 674

Osborne, Thomas, E. of Danby, impeached, III. 14, 15. inſtrumental in the marriage of the Princeſs Mary with the Prince of Orange, 35. created Marquiſs of Caermarthen, and made Preſident of the Council, 38. K. James had offered to put himſelf into his hands before he went away, 39. cool with regard to the Settlement, ibid. brings a ſtorm on the Marquiſs of Halifax, 39. an addreſs propoſed in the Houſe of Commons, to deſire the King to remove him from his Preſence and Councils, 97. chief author of the change made in the Lieutenancy of London, 125. in great credit with the King, 131. a deſign to impeach him, 162. blamed for the ill ſucceſs of our fleet, 244. created D. of Leeds, 253

Osborne, Peregrine, Marquiſs of Caermarthen, at the attempt upon Breſt, III. 254. his diſcovery to the Houſe of Lords about a letter of the E. of Nottingham, 192

Oſſulſton, Charles Bennet Lord, created E. of Tankerville, IV. 407

Oſtend and Newport; propoſal to put them into the hands of the Engliſh, III. 446

Oſtend, taken by the Allies, III. 751. deſcription of it, ibid. yielded by the Dutch, IV. 337. not to be alienated from the Netherlands, ibid. See Eaſt-India Company.

Oudenard; deſcription of that town, IV. 72. inveſted by the French, ibid. the French quit the ſiege, 73. battle near Oudenard, 74

Overall, Biſhop, his book publiſhed, III. 521

Oxford; that Univerſity unhappily ſucceſsful in propagating anti-revolutional principles, III. 646. its decree burnt, IV. 161. the Mayor receives a letter, ordering him to proclaim the Pretender, 394. riots there, 433. a letter from a Gentleman there to his friend at London, about drinking the Pretender's health, 442. debate about the riot there, 519

Oxford, Robert Harley E. of, See Harley. Lord-Treaſurer, his oppoſition to the Pretender's being removed out of Lorrain, IV. 322. inſtalled Knight of the Garter, 328. hated both by the Whigs and Tories, ibid. upon ill terms with the L. Bolingbroke, ibid. notwithſtanding which he brings his own ſcheme to bear, ibid. raiſes a million in two days time, 329. L. Bolingbroke, Secretary Bromley, and Sir William Wyndham, gain the aſcendant over him, upon which he thinks of retiring, 335. endeavours to ſupport the Bank, 336. moves for a bill to make it treaſon to bring any foreign troops into the Kingdom, 345. vindicates the peace, 349. and his paying a yearly ſum to the Highlanders, 350. his letter to the Elector of Brunſwick, 358. was for inviting him over, 359. doubtful, whether he was for or againſt the Schiſm-bill, 360. bred among Schiſmaticks, ibid. had caſtrated the Schiſm-bill, ibid. is for examining into the Spaniſh trade, 365. kept to himſelf the principal direction of domeſtic affairs, and the diſpoſal of places, 366. has great quarrels with L. Bolingbroke, 367. endeavours to reconcile himſelf to the Whigs, and to remove L. Bolingbroke, ibid. ſends the Queen an account of public affairs, ibid. and 385. cauſes of his diſgrace, 367. his attachment to the Houſe of Hanover, ibid. removed, ibid. goes to wait upon K. George at Greenwich, but is not taken notice of, 401. attends at the King's Coronation, 407. his conduct very extraordinary, 418. appears unconcerned, and boaſts of the great things he had done for ſecuring the Hanover Succeſſion, ibid. takes his ſeat in the Houſe of Lords, 421. his letter to Queen Anne, 426. impeached of High-treaſon, &c. 427. comes to the Houſe of Peers, and ſoon after retires, ibid. articles of impeachment againſt him, 429, &c. ordered to be committed to ſafe cuſtody, 431. his ſpeech in his own defenſe, fenſe, ibid. attended by a mob, ibid. brought to the bar of the Houſe, and receives a copy of the articles againſt him, ibid. put a few days in the cuſtody of the Black-Rod, ibid. carried to the Tower, 432. additional articles againſt him, 434. debate in the Houſe of Commons on his anſwer, ibid. preſents a petition to the Houſe of Lords, 541. his trial, ibid. diſcharged, 545. forbid the Court, ibid. excepted out of the act of Grace, 546. his ſpeech upon the Mutiny-bill, 557, and on the repeal of the Schiſm-bill, 578. is againſt the Peerage-bill, 585. dies, 680. account of him and his family, ibid. &c.

P.

Packington, Sir John, exhibits petitions againſt the Bp. of Worceſter, and his ſon, for endeavouring to prevent his election, III. 575. his ſpeech in the debate about the danger of the Church, 728. ſpeaks againſt the Union, 784. makes a complaint in the Houſe of Commons againſt Dr. Ratcliffe, IV. 396. taken into cuſtody, 439. honourably diſcharged, ibid.

Paget, William Lord, ſent to Conſtantinople, to mediate a peace between the Turks and the Imperialiſts, III. 214. mediator of the peace of Carlowitz, 385. appointed Envoy Extraordinary to Hanover, but declines it, IV. 352. created E. of Uxbridge, 407

Paget, Henry, made one of the Commiſſioners of the Treaſury, IV. 190. created Baron of Burton, 234

Palatine, Elector, the Upper Palatinate reſtored to him, IV. 69, 101. furniſhes the Emperor with troops, 69

Palatines come over to England, IV. 148. a brief for them, ibid. ſent over to Ireland and New-York, ibid. votes of the Parliament of Ireland about them, 149. the relief granted them cauſes great uneaſineſs, 152. inquiry of the Houſe of Commons about them, 200

Paletti, Marquiſs of, executed for murder, IV. 556

Palms, Mr. de, his memorial, IV. 704. cenſured in Parliament, ibid. ordered to depart the Kingdom, 705

Paper-Credit in Scotland rejected, III. 691

Papiſts excluded from the Crown, III. 55. gainers in ſome reſpect by the Revolution, 90. addreſs for diſarming them, 96. and for ſecuring them, 97. ordered to repair to their places of abode, 133. fly out of Dublin, 138. two proclamations againſt them in England, 139, 200. reſort to London, an addreſs of the Commons againſt them, 389. act againſt them, 401, &c. their ſcheme of Religion, 511. excluded from being Members of the Eſtates of Scotland, 601. bill againſt them in Ireland, 610. and in England, 685. pretend that the Church was in danger, 715. proclamation for putting the laws in execution againſt them, IV. 202. a proclamation for diſarming them in Ireland, 394. and in England, 398. eſpouſe the abdicated Family, 402. a tax upon them, 665

Parker, Sir Thomas, his behaviour at Dr. Sacheverel's trial, IV. 154. made Lord Chief-Juſtice, 156. cauſes a miſtake relating to the Regency to be rectified, 329, &c. one of the Lords Juſtices, 394. his ſpeech at the E. of Oxford's trial, 543. made Lord Chancellor, 562. See Macclesfield.

Parliament, bill for Triennial Parliaments, III. 6. of K. William, reverſe attainders, 92. bill for the frequent calling and meeting of them, 132, &c. paſſed, 160. Members taken off by places and penſions, 190. bill for the frequent meeting of them, 265. act againſt treating at elections of Parliament-men, and for regulating thoſe elections, 323. the buſineſs of the Lancaſhire plot laid before them, 265. their proceedings againſt bribery, 267. and about the Orphans and Eaſt-India Company affairs, 269, &c. take into conſideration the recoining of the money, 305. reſtores the public credit, 334. proſecutes the French ſmugglers, 371. order of the Houſe of Commons againſt written protections from Parliament-men, 304. a party for France in the Parliament, 439. both Houſes meet upon K. William's death, 539. go to St. Paul's on the thankſgiving-day for the victory at Vigo, 573. both Houſes give the D. of Marlborough thanks for his eminent ſervices, 768. firſt Seſſion of the Parliament of Great-Britain, IV. 39. addreſs the Queen not to make peace without the reſtitution of all Spain, 46. proceeds with great unanimity in their reſolutions for the ſupport of the Government againſt the Pretender, 58. a faction among the Scots in the ſecond Parliament of Great-Britain, 110. both Houſes addreſs the Queen to order the D. of Marlborough over into Holland, 186. the Queen's meſſage to them of her reſolution to ſupport the Houſe of Auſtria, 203, &c. act for Septennial Parliaments, 490, &c.

Parliament in Scotland inquires into the Glencoe affair, III. 283. ſign the Aſſociation, and grant K. William a Supply, 332. the Eaſt-India Company lay their grievances before it, 380, &c. their addreſs and petition to the King thereupon, 380, &c. paſſes an act for keeping a land-force, and another for a land-tax, 425. great diſputes whether the Parliament ſhould be continued, or a new one called, 556, &c. the Queen's letter to them, 649. debates about the bill of Succeſſion, 650, &c. and the Supply, 651. deſire to have all the examinations, relating to the plot, laid before them, 652. grants a ceſs for the pay of the army, ibid. addreſs the Queen that the evidence and papers relating to the plot might be laid before them againſt the next Seſſion, 653. their proceedings about the treaty with England, 690, &c.

Parliament in Ireland raiſes a maintenance for the army in that Kingdom, III. 392. votes a Supply, 688. uneaſineſs between them and the Convocation, ibid. their votes in favour of the Proteſtant Succeſſion, ibid. and 689

Parma, D. of, his memorial at the Congreſs of Cambray, IV. 650

Parma and Placentia to be ſettled on the Q. of Spain's ſon, IV. 549, 563, 605. the inveſtiture of them granted to him by the Emperor, 711

Parties at the Revolution, III. 25. three parties formed in Scotland, 70. a party formed againſt K. William, 189, 237

Partition-Treaty; negotiations about it, III. 383, &c. ſecond Partition-treaty, 407. greatly diſliked by the Spaniards and Emperor, 411, &c. and by the Engliſh, 420. cenſured in the Houſe of Lords and Commons, 447, &c. papers relating to it laid before the Houſe of Commons, 457

Paſſarowitz; treaty ſigned there, IV. 565

Paterſon, William, forms the project of the Weſt-India and African Companies in Scotland, and the Darien Settlement, III. 283, 308, &c.

Patkul, Count, III. 792

Patrick, Simon, made Bp. of Chicheſter, III. 103. reviews the Liturgy, 106, &c. tranſlated to the See of Ely, 173. dies. IV. 37

Patronages reſtored in Scotland, IV. 244

Patten, Robert, his account of the Rebellion, and of the heads of it, IV. 448

Paul, William, tried and condemned, IV. 498. executed, ibid. his dying ſpeech makes a great impreſſion on many perſons, 501

Pawlet, John Earl, made firſt Commiſſioner of the Treaſury, IV. 190. viſits the D. of Marlborough, 196. made Steward of the Houſhold, 219. his reflecting ſpeech on the D. of Marlborough, for which he is challenged, 261. inſtalled Knight of the Garter, 328. was for admitting the Preſbyterians to be heard againſt the Occaſional Conformity-bill, 362. removed from his place of Steward of the Houſhold, 404

Peace, propoſed by France, III. 327. a ſeparate one between France and the D. of Savoy, 328. the preliminaries of a peace, 351. conferences at Ryſwick about it, 352, 357. ſigned by England, Spain and Holland, 360. and by the Emperor and the Empire, 363. peace of Carlowitz, 385. overtures made by the French for a peace, 763. rejected, 764. Dr. Hare's thoughts upon it, ibid. &c. negotiations for one, IV. 120, &c. the preliminaries of it, 128, rejected by France, 129. but ratified by Great-Britain, 130. and by Holland, 131. they were contrived only to divide the Allies, 132. new overtures for a peace, 144. negotiations for one begun by Gualtier, 210. new ones made by Torcy, 222. the preliminaries of peace ſigned, 223. made public, and ſeverely reflected upon, 224. communicated to the States, who are alarmed at them, ibid. conferences for a peace opened at Utrecht, ibid. and 247. coalition of ſeveral Peers againſt a peace, 226. the French propoſals for a peace, 248. the demands of the Allies, 251. the French Plenipotentiaries give a plan for a general peace, 252. not communicated to the States, 253. negotiations are carried on directly between England and France, 263. the plan of it communicated by the Queen to the Parliament, 267, &c. a new ſcheme propoſed by the Dutch, 295. another propoſed to the States by the E. of Strafford, 300. the French try to elude the preliminaries they had entered into with Great-Britain, 303. the Engliſh Miniſtry ſign a ſeparate peace with France, 304, 308, 310. they ſcruple to do it a while, 309. peace ſigned, 310. the treaty brought to London, 311. addreſſes about it, 312, &c. proclaimed, 313. thankſgiving for the peace, 324. debates about it, 352. between England and Spain, the chief articles of it, 339. faults of it, 401. peace between England and Sweden, 588

Peerage-bill, debates about it, IV. 586. dropped, 587. brought in again, 608. debates about it, ibid. dropped a ſecond time, ibid.

Peers, ſixteen, for Scotland to be elected, and the manner of it ſettled, III. 777. twelve new ones made at once in England, IV. 234. left of them, 585

Pelham, Thomas, one of the Commiſſioners of the Treaſury, III. 163. reſigns that place, 195

Pelham, Sir Thomas, created a Baron, III. 781. made E. of Clare, IV. 407

Pelham, Thomas, made one of the Commiſſioners of trade, IV. 548. made Secretary of War, 679. his ſpeech in the debate about the treaties of Hanover and Vienna, 693, &c.

Pembroke, Thomas Herbert E. of, made Privy-Seal, III. 193. made one of the Lords Juſtices, 280. Plenipotentiary at the treaty of Ryſwick, 350. made Knight of the Garter, 409. Lord Preſident, and Lord High-Admiral, 504. diſmiſſed, and refuſes a penſion, 545. is for declaring war againſt France, ibid. Maſter of the Horſe and Preſident of the Council, 572. againſt the Occaſional Conformity-bill, 628. Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, his ſpeech to the Parliament of that Kingdom, IV. 33. made Lord High-Admiral, 104. reſigns, 143. put up for Chancellor of the Univerſity of Oxford, 442

Penn, William, enters into a plot to reſtore K. James, III. 166. proclamation for apprehending him, 171

Perth, James Drummond E. of, comes to Scotland with the Pretender, IV. 62, 63. comes to Spain with the Pretender, 583

Peru; the Engliſh project to take it, IV. 605

Peterborough, Henry Mordaunt E. of, impeached, III. 113. adviſes Sir John Fenwick to ſet up a counter-plot, 337. encourages Smith, 348. his odd behaviour in that affair, ibid. ſent to the Tower, and turned out of all his places, 349

Peterborough, Charles Mordaunt E. of, his ſpeech on the Occaſional Conformity-bill, III. 673. ſworn of the Privy-Council, 688. goes to Catalonia, 706. publiſhes a manifeſto, 707. lays ſiege to Barcelona, ibid. &c. highly commended by K. Charles, 710. jealous of Count Cifuentes, 711. marches into Valentia and Arragon, 711, 712. raiſes the ſiege of St. Matthew, 712. makes a ſhew of purſuing the enemy, ibid. his letter from Alcala to K. Charles, 713. poſſeſſes himſelf of Nules, and forms his cavalry, which preſerves Valentia, ibid. recruits the dismounted Engliſh and Spaniſh dragoons, and forms a new regiment of dragoons, 714. raiſes jealouſies of Brigadier Mahoni in the Spaniſh officers, ibid. makes himſelf maſter of Molviedro, ibid. marches thence without diſturbance to Valentia, ibid. goes to the relief of Barcelona, 752. comes with a ſmall body to aſſiſt K. Charles, 755. uneaſy at not having having the chief command, ibid. &c. appointed Ambaſſador Extraordinary, has ſome acceptable to K. Charles, 756. withdraws to Genoa, ibid. aſſiſts at a General Council, 763. recalled, ibid. gives his opinion againſt an offenſive war, IV. 4. his anſwers to the queſtions of the Committee of the Houſe of Lords, 6. debates in the Houſe of Lords about his conduct in Spain, 45, 53. his ſpeech, 45. his conduct in Spain examined into by the Parliament, 53, &c. he is made Knight of the Garter, 328. ſent Ambaſſador to the K. of Sicily, 335. made Governor of Minorca, 346. his proceedings about the Catalans, 379. and 380. returns to England, 398. the French King aſſures him that he would acknowledge K. George, ibid. returns to England, appears at St. James's, and is forbid the Court, 421. is ſeized at Bologna, 549, &c. his ſpeech about the bill againſt blaſphemy, 647

Petition, it is voted in the Houſe of Commons, that it is the undoubted right of the People of England to petition or addreſs the King, III. 503. againſt the Septennial bill, IV. 495. of the London Clergy againſt the Quakers bill, 695

Petit, Brigadier, aſſiſts at the conqueſt of Minorca, IV. 95. made governor of fort St. Philip, 97

Philip V. K. of Spain, declared ſuch, III. 425, 427, 428. ſets out for Spain, 428. notifies his acceſſion to all the Courts, except that of England, 431. a deſign for an addreſs from the Houſe of Commons to own him for K. of Spain, 439. gives K. William notice of his acceſſion to the Crown, who owns him for K. of Spain, 453, 454. marries the D. of Savoy's ſecond daughter, 486. falls into an ill habit of body, ibid. has diſputes with the States of Catalonia, ibid. acknowledges the Pretender for K. of England, 491. goes into Italy, 554. to Naples, and is at the battle of Luzzara, 566, 567. ſeizes the Merchants plate at Vigo, 572. proclaims war againſt, and invades Portugal, 667. takes ſeveral towns, ibid. forms a large body near Madrid, 713. goes from Madrid to beſiege Valentia and Gironne, 752. beſieges Barcelona, ibid. comes to Madrid, but ſoon leaves it again, 753. returns thither, 755. marches up to the E. of Galway, ibid. See Spain. a project made by the Miniſtry to yield to him Spain and the Weſt-Indies, IV. 204. uneaſy at the D. of Berry's marrying the D. of Orleans's daughter, 247. negotiations about his renunciation of the Crown of Spain, 263, &c. his Miniſters not admitted at the congreſs of Utrecht, 287, 290, 304. his renunciation of the Crown of France, 295. extorts a donative from the Engliſh Merchants, 399. pretends to have numberleſs complaints againſt the Emperor, 504. ready to contend for the Crown of France, ibid. offended at the alliance between England and the D. of Orleans, 505. falls upon the Emperor's Dominions, 549. the Courts of England and France endeavour to bring about an accommodation between him and the Emperor, ibid. rejects all propoſals, and continues his warlike preparations, 562. his declaration in favour of the pretender, 583. attempts to relieve Fontarabia, 604. abdicates the Crown, 681. reſumes it upon his Son's deceaſe, 688. concludes two treaties with the Emperor, 689, &c. remits great ſums to Vienna, 690

Phipps, Sir William, made Governor of New-England, III. 195

Phipps, Conſtantine, Council for Dr. Sacheverel, IV. 154. knighted and made Lord Chancellor of Ireland, 195, 196. thanked by the Clergy, 216, 217. made one of the Lords Juſtices, ibid. promotes the Jacobite intereſt in Ireland, 330. the Commons there reſolve upon an addreſs to the Queen for removing him from the Chancellorſhip, 331. the Biſhops vote a contrary addreſs in his favour, ibid. reflected upon in the Conduct of the Purſe, 332. appointed one of the Lords Juſtices of Ireland, 333. cauſes K. George to be proclaimed in Ireland, 394. removed from being Lord Juſtice and Lord Chancellor, 404. created Doctor of the Civil Law at Oxford, 407. preſents a petition to the Court at the Old Bailey in favour of Bp. Atterbury, 661

Picardy, plundered by the Confederates, IV. 79

Pickard, Captain, deſtroys ſeveral French ſhips in Bertrand Bay, III. 255

Pierrepoint, Thomas, created Baron Pierrepoint of Hanſley in Ireland, III. 596

Pignerol, beſieged by the D. of Savoy, III. 241

Piper, Count, the D. of Marlborough waits upon him, IV. 15, 16.

Pittis, William, proſecuted for the caſe of the Church of England's memorial, III. 792

Placemen; a queſtion in the Houſe of Commons about their being Members of that Houſe, III. 116. bill for excluding them from the Houſe of Commons, 226, 227. the King refuſes to paſs it, 250. motion for diſabling Placemen and Penſioners from ſerving in Parliament, 722. Place-bill loſt, IV. 244

Placentia attacked by the Engliſh, III. 611

Plague in Poland, IV. 101. at Dantzick, 142. at Copenhagen, 214. at Marſeilles, a proclamation upon that occaſion, 632. bill to prevent the ſpreading of the plague, 654

Plate; bill for encouraging the bringing of it to the Mint, III. 307, 334

Plays and Play-houſes, ſcandalous, an order againſt them, III. 391

Plebeian, the, a pamphlet againſt the Peerage-bill, anſwered by Mr. Addiſon in the Old Whig, IV. 586, 587

Plot; Lancaſhire plot, III. 265. Aſſaſſination-plot, 312. a plot in Scotland, 629. not duly inquired into, 647. all the examinations relating to it not ſent down to the Parliament as deſired, 652. taken again into conſideration, and the examinations ſent down, 694. a plot diſcovered, IV. 659. addreſſes thereupon, 659, &c.

Plunket, John, apprehended, IV. 660. had travelled to Rome, 667. votes of the Houſe of Commons againſt him, ibid. bill to inflict pains and penalties upon him, 667, &c.

Pointis, Mr. de, takes Carthagena, III. 354. eſcapes the Engliſh fleet, ibid. and 355. comes with a ſquadron before Gibraltar, 668. ſome of the ſhips deſtroyed by the Engliſh, 705. returns with a ſtronger ſquadron, but is forced to fly, and ſeveral of his ſhips are deſtroyed, ibid.

Points, or Poyntz, Stephen, his memorial to the K. of Sweden, IV. 703

Poland, Auguſtus K. of, invades Pomerania, III. 410. defeated by the K. of Sweden, 486. See Auguſtus K. of Poland. the Proteſtants oppreſſed in that Kingdom, IV. 605

Poland, John Sobieski K. of, dies, III. 331. France endeavours to place the Prince of Conti on that Throne, 355. but the Elector of Saxony is choſen, 356. See Auguſtus, K. of. A war there, 559, 568, 626. continuation of the troubles there, IV. 101

Polignac, Abbot de, one of the French Plenipotentiaries, IV. 164, &c. his ſpeeches there, 248. Mr. Vanderduſſen's ſmart ſaying to him about the French Proteſtants, 251. made a Cardinal, 307

Polhil, David, impriſoned for the Kentiſh petition, III. 474

Poll-Tax in Scotland, III. 282, &c. in England, 334, 368

Pooley, John, Bp. of Raphoe, proteſts againſt the meeting of the Parliament on a holy-day, for which he is taken into cuſtody, IV. 148

Pope; the French King's letter to him, III. 766. his mediation for a peace deſired, 764. the French King writes a letter to him, upon the Pretender's expedition into Scotland, IV. 56, 57. Clement IX. ſides with the Houſe of Bourbon againſt that of Auſtria, 98. countenances the Pretender's expedition into Scotland, ibid. difference between the Emperor and him, ibid. he raiſes an army, 99. at length he agrees with the Emperor, 100. delays acknowledging K. Charles, 140. Clement XI. cauſes the E. of Peterborough to be ſeized, 549

Popery; petition from ſeveral in Lancaſhire againſt it, III. 730. bill to prevent the growth of it, ibid.

Popple, Mr. Secretary of the Commiſſioners of Trade, III. 327

Porter, Captain, concerned in the Aſſaſſination-plot, III. 312, 320. his character, 320. an evidence, 325, 337, &c.

Porter, Sir Charles, Chancellor of Ireland, motion to impeach him, III. 287. made one of the Lords Juſtices, 332. dies, ibid.

Portland, William Bentick E. of, a great favourite of K. William, made Groom of the Stole, and Privy-Purſe, III. 39. created Baron of Cirencester, Viſcount Woodſtock, and Earl of Portland, 45. refuſes to take money from the Eaſt-India Company, 275, 277. begs of the King the Lordſhips of Denbigh, &c. in Wales, 310. it is oppoſed by ſeveral Gentlemen, and an addreſs preſented to the King by the Commons about it, ibid. and 311, &c. the Aſſaſſination-plot is diſcovered to him, 317. entertains Smith as a ſpy, 348. has an interview with Marſhal Bouffiers, 359. his ſolemn embaſſy to France, 378. can obtain nothing in favour of the Proteſtants in France, 379. ſupplanted by the K. of Albemarle, and at his return, reſigns all his places, ibid. grant of lands to him in Ireland, 399. one of the Plenipotentiaries at the ſecond Partition-treaty, 408. communicates to the Houſe of Lords his ſhare in that affair, 451, &c. commits a miſtake in his accounts, 457. impeached by the Commons, ibid. but no articles are drawn againſt him, 462. attends K. William in his laſt moments, 507. who was the cauſe of his diſgrace, 509. ſtops by his diligence the reſumption of K. William's grants, IV. 246. ordered to part with his place of Colonel of the firſt troop of Horſe-guards, 325. receives particular marks of favour from K. George, 402. created Marſ. of Titchfield, and D. of Portland, 500. made one of the Lords of the Bed-chamber, 548. his ſpeech at a Court of the South-Sea Directors, 624

Port-Mahon, the Spaniards deſire to have it reſtored, IV. 605

Portmore, Daniel Collyer Earl of, made Commander in Chief of the Queen's forces in Portugal, IV. 192. Guiſcard correſponds with France under cover to him, 201

Portocarrero, Cardinal, thought to have forged the K. of Spain's will, III. 425

Port St. Mary plundered by the Engliſh, III. 569

Portugal, Don Pedro K. of, acceeds to the Partition-treaty, III. 412. enters into an alliance with France, 487. afraid of the naval preparations in England, 554. concludes a neutrality with England, 559. enters into a treaty with Q. Anne and the States General, 623, &c. inſiſts upon the honours of the flag from the Engliſh Admiral, when in his ports, 624. the auxiliary forces of England and Holland land there, 665. their ill ſucceſs, ibid. not furniſhed with horſe by the King, ibid. the King governed by French Counſels, 666. his Kingdom invaded by the Spaniards, ibid. the King comes to the army with a deſign to invade Caſtile, 667. lived privately in a little houſe at Alcantar, 762. has an intrigue with a beautiful Engliſh Lady, ibid. dies, ibid.

Portugal, Don John, K. of, ſigns a treaty of alliance, III. 762. marries the Emperor's ſiſter, IV. 31, 32

Portugal; bill for encouraging the trade there, IV. 43. the trade of that Kingdom prejudiced by the treaty of commerce, 315

Powis, William Herbert Marquiſs of, ſails from Ireland into France with King James, III. 138, 145

Powis-houſe burnt, IV. 326

Pozzobueno, Marquiſs de, quits England, leaving a memorial behind him, IV. 702. his letter to the D. of Newcaſtle, 703

Præmunientes clauſe, III. 525

Pragmatick Sanction, IV. 689. guaranteed by England, 711

Preachers at Whitehall, IV. 680

Preſbyterians; a bill of toleration and comprehenſion in their favour, III. 44, 49. account of them, 45. their haughty carriage in Scotland, 75. demand to have the King's Supremacy, and the Right of Patronage taken away, ibid. uſe the Epiſcopal Clergy in Scotland with great ſeverity, 105, 124. their violent proceedings, 181. their character, 182. offend K. William, 194. jealous of him, 195. deſirous of recovering his favour, they manage with more temper, 245, &c. join with the Jacobites, 286. the origin of the Preſbyterians, 513. many embarked for New-England are ſtopped, 515. are againſt

INDEX to the Continuation of the History of England.

gainſt a Toleration, ibid. would not allow K. Charles to have the Common-Prayer read in his family, 516. their propoſals at the Reſtoration, ibid. were ready for an Union, 520. thoſe in Scotland jealous of the Union, 770. act for ſecuring their government, 772

Preſton, Richard Graham Lord, proclamation for apprehending him, III. 142. enters into a plot for reſtoring K. James, 166. taken, ibid. tried and condemned, 169. pardoned, 170

Pretender, acknowledged K. of England by the K. of France, III. 491. and by the K. of Spain, the Pope, and the D. of Savoy, ibid. but the Kings of Portugal and Denmark refuſe to own him, 491, 492. the Engliſh Nation highly angry at his being proclaimed King, 495. act for attainting him, and for abjuring him, 501. a deſign to place him on the Throne, after the Queen's death, 630. his intereſt protected in Scotland, 767. letters of his ſent to ſeveral Noblemen in that Kingdom, ibid. tells Captain Stratton that he longs to be among his Scots friends, 768. his birth-day kept publickly in Scotland, IV. 34. account of his intended deſcent on Scotland, 56, &c. the French King gives him a ſword, and takes leave of him, ibid. his motto upon his colours and ſtandards, ibid. he and his adherents are proclaimed traitors, 57. ſerves in the French army, 68, 69. his cowardly behaviour at the battle of Oudenard, 75. the Pope favoured his expedition into Scotland, 98. the French offer to abandon him, 125, 129. Bp. Burnet warns the Queen about her eſpouſing his intereſt, 163. his friends openly ſhew themſelves in Scotland, 217. his medal, ibid. Leſley was to convert him, 218. tranſactions relating to him, 252, &c. ill of the ſmall-pox, 254. his Siſter dies of it, ibid. various reports about him, 289. his proteſtation, 313. declaration of the French Miniſter at the Hague about him, 346. account of him by C. Leſley, 357. queſtion whether Q. Anne knew any thing of the deſign of bringing him in, 372. poſts to Verſailles upon the news of the Queen's death, but Lewis XIV. deſires him to quit his dominions, 400. his manifeſto ſent to ſeveral of the Engliſh Nobility, 409. is in Lorrain, 416, 417. a reward of a 100,000 l. to ſuch as ſhould ſeize him, 433. rebellion in Scotland in his favour, 436. proclaimed at Caſtletoun, and his ſtandard ſet up at Brae-Mar, 437. his adherents publiſh a manifeſto, 438, 439, &c. his health drank at Oxford, 442. proclaimed in Cornwall, 443. his declaration, 453. lands at Peterhead in Scotland, 465. is proclaimed, and receives the homage of the Epiſcopal people at Aberdeen, ibid. attacked with an ague, 466. forms a Council, and publiſhes ſix proclamations, ibid. iſſues out an order for burning ſome villages, 467. imbarks at Montroſe, and lands at Gravelin, 471. complains of diſappointments from abroad, 472. his paper to General Gordon, ibid. the E. of Stair preſents two memorials to the Court of France relating to him, 474, 475. removes the L. Bolingbroke from being his Secretary of State, 475, 476. bill in the Iriſh Parliament for attainting him, and giving a reward for his head, 478. ſends a letter to the Lord-Mayor of London, with orders to proclaim him King of Great-Britain, 485. the Jacobites wear white roſes on his birth-day, 500. removes into Italy, 505, &c. conſpiracy to ſet him on the Throne by means of Sweden, 506. K. of Sweden's project in his favour, 539. a marriage propoſed between him and the Czar's daughter, 540. Cardinal Alberoni projects ſomething in his favour, 575, 582. enters into that Cardinal's ſcheme, 583. comes to Spain, ibid. the K. of Spain's declaration in his favour, ibid. marries Prince Sobieski's daughter, 584, 585. Sweden engages not to give him any aſſiſtance, 614. Pope Clement XI. very kind to him, 651. the Pretender's declaration, 664. burnt, 665. treaty in his favour between the Emperor and Spain, 690. deſigns formed in his behalf, 699, &c. mentioned in Palm's memorial, 705

Prior, Matthew, his witty repartee to one of the French King's officers, III. 379. Secretary to the embaſſy in France, 415. removed from the board of Trade and Plantation, 792. ſent Ambaſſador into France, IV. 220. writes the Examiner, 221. comes back to England, ibid. Mat's peace, 125. named a Plenipotentiary at the treaty of Utrecht, but ſet aſide, 247. goes to Paris along with L. Bolingbroke, 288. left there to take care of ſome private affairs, 290. L. Bolingbroke's letter to him, 292, &c. left Plenipotentiary at Paris, 293. has a private audience of the K. of France, ibid. comes over to England, and returns to France, 293. L. Bolingbroke's letters to him, 303, 305, 306. his letters to L. Bolingbroke and the E. of Oxford, 306, 307. his negotiations about the Pretender, 378, &c. the Lords Dartmouth and Bolingbroke's letters to him, 381. notifies the Queen's death to Lewis XIV. who aſſures him that he would maintain the Hanover Succeſſion, 398. that King's anſwer to him concerning the Catalans, ibid. his memorial to him about the demolition of Dunkirk, 408. ordered home from Paris, 415. lands at Dover, and promiſes to reveal all he knew, 418. is introduced to the King, and entertained at dinner by the L. Townſhend, ibid. taken into cuſtody, 426. examined and cloſely confined, 427. prevaricates, ibid. and 435. report of the Committee of Secrecy concerning him, 435. excepted out of the act of Grace, 546. dies, 651

Privilege Placei diſfranchiſed, III. 349

Privileges of Members of Parliament, III. 479

Privy-Council, but one ordered in Great-Britain, IV. 54. ſettled, and who the Members of it were, 67

Prizes; proclamation for the diſtribution of them, IV. 68

Proteſtant Succeſſion; meaſures taken to ſecure it, IV. 347. acknowledged at the treaty of Utrecht, 390. debates about the ſecurity of it, 348. voted to be out of danger, ibid. and 354

Proteſtants in Ireland oppreſſed, III. 77. a maſſacre of them deſigned, ibid. many Proteſtants againſt the preſent Settlements, 303. French Proteſtants, 15,000 l. granted for them by Parliament, 305. Proteſtants adhering to K. James, 314. the caſe of the French Proteſtants not taken into conſideration at the treaty of Ryſwick, 362. nor the Lutherans, 363. in Sileſia have their Churches reſtored to them, IV. 18. act for naturalizing foreign Proteſtants, 110. repealed, 200, 243. they preſent a petition about the Occaſional Conformity-bill, 231. their intereſt but faintly inſiſted upon at the treaty of Utrecht, 250, 305. recommended to Q. Anne by the K. of Pruſſia, 302. in the French gallies releaſed by the mediation of the Queen, 329. a clauſe inſerted in favour of the French Proteſtants in the Schiſm-bill, 362. Proteſtants in Germany oppreſſed, 605

Pruſſia; the D. of Marlborough negotiates with that Court for ſending forces into Italy, III. 662, 678. Sophia Charlotta Q. of Pruſſia dies, ibid.

Pruſſia, Frederic K. of, the Principality of Neufchatel adjudged to him, IV. 30. the Royal dignity acknowledged in him, 130. demands of arrears due to his troops, and the Succeſſion of the late K. William, 209, 214. comes to the Hague for that purpoſe, 214. offers to maintain his own troops, 287. refuſes to come into the peace, 294. his death and character, 302

Pruſſia, Frederic K. of, the French propoſe to ſet him on the Britiſh Throne immediately after the Queen's death, IV. 400. included in the treaty between France and the Czar, 540. ſee p. 589. very rich, 615

Pulteney, William, his ſpeech in the Houſe of Commons about the peace, IV. 263. about the reward for apprehending the Pretender, 397. made Secretary at War, 404. impeaches L. Widdrington, 482. is againſt offering a pardon to thoſe that were in arms in Scotland, 484. reſigns his places, 523. his ſpeech on the ſupply againſt Sweden, ibid. about the army, 526. about the propoſal of the South-Sea Company, 534. kiſſes the King's hand, 617. his ſpeech at a Court of the South-Sea Company, 625. moves for an addreſs, 629. is Chairman of the Committee to examine Layer, 666. made Cofferer of the Houſhold, 673. begins to be diſſatisfied, 684. turned out of his places, 687. is againſt addreſſing the King upon his ſpeech, 701

Pulteney, Daniel, made one of the Commiſſioners of Trade, IV. 548. his ſpeech in Parliament, 693

Puritans; origin of that name, III. 2. State and Church Puritans, 3. increaſe, 4. abounded in the Parliament of 1640, 5. doctrinal and diſcipline Puritans, ibid. account of the Puritans, 513, &c.

Q.

Quadruple Alliance; IV. 549, 562. Spain ſigns it, 600, 605

Quakers; account of them, III. 45, 516. Keith forſakes them, 520. do not join in the addreſs to the Queen, 540. bill for taking ſome words out of their affirmation, IV. 655. petition againſt it, ibid. ſome pretend they were no Chriſtians, ibid. bill for accepting their affirmation, inſtead of an oath, paſſed in Ireland, 676

Quebec; expedition there, IV. 215

Queensbury, James Douglas D. of, III. 69. Commiſſioner to the Parliament of Scotland, 406, 424. made Knight of the Garter, 425. Lord Privy-Seal of Scotland, 555. made High-Commiſſioner, 556. Secretary of State, 595. and High-Commiſſioner again, 596. deſerts the Cavaliers, 598, 600. ingroſſes every thing, 605. draws out the Seſſion of Parliament to a great length, ibid. Frazer diſcovers a plot to him, 629. ſome thought it a contrivance of the Duke's, 634. he is diſmiſſed from the management of affairs in Scotland, 648. ſome of his friends move, that the Queen ſhould be deſired to communicate a letter of that Duke's to her, ibid. expoſed thereby to the Parliament's reſentment, ibid. ſerves the D. of Argyle, and promotes the act of Succeſſion in Scotland, 689. arrives at Edinburgh, where he makes a public entry, 692. nominates the Scottiſh Commiſſioners for the Union between England and Scotland, 737. High-Commiſſioner to the Parliament of Scotland, 768. the tumults there about the Union make him deſpair of ſucceeding, and he apprehends his life to be in danger, 776. goes in great ſtate to the Parliament, after the concluſion of the Union, 779. his ſpeech at the end of the Seſſion, ibid. goes to London, and is met by great numbers, ibid. made Baron of Rippon, Marquiſs of Beverley, and Duke of Dover, IV. 68. ſworn of the Privy-Council, 105. introduced into the Houſe of Peers as D. of Dover, ibid. thought he had ſtill a right to vote as a Peer of Scotland, 109. but at length not admitted to have a vote in Scotland, after he was created D. of Dover, ibid. had a party in the Parliaments 110. made third Secretary of State, ibid. and 119. dies, 218, 219

Queensbury, Charles Douglas D. of, made one of the Gentlemen of the Bed-chamber, IV. 617

Queſnoy; reſolution to beſiege it, IV. 256. deſcription of it, 259. beſieged, ibid. and 274. ſurrenders, 277. retaken by the French, 286

Quietiſts; III. 529

Quo-Warranto's, III. 96, 114. the Marquiſs of Hallifax concerned in them, 114. Quo-Warranto's againſt the City of London reverſed, 132

R.

Radcliffe, Charles, arraigned, IV. 497. tried and found guilty, 498. eſcapes, 501

Radnor, Charles Roberts E. of, ſworn of the Privy-Council, III. 504

Radſtadt taken by the French, IV. 13. conferences there, 337

Ragotski, Prince, at the head of the diſaffected Hungarians, III. 622. aims at the Principality of Tranſylvania, 669, 715. poſſeſſes himſelf of that Principality, IV. 4. encourages the Hungarians to ſtand out, 184

Rain ſurrenders to the Allies, III. 656. a deſcription of it, ibid.

Ramillies; deſcription of that place, III. 746. battle there, ibid. the ſtandards taken there carried to Guild-hall, 780

INDEX to the Continuation of the History of England.

Ranelagh, —— Jones E. of, made a Privy-Counſellor, III. 190. his character, ibid. made Receiver and Paymaſter-General of the forces, 572. his accounts examined by the Commons, 584, 643. quits his place, and is expelled the Houſe of Commons, 584. the Commons addreſs the Queen that ſhe ſhould order him to be proſecuted, —— 643

Ranelagh, Richard Jones E. of, ſworn of the Privy-Council, IV. 105

Ranters, III. 516

Ratcliffe, Dr. John, complained of in the Houſe of Commons for not attending Q. Anne, IV. 396

Rates, book of, reviewed by the Commons, III. 228, 232

Ratisbone; a deſcription of it, III. 616. the Elector of Bavaria takes poſſeſſion of it, ibid. and 617. a declaration delivered to the diet there by Mr. Le Heup, IV. 705

Rawlinſon, Sir William, made one of the Commiſſioners of the Great Seal, III. 40

Raymond, Robert, made Sollicitor-General, IV. 192. made a Judge of the King's-Bench, 679. and one of the Commiſſioners of the Great Seal, 683

Rebellion in 1714, IV. 433. breaks out in Scotland, 436. progreſs of it in England, 443, &c.

Rebels; Engliſh and Scotch joined, IV. 455, &c. defeated at Preſton, 456. ſome executed there, and at Wigan and Mancheſter, 485. about a thouſand ſubmit to the King's mercy, and petition to be tranſported, ibid. ſome more arraigned 497, &c. ſeveral of them diſcharged, 501. ſome executed, 503

Rechteren, Count de, one of the Dutch Plenipotentiaries at the treaty of Utrecht, IV. 247. his ſervants inſulted by Monſieur Meſnager's, 290, 306

Recognition, act of, III. 597, 598

Records in the Tower, &c. examined and put in order at the inſtance of the E. of Halifax, III. 731

Reformation, III, 511, &c.

Reformers, made St. Auguſtin's notions the ſtandard of Religion, III. 511

Refugees, French, petition the Houſe of Commons for relief, III. 182. apply to the King, ibid. their addreſs to Q. Anne in favour of their perſecuted brethren in France, 191, &c. petition for a bill to preclude the ſubjects of the French King from claiming any eſtates here, IV. 162. preſents a petition to Q. Anne for her interpoſing at the treaty of Utrecht in favour of their perſecuted brethren in France, 245

Regale; what it is, III. 36

Regency; act for it, III. 720. a dangerous miſtake relating to it rectified, IV. 329

Regent of France. See Orléans, D. of.

Rehearſal; a paper by Leſley againſt the lawfulneſs of reſiſtance, IV. 150

Remonſtrance of the ſtate of the Kingdom, III, 6, &c.

Remonſtrants, III. 511, &c.

Reneu, Hilary, cauſes the French ſmugglers to be proſecuted, III. 371, 372. naturalized gratis, 373

Renunciation of the Crown of France by the K. of Spain, IV. 263. memorial about it, ibid. and 295. of the Crown of Spain by the Princes of France, 308

Reports of the Committee of Secrecy, IV. 636, &c. of that appointed to examine Layer, 666

Repreſentation of the Lords to Q. Anne, III. 632. of the Lower-Houſe of Convocation, 645. of the Lords about the Ailesbury affair, 683, &c. of the Lower-Houſe of Convocation, 686. of the Commons about the debts of the Navy, IV. 205. and about the Dutch, 242. of the Convocation to Q. Anne, 207

Republicans, III. 10. Republican Whigs, 27

Reresby, Sir John, his memoirs quoted, III. 38, &c.

Retrieved; debate about that word in an addreſs of the Commons, III. 574

Revenue of the Crown, III. 51. the ſeveral branches of it, ibid. &c. appropriation of it, 129, &c.

Revolution principles, far from being univerſally embraced, IV. 402. the Revolution talked and preached againſt, 405

Reynolds, Edward, made Bp. of Norwich, III. 519

Rhinburg taken, III. 617

Rich, Sir Robert, made one of the Commiſſioners of the Admiralty. III. 236

Richardſon, ——— one of the accomplices in the Aſſaſſination-plot, III. 318

Richelieu, D. of, the French Ambaſſador at Vienna brings about a peace between Great-Britain and the Emperor, IV. 710

Richmond, Charles Lenox D. of, his eſtate in France ſecured, IV. 391. made one of the Lords of the Bed-chamber, 407. preſents a petition in behalf of the condemned Lords, 486

Ridge, Thomas, cenſured by the Houſe of Commons for his management about victualling the Navy, IV. 199

Riga beſieged by the Poles, III. 410. relieved by the K. of Sweden, 438

Rights and Liberties of the Subjects; bill for ſettling them, III. 55

Riots at Briſtol, Chippenham, Norwich, Reading, &c. IV. 407, 408. proclamation for ſuppreſſing riots, 409. riots in London, 424, 425, 500, &c. act againſt riots, 432

Ripperda, Baron and Duke de, negotiates two treaties between the Emperor and Spain, IV. 689. diſmiſſed, 698. flies to the Dutch Ambaſſador, who carries him to Colonel Stanhope's houſe, ibid. taken away from thence by force, and confined in the Caſtle of Segovia, ibid. ſome expreſſions he dropped. 690, 694

Rivers, Richard Savage Earl, commands the land-forces that were to make a deſcent in France, III. 761. ſtrictly examines Guiſcard, ibid. has manifeſto's ready, 762. waits on the K. of Portugal, who receives him with his hat off, ibid. refuſes the command of the forces in Spain, 763. made General of the Horſe, IV. 67. ſworn of the Privy-Council, 105. ſent to the Court of Hanover, 195. ſent to that Court again to aſſure the Elector that care would be taken of the Succeſſion in his Family, 225. made General of the Ordnance, and Colonel of the Royal Regiment of Horſe-guards, 234

Robethon, Monſieur de, attends K. George to England, IV. 401. infuſes jealouſies into his Majeſty of the L. Townſhend, 503

Robinſon, John, head of the Independents, III. 513

Robinſon, John, made Bp. of Briſtol, IV. 192. and Lord Privy-Seal, 219. deſigned for Plenipotentiary at the treaty of peace, ibid. appointed one of the Plenipotentiaries at Utrecht, 222. comes there and appears in a black velvet gown, 247. his ſpeech at the opening of the Congreſs, ibid. his letters to Secretary St. John, 253. freſh orders ſent to him, ibid. his anſwer to the expoſtulation of the States about the D. of Ormond's refuſing to act, 260. threatens them with the Engliſh making a ſeparate peace, ibid. propoſes to the Allies a ſuſpenſion of arms for two months, in order to treat with the French, 275, &c. he and the E. of Strafford ſcruple to ſign a ſeparate peace, 309. they ſign it at laſt, 310, &c. tranſlated to the See of London, 328. votes againſt the Court, 352. his ſpeech about the peace, 353. ſays that the Schiſm-bill was neceſſary, 362. made one of the Privy-Council. 404. his ſpeech about an addreſs to the King, 417. his behaviour at the Congreſs of Utrecht, 429. votes for the E. of Oxford, 431. his ſpeech about the Septennial Parliament, 493. his anſwer to a reflecting ſpeech of L. Coningsby about the peace, 512, &c. his ſpeech in the debate about the repeal of the Schiſm-bill, 580. is for the bill againſt blaſphemy and profaneneſs, 647

Rochegude, Marquiſs de, ſpeaks to Q. Anne in behalf of the French Proteſtants in the gallies, IV. 329

Rocheſter, Lawrence Hyde E. of, made a Privy-Counſellor, III. 190. his character, ibid. his great credit with Q. Mary, 244. moves a doubt about the legality of the Parliament's continuance, 264. proteſts againſt the vote for acknowledging the reality of the Lancaſhire plot, 267. repreſents the bad ſtate of the coin to the Houſe of Lords, 275. is ſet at the head of affairs, and engages to bring the Tories into the King's ſervice, 436. &c. made Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, 437. animadverts upon ſome in the Houſe of Lords, who had reflected on the K. of France, 451. the King's diſtruſt of him, at which he is offended, 454. the King is uneaſy with him, 471. thought to be the promoter of all violent motions, 488. ſeveral books publiſhed againſt him, ibid. delays his going to Ireland, ibid. perceives the King's heart was not with him, ibid. the King complains of his imperious temper, ibid. expoſtulates with him, ibid. goes to Ireland, ibid. his behaviour there, ibid. aſks leave to come to England, 504. brings over complaints againſt the Truſtees for forfeited eſtates, ibid. declared again Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, 544. was for an intire change in the Adminiſtration, 545. a rivalſhip between him and the D. of Marlborough, ibid. was againſt declaring war againſt France, ibid. quits his place of Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, 583, &c. ſet up as the only man that deſerved to be Prime Miniſter, 628. ſeconds the L. Haverſham's ſpeech, and complains of the exportation of the coin, 674. urges the ill conſequences of the act of Security in Scotland, 675. moves the bringing the Electreſs Dowager of Hanover to live in England, 679, 719. moves for a clauſe in the act of Regency, that the Regents ſhould not repeal any part of the act of Uniformity, 721. opens the debate about the danger of the Church, 724, &c. his ſpeech in the debate about the Union, 781, 783, 786. on the ſtate of the Nation, IV. 40. was for laying the blame of the miſcarriages of the Admiralty on the Miniſtry, 42. his ſpeech in relation to the affairs of Spain, 45. ſpeaks in Dr. Sacheverel's behalf, 158, 160. made Preſident of the Council, 191. complains of the Lord Keeper Harcourt, for introducing the Scots Lords to Q. Anne, 195. viſits the D. of Marlborough, 196. dies ſuddenly, 202

Rocheſter, Lawrence Hyde E. of, his ſpeech on the debate on the Navy debt, IV. 653

Rocheſter, Thomas Sprat Bp. of, taken into cuſtody, III. 200. Young's plot againſt him, 218. See Sprat. is againſt Lay-Baptiſm, IV. 255

Rocheſter, Biſhop of. See Atterbury.

Rochford, William Henry de Zuyleſtein E. of, a grant made to him in Ireland, III. 399

Rockingham, Lewis Watſon Lord, created E. of Rockingham, IV. 406

Romney, Henry Sidney E. of, concerned in Kidd's affair, III. 396. grants of lands to him in Ireland, 399. made Groom of the Stole, 409

Rooke, George, Rear-Admiral, III. 174. ſubſcribes an addreſs to Q. Mary, 200, 201. knighted, and made Vice-Admiral of the Red, 237. his engagement with the French, 242, &c. examined by the Commons, 248. made one of the Commiſſioners of the Admiralty, 253. with a ſquadron at Cadiz, 313, 331. reſigns the command to L. Berkley, ibid. examined by the Houſe of Commons, 349. bombards Copenhagen, 411. commands the Engliſh fleet, 486. one of the Council to Prince George, 545. ſent to attack Cadiz, 568. averſe to that undertaking, ibid. burns the galleons and French fleet at Vigo, 570. the Commons vote him thanks, 575. and addreſs the Queen to order him to lay before them an account of his proceedings, 574. his conduct examined and approved, 575. ſworn of the Privy-Council, ibid. ſent with a fleet, to alarm the coaſt of France, 611. convoys Charles K. of Spain to Liſbon, 626. comes in ſight of the French fleet, but does not engage them, 664. takes Gibraltar, ibid. his victories paralleled by the Commons with the D. of Marlborough, 671. he is laid aſide, 678

Roſez, taken by the French, III. 241

Roſs, Robert Lord, preſents an addreſs from Scotland, III. 407

Roſs, William Lord, offers a reſolve in Parliament, III. 651

Roſs, General, his ſpeeches in Parliament, IV. 427, 428. ordered to ſell his regiment, 433. is one of the Secret Committee, 632. his ſpeech about the South-Sea affair, 634

Rothes, John Leſley E. of, preſents a reſolve to the Parliament of Scotland, III. 650. is made Privy-Seal, 653. removed, 689. was for the Union, 771. choſen one of the ſixteen Peers, IV. 64. High-Admiral of Scotland, and the King's Commiſſioner to the General Aſſembly of the Church of Scotland, 421. zealous againſt the Rebellion, 438. tries to ſecure Perth, 446. marches to Seaton-houſe, 447. the Rebels break into the burial place of his family, 449. attempts in vain to make himſelf maſter of Falkland palace, 468

INDEX to the Continuation of the Hiſtory of England.

Rouille, Monſieur de, comes to Holland, under pretence of negotiating a peace, IV. 120, &c. 125. departs from Holland, 131

Rowe, Nicholas, Under-Secretary of State, IV. 120

Roxburgh, John Ker E. of, deſires that the act of Security ſhould be read, III. 651. made Secretary of State, 653. removed 689. was for the Union, 771. choſen one of the ſixteen Peers, IV. 64. ſets himſelf up in oppoſition to the D. of Queensberry's power, 110. his ſpeech in Parliament, 431. acts againſt the Rebels in Scotland, 438. made Secretary of State, and Keeper of the Signet in Scotland, 504. is for the Peerage bill, 586

Royal Aſſurance Company erected, IV. 613

Rugen, Iſle of, reſtored by Denmark, IV. 618

Ruremond taken, III. 563

Ruſhout, Sir John, ſent Ambaſſador to Turkey, III. 350

Ruſſel, William Lord, his attainder reverſed, III. 92. Committee appointed to examine who had been his proſecutors, 114

Ruſſel, Admiral Edward, convoys the Q. of Spain, III. 139. appointed Commander of the Engliſh fleet, 172. convoys the Turkey fleet ſafe into England, 182. examined in the Houſe of Commons about the conduct of the fleet, 192. ſends up an addreſs to Q. Mary from the fleet, 200. defeats the French at la Hogue, 201, &c. ſails very opportunely out of the Thames, 205. being provoked at ſome aukward orders, he does not purſue his victory, ibid. thanks voted him by the Houſe of Commons, 221. examined by them about the conduct of the fleet, 222. letters of his, 224. his anſwer in the Houſe of Lords to the E. of Nottingham's papers, wherein his orders and neglects were aggravated, 227, 228. vote of the Houſe of Commons in his favour, ibid. diſmiſſed, 237. put again at the head of the fleet, 252. and made one of the Commiſſioners of the Admiralty, ibid. and 253. ſails into the Mediterranean, 253, 256. goes towards the coaſt of France, upon the diſcovery of the plot, 319. deſires the Houſe of Commons to read the papers relating to Fenwick, 338. made E. of Orford, 350. had the management both of the Admiralty and the fleet, 355, 378, 390. reſigns all his places, 390. very popular, 391. See Orford, Edward Ruſſel E. of.

Ruſſians, advance againſt Wiſmar, IV. 538. and againſt Schonen, ibid. See Czar.

Ruth, Monſieur de St. commander of the Iriſh forces, III. 151. reduces Savoy, 154

Rutland, John Manners E. of, made Marquiſs of Granby and Duke of Rutland, III. 590. waits upon K. George at his firſt coming, and is graciouſly received, IV. 402. made Knight of the Garter, 407

Ruvigny, Marquiſs of, his conduct in Ireland, III. 174. created E. of Galway, and ſent to command the Engliſh forces in Piedmont, 252. See Galway.

Rye; K. George lands there, IV. 691

Ryſwick, Congreſs of, III. 350. negotiations there about a peace, 352, &c. peace ſigned there, 360

S.

SACHEVEREL (William) refuſes the place of one of the Commiſſioners of the Admiralty, III. 41

Sacheverel, Henry; account and character of him, IV. 149. preaches his famous ſermon, 150. 40,000 of it ſold, ibid. reflects on Biſhop Burnet and Benjamin Hoadley, ibid. impeached by the Commons, 151. his trial, 153, &c. it cauſes great uneaſineſs, 152. the managers at his trial, 153, 154. the Peers who voted for and againſt him, 159. the cenſure paſſed upon him, 161. his ſermons burnt, 160. addreſſes on account of his trial. 185. his progreſs, 191. firment raiſed among the Clergy by his trial, 193. rejoicings upon the expiration of his ſuſpenſion, 325. he is made Rector of St. Andrew's Holbourn, ibid. preaches at Sutton, 407. the cry about him, 408. he dies, 681. leaves Dr. Atterbury a legacy, ibid.

Sacramental-Teſt; attempts to repeal it, III. 512. a letter againſt it ordered by the Commons to be burnt, IV. 120

Saint Albans, Charles Beauclerk, D. of, made Captain of the Band of Penſioners, IV. 404

St. Germain; the Court there encourages the Plot in Scotland, III. 629

St. Januarius's blood, IV. 590

St. John, Henry, appointed Secretary at war, III. 647. Guiſcard becomes intimate with him, 761. tries to engage the leaders of the Tories in Q. Anne's intereſt, IV. 38 reſigns his place of Secretary at war, 56. made Secretary of State, 191. delivers a meſſage to the Commons about the affairs of Spain, 196. Marquis de Guiſcard's intimacy with him, 201. has private meetings with Gaultier, 219. tranſmits the propoſals of France to Lord Raby, ibid. his letters to the Earl of Strafford, 224, &c. 253, 291. his anſwer to the Dutch memorial, 243. his ſpeech when the negotiation of peace was reflected on, 246. his letters about the peace, 249. and to Torcy, 252. to the Duke of Ormond about not venturing a battle, 256. his ſpeech in the Houſe of Commons about a peace, 263. his letter to Torcy about the renunciation, ibid. &c. created Viſcount Bolingbroke, 282. goes incognito to France, 288. impowered to conclude a ſeparate peace between England, France, Spain, and Savoy, ibid. goes to Fontainebleau, where he is magnificently entertained by the King of France, who makes him a preſent of a fine diamond ring, 289. returns to England, 290. his letter to the Britiſh Plenipotentiaries, 291. about the ravaging of the Sugar-Iſlands, 293. miſunderſtanding between him and the Earl of Oxford, 295. his letters to the Duke of Shrewsbury, 304, &c. ſends the Britiſh Miniſters orders to ſign the peace, 309. arrives at Whitehall with the treaties of peace and commerce, 311. forms a ſcheme to put himſelf and Lord Harcourt at the head of the High-Church party, 328. he, and Secretary Bromley, and Sir William Wyndham, gain the aſcendant over the Lord Treaſurer, 335, 346. his deſign of new modelling the army, 346. puſhes on his deſign of bringing in the Pretender, ibid. his ſpeech about the Catalans, 347. made a private agreement in France about the dower of King James's Queen, 351. lays before the Commons an account of the treaties of peace and commerce, 353. cauſes the publiſher of the Queen's letter to the Elector of Hanover to be apprehended, 358. is againſt inviting that Prince over, 359. promotes the Schiſm-bill, 361. is againſt allowing the Diſſenters ſchools to teach their own children, 362. was bred among Schiſmaticks, 360. brings in a bill to make it High-Treaſon to liſt or be inliſted in the Pretender's ſervice, 365. is againſt examining into the Spaniſh trade, ibid. had the conduct of foreign affairs, 367. was bold, a man of pleaſures, and had the public odium, ibid. falls out with the Treaſurer and is ſupported by the Queen, ibid. cauſes the Treaſurer to be removed and is likely to ſucceed him, ibid. reſolves to ſtrike in with the Whigs, 368. his proceedings about the Pretender, the Catalans, &c. 377---386. his ſchemes baffled by the Duke of Shrewsbury being made Treaſurer, 369. obliged to ſtand at the door of the Council Chamber, 395. removed from his office, 399, 404. attends at the King's Coronation, 407. his ſpeech about the addreſſes to the King, 417. his conduct very extraordinary, 418. appears every where and ſpeaks in Parliament with great freedom, but his heart beginning to fail him he goes over to France in diſguiſe, ibid. his letter, ibid. impeached of Treaſon, 427. the articles againſt him carried up to the Houſe of Lords, 434. his name and coat of arms are razed, 436. is Secretary to the Pretender, 475. removed, 476. his letters upon that occaſion, ibid. &c. he is pardoned, and returns to England, 674. his attainder reverſed, 685, &c.

St. John, Henry, created Viſcount St. John, IV. 499

St. Quintin, Sir William, made one of the Commiſſioners of the Treaſury, IV. 406 diſplaced, 525

St. Sebaſtian taken, IV. 60

Salisbury, —— Cecil, Earl of, ſent to the Tower, III. 44. admitted to bail, ibid. impeached, 115

——, James Cecil, E. of, Young's plot againſt him, III. 218

Saluſſes, battle of, III. 153

Sample, John, taken up for High-Treaſon, and eſcapes, IV. 660

Sancroft, William, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, tried and acquitted, III. 20. meets the Lords at Guild-Hall, and invites the Prince of Orange, 22. made one of the Privy-Council, 38. refuſes to conſecrate Biſhop Burnet, 41. abſents himſelf from Parliament, and refuſes to take the oaths, 43. his character, ibid. ſuſpended ab Officio, 105. was for a comprehenſion, 106. dies, 513. publiſhes Biſhop Overall's book, 521

Saragoza; deſcription of that place, IV. 179. battle near it, 178. King Charles comes thither, ibid. the Duke of Vendoſme takes poſſeſſion of it, 182

Sardinia, reduced, IV. 94. ſecured by Sir John Norris, 176. conquered by the Spaniards, 549. given to the D. of Savoy, ibid. and 563. his Miniſter claims the ſhips in the harbour of Meſſina, 596. the troops deſigned for the expedition to Sardinia are ſent to Sicily, ibid. Sardinia evacuated, 600. and given to the D. of Savoy, 603

Savoy, Amadeus II. D. of, accedes to the Grand Alliance, III. 152. defeated at the battle of Saluſſes, 153. applies to K. William and the States-General, 154. moſt of his towns taken, 184. K. William and the States of Holland allowed him 100,000 l. a year, ibid. his affairs reſtored by D. Schomberg's aſſiſtance, 183. makes a great progreſs in Dauphine, takes Ambrun, &c. 215. falls ill of the ſmall-pox, 216. beſieges Pignerol, 241. defeated at the battle of Marſaglia, ibid, &c. makes a ſeparate peace with France, 328, &c. his daughter given in marriage to the D. of Burgundy, 331

Savoy, Victor Amadeus II. D. of, refuſes to have one of his ſons brought to England, and educated in the Proteſtant Religion, III. 445. his Ducheſs proteſts againſt the bill of Succeſſion, ibid. that Duke commands the French army, 485. grows cold and backward, 486. his ſecond daughter married to the K. of Spain, ibid. owns the Pretender, 491. the Allies jealous of him, 566. comes into the Grand Alliance, 622. the French diſcover it, ibid. their unreaſonable demands of him, 623. the K. of France's letter to him, ibid. gives notice of his proceedings to Q. Anne and the Dutch, ib. Count Staremberg brings him forces, ibid. the French King declares war againſt him, ibid. loſes his towns, and continues firm, though not duly aſſiſted by the Emperor, 668, 703. has but a very ſmall army, and reſolves notwithſtanding to adhere to the Grand Alliance, 703. admits none of the Clergy into his Councils, ibid. fortifies Turin, 758. refuſes the French King's offers, ibid. raiſes the ſiege of Turin, and defeats the French, 759. undertakes to march an army into France, and Q. Anne makes a treaty with him, IV. 4, 21. forms a project of invading Provence, 21. enters Provence, and advances towards Toulon, 26. comes before that place, ibid. is obliged to retire, which he does in very good order, ibid. recovers Suza, ibid. the Lords addreſs Q. Anne to ſtrengthen his army, he having deſerved ſo well, 46. takes Exilles, fort la Perouſe, the valley of St. Martin, and Feneſtrella, 93. makes alſo a diverſion in favour of K. Charles, ibid. receives the inveſtiture of the Mantuan and Monferrat, 101. France offers to reſtore Savoy to him, 129. and endeavours to draw him off from the Grand Alliance, 132. he refuſes to take the field, 140. indiſpoſed as well as his ſon and brother, 175. has an interview with the Emperor Charles, who grants him the inveſtiture of the fiefs in Montferrat, 214. penetrates as far as the Rhine, ibid. his Miniſters angry at the report of their Maſter's

INDEX to the Continuation of the Hiſtory of England.

Maſter's agreeing to a ſuſpenſion of arms, 276. one of his Plenipotentiaries inſulted, 290. account of the difference between him and the Court of Vienna, 293. Sicily offered to him, 294. the arrears of his ſubſidies paid, ibid. how nearly his Houſe is allied to the Engliſh Crown, 393. is perſuaded to change Sicily for Sardinia, 504. enters into a Convention with the Emperor about Sardinia, 571. put in poſſeſſion of that Iſland, 603

Sawbridge, Jacob, expelled the Houſe of Commons, IV. 634. bill to make his eſtate anſwerable for 250,000 l. to the South-Sea Company, 640

Saxe Gotha; ſome of their troops in the pay of Great-Britain, IV. 521

Sayer, —— taken into cuſtody, IV. 660

Scarborough, Richard Lumley E. of, attends K. William to Ireland, III. 133. ſworn of the Privy Council, IV. 105. his ſpeech at Dr. Sacheverel's trial, 157. is againſt the bill for limiting the number of officers, 162. moves for the thanks of the Houſe of Lords to be given to the D. of Marlborough, 195. Lord Lieutenant of Northumberland, repairs to Newcaſtle to ſecure that place, 445. his ſpeech in Parliament, 696

Scarſdale, —— Leake E. of, proclamation for apprehending him, III. 200. complains of his commitment to the Houſe of Lords, 221

Schellemberg, battle of, III. 655

Schiſm formed by Nonjuring Clergy, III. 512, &c.

Schiſm-Bill; proceedings and debates upon it, IV. 360. extended to Ireland, 363. a deſign to repeal it, 524. it is repealed, 578

Schlick, Count, enters Bavaria, III. 616. makes himſelf maſter of ſeveral places, ibid. defeated, ibid. takes Wiltzhoven, ibid.

Schomberg, Frederic, Duke and Marſhal of, relieves Maeſtricht, III. 35. comes over with K. William, and is Maſter of the Ordnance, 39. elected Knight of the Garter, 45. the Parliament gives him 100,000 l. which is converted into 5000 l. a year, 52, 99. has the command of that army in Ireland, 99. his campaign there, 100. a plot in his army, 100, 101. his conduct in Ireland, 115. his army reinforced, 121. takes a fatherly care of the Engliſh army, 133. takes Charlemont Caſtle, 134. oppoſes the paſſing of the Boyne, and adviſes the ſending part of the army towards Slainbridge, which not being done, he is diſcontented, 135. his bravery at the battle of the Boyne, 136. is ſlain there, ibid. his character, 137. his ſaying about attacking the French in the Netherlands, IV. 45

Schomberg, Charles D. of, commands the horſe at the battle of the Boyne, III. 136. at the ſiege of Limerick, 148. goes to Turin, 185. and retrieves the D. of Savoy's affairs, that were in a deſperate condition, ibid. publiſhes a declaration, 215. is wounded at the battle of Marſaglia, and dies, 242

Schomberg, Maynhard D. of, made Privy-Counſellor, III. 281. commands the land-forces ſent to Spain, 626. Velt-Marſhal General of the Portugueſe forces, 666. ſome diſputes between him and the Portugueſe Generals and Miniſters, 665. inſiſts that the auxiliaries may keep in a body, 666. Captain-General of the Queen of Great-Britain's forces in Portugal, ibid. publiſhes a proclamation about the Iriſh, ibid. reſigns his command, 667. made a Privy Counſellor, IV. 68

Schutz, Baron, in the Houſe of Lords, IV. 349. demands a writ for the Elector of Hanover, as D. of Cambridge, 351. forbid the Court, ibid.

Schuylemberg, a Proteſtant, General of the Venetian army, IV. 502, 503

Scot, Dr. John, his account of Lord-Chancellor Jefferies, III. 96

Scotland; the Engliſh Common-Prayer and Diſcipline attempted to be introduced there, III. 4. a Convention meets there, 64. the Throne declared vacant, 70. K. William and Q. Mary proclaimed there, 72. a faction ſprings up in the Parliament, 75. an inſurrection headed by Dundee, 76. the eſtabliſhing Preſbytery there caſts a great load on K. William, 105. the Rebels there under Colonel Cannon retire to the Iſle of Mull, and the Highlanders renew their incurſions, 121. many that had been concerned in the plot there take out pardons, 181. and are put into the chief poſts in the Government, 194. many in the Miniſtry there enemies to the King and Government, 245. letters intercepted between Scotland and France, ibid. proceedings of the Parliament of that Kingdom, ibid. and 281. diſguſted about recalling the act for their Eaſt-India Company, 308 and 380. great diſcontent there upon the loſs of the Settlement at Darien, 393, 406, 407. petition drawn up there for a Parliament, 406. a Seſſion of Parliament there, 406. bill for uniting England and Scotland, ibid. K. William's letter concerning that Union, 504, 505. bill for the Union, 550. Q. Anne's letter to the Privy-Council there, 554. affairs begin to be imbroiled in that Kingdom, ibid. Q. Anne takes the Coronation-oath for that Kingdom, ibid. at her acceſſion, the Government was in the hands of perſons entirely of Revolution principles, 585. ſtruggle there about the ſitting of the Parliament, ibid. alterations in the Miniſtry there, 595. a new Parliament choſen, ibid. its proceedings, 596. an indemnity proclaimed, ibid. act for the ſecurity of that Kingdom, 600. another for the Succeſſion, 603. the diſorders in that Kingdom riſe to a great height, 604. a plot there diſcovered, 629, 648. Settlement made there by K. Charles I, 648. treaty between that Kingdom and England demanded, 650. a new Commiſſion there made up entirely of Scots Revolutioners, 653. the L. Haverſham's ſpeech about the proceedings in that Kingdom, 673, &c. debate in the Houſe of Lords thereupon, 674, &c. bill for a Union, 676. the Commons bring in a bill for preventing the dangers that might ariſe from ſome acts paſſed in Scotland, ibid. &c. change in the Miniſtry of that Kingdom, 689. three parties there, 690. proceedings for the Union with England, ibid. &c. Commiſſioners appointed for it, 736. the Pretender's intereſt promoted there, 766. the Cavaliers reſolve to oppoſe the ratification of the Union, 768. debates in the Parliament there about it, 771. tumults there to defeat the Union, 774. compleated at laſt, 777. land-tax there, 785. frauds deſigned by the Merchants with regard to goods imported into Scotland, 789. a Commiſſion for a new Council ſent into Scotland, 791. two different parties formed in that Kingdom, ibid. the affairs relating to it neglected, IV. 33, &c. the act for the ſecurity of that Kingdom, and about peace and war, repealed, 43. debates in the Committee of the Houſe of Lords, about the bill for rendering the Union of that Kingdom with England more entire, 54, &c. Juſtices of Peace and an Exchequer ſettled in that Kingdom, 55. account of the Pretender's deſcent into Scotland, 56. Privy-Council of Scotland diſſolved, 67. the Peers of Scotland's eldeſt ſons incapacitated to ſit in Parliament, 108. debates about the election of the ſixteen Peers, 109. bill concerning trials of treaſon there, 114, &c. bill for a toleration of the Engliſh Clergy there, 243. the Kirk preſents a remonſtrance againſt it, ibid. act for diſcharging the Yule Vacance, and for reſtoring patronages, 244. the intereſt of the Pretender promoted there, 329. three or four thouſand pounds a year remitted to the Highland Clans, 345, 349, 350. diſſatisfied with the Union, and conſidered itſelf as degraded to a province of England, 402, 403. addreſſes ſet on foot there for diſſolving the Union, 412. endeavours uſed there for a remonſtrance againſt it, 416. ſome Members of the General Aſſembly of the Church there had inſtructions to move for an addreſs againſt the Toleration of the Epiſcopal Preachers, and againſt Lay-patronages, 422. the deſigns of the Jacobites carried on there with ſecrecy and order, 433. act for encouraging loyalty there, 436. ſome ſhips land there from France, with officers, arms, &c 437. ſeveral Peers there ſhew their loyalty to K. George, 438. ſome villages burnt by the Pretender's order, 467. motion for offering a general pardon to thoſe that were ſtill in arms in Scotland, 484. a few Spaniards land there, 584. ſome ſuſpected perſons ſecured there, 660. commotions there occaſioned by ſome Levellers, 682. riots there about the malt-tax, 687

Scots; reſolutions for declaring them Aliens, III. 676. proceedings againſt that, 695, &c. the act which declared them aliens, repealed, 723, &c. oppoſe the malt-tax, and are very uneaſy, IV. 316. move for an act for diſſolving the Union, ibid. motion for inveſting the revenues of the Biſhops in the Queen, 360. begin to ſhew their diſcontent, 403. See Scotland and Rebels.

Scots Highlanders appear in arms, IV. 403

Scottiſh Eaſt-India Company, III. 283, 308, 380. account of its ſettlement at Darien, 392, &c.

Scottiſh Lords in London, K. William's ſpeech to them, III. 62. their proceedings thereupon, 63. deſire his Majeſty to take upon him the adminiſtration of affairs in Scotland, ibid. another ſpeech of K. William to them, 63, 64

Scottiſh Peers ſerviceable to the Miniſtry, IV. 226. very uneaſy at D. Hamilton's patent being diſallowed, 229. their repreſentation thereupon, 230. the Queen's meſſage to the Houſe of Lords about it, 238. debates upon that point, ibid. they are promiſed and obtain ſatisfaction, 239. reſolutions about them, in the intended Peerage-bill, 586

Screw-Plot, IV. 194

Seabright murdered in France, IV. 676

Seafield, —— Lord, Secretary of State for Scotland, III. 382

Seafield, James Ogilvy E. of, made Chancellor of Scotland, III. 595. made Secretary of State, 653. reinſtated Chancellor, 689. was for the Union, 771. choſen one of the ſixteen Peers, IV. 64.

Seafield, James Finlater E. of, ſworn a Privy-Counſellor, IV. 105

Seal, the Great, thrown by K. James II. into the Thames, III. 22. put in Commiſſion, IV. 191

Seamen; regulations about them, III. 732. more employed than provided for by Parliament, IV. 654

Seckendorf, Count, reduces the Iſland of Lipara, IV. 591. and Sacca, 600. wounded, 603

Security, act of, in Scotland, III. 651, 652

Septennial Parliament; act for them, IV. 490. petitions againſt it, 495. paſſed, ibid.

Serpa taken by the Spaniards, IV. 12

Settlement, act of, in Ireland repealed, III. 86

Seville, treaty of, IV. 711

Seymour, Sir Edward, propoſes an aſſociation, III. 22. is againſt the validity of the Convention, 42. preſents an addreſs againſt Ludlow, 120. made a Privy Counſellor and Commiſſioner of the Treaſury, 190. his character, ibid. at the head of the oppoſition to the Court, 237. bribed by the Eaſt-India Company, 270, 276. diſſuades the King from putting out a proclamation for coin to be received by weight and not by tale, 274. oppoſes the Aſſociation, 321. againſt the bill for attainting Sir John Fenwick, 343. diſcovers to the Parliament the practices of the new Eaſt-India Company, 439. reflects ſeverely on the Partition-treaty, 451, 452. tampers with Kidd, 458. his opinion of Melfort's letter, 474. his character, 509. made a Privy-Counſellor, and Comptroller of the Houſhold, 545. lays Q. Anne's Convention for declaring war againſt France before the Commons, ibid. treats the Scots with great ſcorn, 550. his account as Treaſurer of the Navy, 585. moves for leave to bring in a bill to reſume all the grants made in K. William's Reign, 587. his youngeſt ſon, Francis Seymour Conway, made Baron Conway, 588. Sir Edward is againſt the Place-bill, 587, 588. diſmiſſed from his place of Comptroller, 647. his death and character, IV. 66

Shadwell, Dr. gives the D. of Shrewsbury an account of Q. Anne's ill ſtate of health, IV. 332, 336, 346. attends her in her laſt illneſs, 368, &c.

Shaftesbury, Anthony Aſhley Cooper, Earl of, author of the Characteriſticks, his ſpeech for allowing Counſel to State Priſoners, III, 304

INDEX to the Continuation of the Hiſtory of England.

Shales, John, Purveyor of the army in Ireland, III. 99. his miſconduct, is ordered to be removed, and had been Purveyor to King James's army, 115

Sharp, John, appointed to review the Liturgy, III. 106. made Archbiſhop of York, 173. preaches Q. Anne's Coronation Sermon, and is her chief Counſellor, 544. made a Privy-Counſellor, 590. his ſpeech about the Occaſional Conformity-Bill, 673. and about the encreaſe of Diſſenters, 726. ſpeaks to Q. Anne in behalf of the French Proteſtants, IV. 329. dies, 338

Shepheard, James, forms a deſign upon K. George's life, IV. 555. executed, 556

Sheriffs of London; diſpute at the election of them, IV. 67

Sherlock, Dr. William takes the oath, III. 172. made Dean of St. Paul's, 173. writes about the Trinity, 520. one of the Committee to examine Biſhop Hoadley's books, IV. 536. writes againſt him, 538, &c. removed from being the King's Chaplain, 539

Sherrard, Bennet, Lord, created Baron of Harborough, IV. 407

Ship-Money, III. 4. aboliſhed, 6

Shippen, William, one of the Commiſſioners for examining publick accounts, IV. 232. moves to examine the debts of the army, 313. his ſpeech about the arrears due to the Hanover troops, and about the reward for apprehending the Pretender, 397. about the bill for regulating the forces, 425. in favour of the Earl of Oxford, 435. about the ſuſpenſion of the Habeas Corpus Act, 482. in behalf of the condemned Lords, 486. upon the Septennial bill, 494. about a ſupply, 521. about an addreſs, 526. upon the Earl of Oxford's impeachment, 542. about the King's ſpeech, for which he is ſent to the Tower, 553. about the repeal of the Schiſm-Bill, 581. moves for an addition in an addreſs, 629. a ſpeech of his gravels Secretary Craggs, 632. Mr. Pulteney calls him a traitor, 671

Shovel, Cloudeſly, knighted, III. 92. takes the only frigate K. James had left, 134. ſubſcribes an addreſs to Q. Mary, 201. made one of the Commanders of the fleet, 237. bombards Calais, 326. ordered to lay the copies of his papers before the Houſe of Commons, 349. has a regiment of Marines given him, 350. ſent to aſſiſt in deſtroying the fleet at Vigo, 570, &c. his letter about the engagement near Malaga, 665. made Rear-Admiral of England, and Commander in chief of the fleet, 678. ſome letters from the Prince of Heſſe to him, 709, &c. commands the fleet that was to invade France, 761. and at the attempt upon Toulon, IV. 25. chagrined at the miſcarriage of that expedition, upon which he had ſet his heart, 28. caſt away on the Biſhop and Clercs, 29. account of him, and his character, ibid. a letter of his, 27

Shrewsbury, Charles Talbot, E. of, made Secretary of State, III. 40. his character, ibid. preſſes the Abjuration Bill, 131. retires from Court, ibid. deſigns to impeach the Marquiſs of Caermarthen, 162. brings in the bill for the frequent calling and meeting of Parliaments, 231. oppoſes the Court, ibid. made again Secretary of State, 252. created a Duke, ibid. made one of the Lords Juſtices, 280. practices of Mr. Smith againſt him, 347. his letter about it, 348. Secretary Vernon communicates to him the King's letter, 383. hurt by a fall from his horſe, and reſigns the place of Secretary of State, but is made Lord Chamberlain, and goes to Italy, 392. concerned in Kidd's affair, 396. refuſes the place of Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, 402. reſigns the place of Chamberlain, 409. taken again into the Miniſtry, IV. 163. votes in favour of Dr. Sacheverel, 187. made Lord Chamberlain, ibid. a ſecret management between him and Mr. Harley, ibid. ſent Ambaſſador to France, though Lord Bolingbroke was againſt it, 300. part of his inſtructions, 303. Lord Bolingbroke's letters to him, 304. made Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, 328. encourages the Proteſtant Intereſt there, 330. his ſpeech to the Parliament there, ibid. returns to England, 333. is againſt extending the Schiſm Bill to Ireland, 363. does not join either of the contending parties, 364, 367. made Lord Treaſurer, 369. received with great favour by K. George, 402. his ſpeech about the addreſs to K. George, 417. againſt the Septennial Bill, 493

Shute, Barrington, his ſpeech in vindication of K. George's Government, IV. 524

Sicily; the Imperialiſts deſign the conqueſt of that Iſland, IV. 25. offer of giving it to the D. of Savoy, 294, 301. yielded to him, 339, 392. project for exchanging it for Sardinia, 504. given to the Emperor, 549, 563. the K. of Spain makes great preparations for the recovery of it, 562. retaken by the Engliſh and Imperialiſts, 590. the Emperor ſends more troops thither, 596. evacuated by the Spaniards, 600, 603

Sidney, Henry, afterwards Earl of Rumney, made Gentleman of the Bedchamber, III. 39. his character, ibid.

Sidney, Henry, Lord Viſcount, made one of the Lords Juſtices of Ireland, III. 150. one of the Secretaries of State, and Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, 193. was thought partial, 247. recalled, and made Maſter of the Ordnance, ibid. and Colonel of the firſt Regiment of foot guards, 252

Sileſia; the Proteſtants in that country have their Churches reſtored to them, IV. 18. but they receive no benefit from Q. Anne's interpoſition in their favour, 101. the Imperial Court refuſes to grant the inhabitants the exerciſe of the Proteſtant Religion, 184, &c. Loan to the Emperor of the revenues of that Province, 237

Silk-Weavers petition againſt the bill for wearing woollen manufacture, III. 98

Silk Trade, very advantagious to England, IV. 315

Sinking-Fund conſtituted, IV. 535, &c. 707, 708

Smalridge, George, made Dean of Chriſt-Church, IV. 325. refuſes the Biſhoprick of Briſtol, 335. accepts of it, and is made Lord Almoner, 338. votes againſt the Court, 352. votes in favour of the Earl of Oxford, 431. refuſes to ſign a declaration teſtifying an abhorrance of the rebellion, 452. removed from the office of Lord Almoner, ibid. is againſt the Univerſities addreſſing K. George, 516, 517. his ſpeech in the debate about repealing the Schiſm-Bill, 580

Small-Pox inoculated, IV. 680

Smith, John, Chancellor of the Exchequer, III. 394. choſen Speaker of the Houſe of Commons, 717, and IV. 39. made Under-Treaſurer, Chancellor of the Exchequer and a Privy-Counſellor, 68. his ſpeeches at Sacheverel's trial, 153. is one of the Managers, ibid. made a Teller of the Exchequer, 191. his ſpeech about the peace, 319. in behalf of the Whig Miniſtry, 321

Smyrna fleet comes in ſafe, III. 182. another damaged, 242, 249

Snape, Dr. debate in the Houſe of Commons, about his preaching on the 29th of May, IV. 536. publiſhes an anſwer to Biſhop Hoadley's ſermon, ibid. and a ſecond letter to him, 358. removed from being the King's Chaplain, 359

Sobieski, John, King of Poland dies, III. 331. his character, 355

Society for Reformation of Manners, III. 374. for propagating the Goſpel in foreign parts, 375

Socinians publiſh books, III. 238

Soldiers; exactions of their Colonels and Agents upon them, III. 268, &c.

Solmes, Count, at the ſiege of Limerick, III. 148, 149. the command of the army in Ireland left with him, 150. his ill conduct at the battle of Steenkirk, 208. taken notice of for the ſame in the Houſe of Commons, 223. killed at the battle of Landen, 240

Somerſet, Charles Seymour, Duke of, refuſes to attend on the Pope's Nuncio, III. 19. is for declaring war againſt France, 545. made Maſter of the Horſe, 572. has a meeting with ſome of the eminent Members of the Houſe of Commons, IV. 37. refuſes to proceed to buſineſs in the Privy Council, after the D. of Marlborough was gone, 56. offers the Bank a ſum of money, 61. alienates Q. Anne's mind from her old miniſtry, 192. Maſter of the Horſe, and refuſes to ſit any more in Council, ibid. his Ducheſs made Groom of the Stole, and Miſtreſs of the Robes, 196. a conſultation about removing him, 234. removed, ibid. Pamphlets againſt him, 235. made Maſter of the Horſe, and one of the Privy-Council, 404. offers to be Sir William Windham's bail, and is removed from his place of Maſter of the Horſe, 440. moves for the Peerage-Bill, 585

Sommers, John, made Sollicitor-General, III. 41. draws up the proclamation of war againſt France, 90. diſtinguiſhes himſelf in the Houſe of Commons, 130. made Attorney General, 193. and Lord Keeper, 237. his character, ibid. his propoſal for preventing clipping, 277. made one of the Lords Juſtices, 280. made Lord Chancellor, and Baron of Eveſham, 350. writes for a ſtanding army, 365. his good conduct, 377, &c. K. William communicates to him the Partition Treaty, 383. two letters of his, ibid. and 387. concerned in Kidd's affair, 396. attempts to diſplace him, 401. the Tories endeavour to remove him, 403. his argument in the bankers caſe, ibid. &c. the King demands the Great-Seal of him, 404. he delivers it up, 406. his character, ibid. he is blackened about Kidd's affair, 458. debate concerning him in the Houſe of Commons, 458, &c. gives that Houſe a particular account of the Partition Treaty, 459. impeached by the Commons, ibid. their addreſs againſt him, 460. articles againſt him, with his anſwers, 462. acquitted, 469. his advice about the conqueſts in the Weſt-Indies, 487. a tract of his, 488. had a hand in K. William's laſt ſpeech, 498. who was the author of his diſgrace, 509. left out of the Privy-Council, 545. is againſt the Occaſional Conformity Bill, 581. draws up the Lords addreſſes, 639. his anſwer to the Earl of Nottingham about the Partition Treaty, 675. his ſpeech in the debate about the danger of the Church, 727. moves for a bill to correct ſome of the proceedings in the Common Law and Chancery, 731. and for diſcouraging the great number of private acts, ibid. had the chief hand in promoting the Union between England and Scotland, 740. ſpeaks in behalf of the Union, 781, 786. his ſpeech about the ſtate of the nation, IV. 40. made Preſident of the Council, 105. ſupports the Dukes of Hamilton, Montroſs and Roxburgh, 110. moves for an amendment of the act of Treaſons, 116. moves for an addreſs for demoliſhing Dunkirk, 117. removed from the place of Preſident of the Council, 191. received with great favour by K. George, 402. dies, 496

Sophia, Princeſs, put into the Succeſſion of the Crown, III. 55. See Succeſſion. her name ordered to be put into the public Prayers, 550. a motion for bringing her over to live in England, 679, &c. 719. writes a letter to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury intimating her readineſs to come over, 722. acts for naturalizing her, 724. called an unbaptized Lutheran, 725. Q. Anne's letter to her, IV. 357. her death and character, 358, &c.

Sophia, Dorothy, wife of King George I. dies, IV. 712

South-Sea Trade and Company, IV. 204, 205. Stock, 329. Company, 339, 366. debts due to them from the Government, 531. K. George choſen Governor, 557. preſent their ſcheme to the Government, 610. South-Sea Scheme, ibid. acts for increaſing their capital ſtock, 612. whence that ſcheme took its riſe, 619, &c. the ſtock falls, 620. account of the proceedings of the Directors, 620, &c. they make ſome ſecret advances towards an union with the Eaſt-India Company, 624. a Committee of them, meet a Committee of the Bank, and draw up the Bank Contract, 625. Proceedings of the Commons in the South-Sea affair, 630. Mr. Walpole's ſcheme for ingrafting one million of South-Sea Stock, into the Bank of England, 631. Bill to reſtrain the Sub-Governor, &c. from going out of the Kingdom, 632. the Directors removed from all places in the Government, 633. reports of the Committee of Secrecy about them, 636, &c. allowance to the Directors out of their own eſtates, 641, &c. reſolutions of the Commons in favour of the ſufferers by the South-Sea Scheme, 642. what the Capital Stock of the Company was at the year 1720, 645. Petitions and Pamphlets againſt the Directors, ibid. &c. General Court of

INDEX to the Continuation of the Hiſtory of England.

of the Company, 646, 672. acts to enable the South-Sea Company to diſpoſe of the effects in their hands, 656. and for hearing claims upon the eſtates of the South-Sea Directors, ibid. two millions of their ſtock tranſfered to the Bank, and two millions of their ſtock revived, 672

Southwell, Thomas, created Viſcount Southwell, IV. 548

Sout-Leuwe attacked and taken by the Allies, III. 702. a deſcription of that place, ibid.

Spain accepts the neutrality of Italy, III. 331. K. of Spain dangerouſly ill, 382, 384. intrigues of the Court of France, to ſecure the Crown of Spain, 384. ſends a memorial againſt the Settlement at Darien, 393. the Succeſſion to that Kingdom ſecured by the French, 407, 408. that Court offended at the Partition-treaty, 413, 416. great want of money there, 484. K. Charles II. of Spain makes a will in favour of the Emperor's ſecond ſon, 416. and another in favour of the D. of Anjou, 418. dies, 425. his will is accepted by the Court of France, 427. war declared againſt Spain, 546. their Settlements in America plundered by the Engliſh, 594. Spain invaded by the Portugueſe and their Allies, 705. the Spaniards invade Portugal, and take ſeveral towns, 667. beſiege Gibraltar in vain, ibid. &c. 705. debate in the Houſe of Lords about the affairs of Spain, IV. 45. they addreſs the Queen for the reſtitution of it to the Houſe of Auſtria, 48. an inquiry begun in both Houſes about the affairs of Spain, 53. the ſervice of the Engliſh there is decried, 54. campaigns there, 93, & 141. the French offer to give Spain to K. Charles, 121, 163, &c. K. Philip gets his ſon, the Prince of Aſturias, acknowledged heir of that Monarchy, 129. publiſhes a manifeſto againſt all that ſhould be done at the Hague to his prejudice, 145. heads his army, 176. the Spaniards defeated at the battle of Almanara, ibid. &c. and at Saragoza, 178. and at Villaviciosa, 181. the proſecution of the war there a favourite project, 195. conduct of affairs there taken into conſideration by the Parliament, 196. campaign there, 212. the Emperor demands Spain, 250. Engliſh forces there called home, 296. peace between that Kingdom and England ſigned, 337. proclaimed, 339. debates about it, 352. the Spaniſh trade examined by the Lords, 365. the K. of Spain pretends to have numberleſs complaints againſt the Emperor, 504. ready to contend for the Crown of France, ibid. offended at the alliance between England and the Duke of Orleans, 505. great preparations made in Spain, 548. a great fleet fitted out to recover Sicily, 562. that fleet deſtroyed by the Engliſh, 568. the Engliſh Merchants in Spain ſecure their beſt effects, 567. are ill uſed, 570. ſeveral grievances upon them, 574. war declared by England againſt Spain, 581. and by France, 582. the Spaniſh ſquadron ſails from Cadiz for England, 583. Spain accedes to the Quadruple-alliance, 600, 605. makes overtures for a peace, 605. peace and alliance between Great-Britain and Spain, 649. taken into conſideration in the Houſe of Lords, 654. two treaties between Spain and the Emperor, 689. private treaty between them, 690. makes great preparations for war, 698, &c. the Spaniards cavil about the preliminaries, 710

Spanheim, Baron, Ambaſſador from the K. of Pruſſia, III. 678. demands a reparation for the arreſt of the Ruſſian Ambaſſador, IV. 103. See alſo p. 117.

Sparre, Baron, in a plot to ſet the Pretender on the Engliſh Throne, IV. 506. extracts of his letters, 509, &c.

Spirebach, battle of, III. 622

Spires burnt by the French, III. 103

Sprat, Thomas, Biſhop of Rocheſter, refuſes to ſign the Aſſociation, III. 322. did not think a Biſhop could be deprived by the Archbiſhop, 523. his character, 529. his death and character, IV. 325

Squadrons, or flying ſquadrons in Scotland, III. 690. promoted the Union, 771. few of them are choſen Repreſentatives in Parliament, 778. were againſt allowing ſome unreaſonable debts, ibid.

Squadrons, three fitted out, IV. 697

Stage; liberty of it ſcandalous, III. 391

Stair, Lord, Secretary for Scotland, his letter about the Glencoe affair, III. 284. diſmiſſed from his office, 285

Stair, John Dalrymple Viſcount, created an Earl, III. 604. heartily concurs in the Union, 737. was for the Union, 771. dies, 777

Stair, John Dalrymple E. of, detached to provide corn for the army, IV. 87. ordered to ſell his regiment, 346. ſent Ambaſſador to France, 407. made one of the Lords of the Bed-chamber, ibid. ſent Ambaſſador to Paris, 415. has ſeveral Conferences with Marquiſs de Torcy about Mardyke, ibid. choſen one of the ſixteen Peers of Scotland, ibid. preſents two memorials to the Court of France concerning the Pretender, 474

Stamford, Thomas Grey E. of, made Commiſſioner of Trade, III. 792. his ſpeech about the State of the Nation, IV. 40

Standards taken at Ramillies carried to Guildhall, III. 780

Standing Army; papers for and againſt it, III. 365. debates about one, IV. 552

Stanhope, Alexander, his proceedings at the Court of Madrid, III. 411, &c. 413. and at the Hague, 419, &c. 427, 433. his propoſals to the Court of France for ſecuring the Netherlands, 446. Ambaſſador to Holland, 541. his memorial to the States, 578

Stanhope, James, made Secretary of State, IV. 404. lays before the Houſe of Commons the papers relating to the late negotiations of peace and commerce, 420. ſupplies R. Walpole's place as Chairman of the Committee of Secrecy, 421. impeaches the D. of Ormond of treaſon, 428. his letter to the Vice-Chancellor and Mayor of Oxford, 442. communicates to the Privy-Council the informations the King had received of a Conſpiracy, 506. he and Mr. Methuen write a circular letter upon the ſeizing of Count Gyllemburg, 507. made Chancellor of the Exchequer, 525. a quarrel had like to ariſe between him and R. Walpole, 534. created Baron Elvaſton, and Viſcount Mahon, 548. ſent Ambaſſador to Spain, 549. made one of the Secretaries of State, and created an Earl, 562. delivers articles to the Court of Madrid, 574. gives the Houſe of Lords an account of the treaties lately concluded, 576. moves for the repeal of the Teſt-act, 578. his anſwer to the Czar's memorial, 616. dies, 635

Stanhope, Brigadier and afterwards General, taken priſoner with his regiment, III. 667. at the ſiege of Barcelona, 708. and at the taking of Montjuic fort, 709, &c. offers to furniſh K. Charles with what he wanted, 754. Envoy Extraordinary to the K. of Spain, 763. had orders to go and ſeek the enemy, IV. 4. concludes a treaty of commerce with K. Charles, 12. frames a bill about the vaſſalage of the Clans in Scotland, 58. Commander in Chief of the Queen's forces in Spain, 94. forms the deſign of conquering Minorca, which he accompliſhes, 95, &c. is for the bill for limiting the number of officers, 162. is ſurprized at Brihuega, 181. endeavours an exchange of priſoners, but continues confined to the end of the war, 213. writes againſt the treaty of commerce, 315. had a hand in the Britiſh Merchant, 316. moves for an addreſs to the Queen, to preſs the D. of Lorrain to remove the Pretender out of his Dominions, 323. ſpeaks in R. Steele's behalf, 343. endeavours to ſecure the Proteſtant Succeſſion, 347. maintains that it was in danger, 354. ſpeaks againſt the Schiſm-bill, 360, 363. dines with L. Bolingbroke, 368. receives particular marks of favour from K. George, 402. one of the Cabinet-Council, 404

Stanhope, Colonel, the preſent E. of Harrington, Envoy Extraordinary to Madrid, IV. 566. cauſes ſeveral ſtores in the parts of Biſcay to be deſtroyed, 570. preſents ſeveral memorials to the Court of Spain, 581. Ambaſſador at Madrid, 691. the D. of Ripperda flies to his houſe for ſhelter, 698. his memorial upon that Duke's being taken by force out of his houſe, 699. leaves Madrid, 709

Stanhope, Charles, great quantities of South-Sea ſtock given him, IV. 637. his name eraſed in the book, ibid. and 640. his caſe taken into conſideration by the Houſe of Commons, 639. made Treaſurer of the Chamber, 649

Stanian, Abraham, Envoy Extraordinary to the Proteſtant Cantons, promotes the K. of Pruſſia's intereſt to the Principality of Neufchatel, IV. 31

Staniſlaus Leezinkski choſen K. of Poland, III. 669. crowned, 715. acknowledged K. of Poland, 763. forced to fly into Saxony, IV. 15. introduced to the D. of Marlborough, 16

Staremberg, Guido de, commands the infantry at the battle of Luzzara, III. 567. his remarkable march, 623

Staremberg, Count, ſent to Spain, IV. 46. appointed Commander in Chief there, 93. the beſt General of the age for the defenſive, 97. commands in Spain, 213. Torcy deſires that Q. Anne ſhould put a ſtop to his projects, 287

States of Holland, their charges for K. William's expedition into England repaid, III. 54. 600,000 l. granted them, 98. treaties with them, 91, 102. their memorial upon Lewis the XIV's accepting of the K. of Spain's will, 429. preſſed hard by him to declare themſelves, 431. their memorial laid before the Parliament, 440. the French King's anſwer to them, 453. they refuſe to treat but in conjunction with England, 454. their anſwer to K. William's ſpeech, 481. and to the French King's memorial, 482. augment their army, and regard their fortifications, 484. alliance between them, Great-Britain, and Denmark, ibid. and between them, Great-Britain, and the Emperor, 487. in great conſternation upon K. William's death, 540. Q. Anne's letter to them, 541. publiſh an anſwer to de Barre's memorial, 542. declare war againſt France, 546. concludes a treaty with Portugal, 624. ſome of the States were againſt ſending an army to the Moſelle, 654. their Deputies do not conſent, that the D. of Marlborough ſhould attack the enemy in their poſts, 702. the D. of Bavaria makes propoſals to them for holding Conferences for a peace, 763. their Deputies have a Conference thereupon with the Miniſters of the Allies, ibid. treaty between England and K. Charles how communicated to them, IV. 13. their memorial againſt the conqueſt of Naples, 22. give Q. Anne intelligence of the preparations made at Dunkirk for the Pretender, and concert meaſures for aſſiſting her, 56. the Court of France makes propoſals of peace to them, but the D. of Marlborough convinces them of the treacherous deſigns of that Court, 121. reſolve to enter into no ſeparate treaty, 122, &c. their reſolution about Petkum's journey to France, and the paper he brought from thence, 147. do not approve of the offers of peace made by France, 164, &c. deſire to have the D. of Marlborough ſent over, 164. interpoſe in favour of that Duke, 190. their Deputies propoſe to hazard a battle with the French, 211. were againſt the ſiege of Bouchain, ibid. will not agree that Queſnoy ſhould be beſieged, 212. alarmed at the preliminaries of peace ſigned by the Engliſh, 224. the Emperor's letter to them, 225. the Imperial Plenipotentiaries preſent a memorial to them, ibid. were againſt opening a Congreſs, 226. barrier treaty concluded with them, 240. the Commons paſs ſeveral votes injurious to them, 242. write a letter to the Queen about the Barrier-treaty, ibid. publiſh a memorial againſt the Commons repreſentation, ibid. &c. their Plenipotentiaries at the treaty of Utrecht, 247. Q. Anne conſents that they ſhould have Dendermond and Ghent, 253. give Prince Eugene the ſupreme command of their army, 254. jealous of the Engliſh, 255. memorial of their Deputies upon the D. of Ormond's refuſing to fight, 258. expoſtulate with Biſhop Robinſon upon it, 260. write a letter to the Queen upon that ſubject, ibid. and 269. the reſolutions of the Commons about that letter, 272. reſolve to entertain the auxiliaries in Britiſh pay, 274. aſſemble on the D. of Ormond's declaration about a ceſſation, 275. have a Conference with the E. of Straſford and Bp. Robinſon, but will not agree to a ceſſation, 277, 287, 290. take upon themſelves the payment of moſt of the auxiliaries in British pay, 287. propoſe a new ſcheme of a peace, 295. the E. of Strafford propoſes to them a new plan, which they accept of, 300, &c. they write a letter to Q. Anne, 302. her anſwer to it, 305, 306. their Plenipotentiaries ſign the treaty of Utrecht, 311. the anſwer of the States to the E. of Strafford, concerning the conferences at Radſtadt, 337. concludes a treaty with the Elector of Hanover, 347. called upon to be ready to perform the guarantee of the Proteſtant Succeſſion, 370. their letter to Q. Anne, June 5, 1712, 387. their anſwer to Klingrafe's memorial, 399. K. George thanks them for it, 400. a treaty concluded between them, K. George, and the D. of Orleans, 505. ſuſpend their conſent to the Quadruple Alliance, 564. accede to it, 565. K. George demands of them two thouſand men upon the rumour of an invaſion, which they ſend, 583, 584. mediators of peace between Spain, &c. but K. George and the Emperor will not accept their mediation, 604. the Spaniſh Ambaſſador delivers to them a plan of peace, 605. accede to the treaty of Hanover, 699

Steel, Richard, his reflections about Dunkirk, IV. 327. is choſen a Burgeſs for Stockbridge, and reſigns his place of one of the Commiſſioners of the Stamp-duty, 335. publiſhes the Criſis, ibid. reflected upon in the Public Spirit of the Whigs, 340, &c. obnoxious to the Miniſtry, and complained of in the Houſe of Commons, 342. his motion about Dunkirk, 343. his trial in the Houſe of Commons, ibid. expelled, 345. offers a petition in behalf of the condemned Lords, 486

Steenkirk, battle of, III. 208

Stetin given up to Pruſſia, IV. 615

Stevens, William, proſecuted for a pamphlet, III. 793

Stillingfleet, Edward, made Bp. of Worceſter, III. 105. talked of for the See of Canterbury, 260

Stirum, Count, defeats the Bavarians, and takes Newmark and Amberg, III. 616. attacks and defeats the Marquiſs d'Uſſon, 621. mortally wounded at the battle of Schellemberg, 655

Storm; the dreadful one in 1703, III. 625

Stormount, Lord Viſcount, letters ſent to him by the Pretender, III. 768. brought priſoner to London, IV. 65

Strafford, Thomas Wentworth Lord Raby, created Viſcount and E. of Strafford, and ſent Ambaſſador to Holland, IV. 219. Mr. St. John communicates to him France's propoſals of peace, ibid. his inſtructions communicated to the French Miniſter by Mr. St. John, 223. communicates the preliminaries of peace to the States, 224. is appointed Plenipotentiary for the peace of Utrecht, ibid. his letter to Captain Desborough relating to Prince Eugene, 236. comes to Utrecht, 247. his ſpeeches at the Congreſs there, 248. is ſent for to England, 253. goes to the Hague, and preſſes the States to come into the Queen's meaſures, 255. declares her intentions, and has a conference with Prince Eugene, ibid. his ſpeech in Parliament about the negotiations at Gertrudenberg, 262. and on the plan of peace, 269. ſent to the Hague to induce the States to accept the offers of France, 277. inſiſts that the States ſhould withdraw their forces from Spain and Portugal, ibid. goes to the D. of Ormond's army, 378. goes incognito to the French camp, to concert meaſures with Marſhal Villars, 282. makes himſelf obnoxious to the Dutch by his haughty carriage, 290. the mob break his windows, and ſet up a wheel before his houſe, ibid. his letter to Mr. Prior, 291. refuſes to ſign the treaty of Utrecht, without the ceſſion of Tournay to the States, 293. comes to England, 295. various conjectures about his coming, ibid. returns to Holland, 300. propoſes a new plan of peace to the States, ibid. &c. goes incognito to Amſterdam, and has ſeveral conferences with the leading Magiſtrates, 301. ſcruples to ſign a ſeparate peace, 309. ſigns it at laſt, 310. inſtalled Knight of the Garter, 328. ſpeaks to the Deputies of the States about the conferences of Radſtadt, 337. and about the barrier in the Netherlands, 338. was firſt Commiſſioner of the Admiralty, 394. notifies to the States the Queen's death, and the acceſſion of K. George to the Throne, 399. accompanies the Princeſs of Wales to Rotterdam, 406. returns to England, and has his papers ſeized, 415. is impeached, 429. the articles againſt him carried up to the Houſe of Lords, 434. his ſpeech in the debate about the Mutiny-bill, 557, 558. about an addreſs, 576

Strasburg; the French offer to reſtore that place, IV. 126, 129, 163. was to be reſtored to the Emperor, 302, 310

Strickland, Sir William, propoſes to attaint the E. of Oxford, IV. 545

Stuart Family, deſcended from King Robert II, by his concubine Elizabeth Mure, III. 2

Subſidy to Sweden, IV. 647

Succeſſion in the Houſe of Hanover; K. William's ſpeech about it, III. 438. addreſs of the Lords thereupon, 441. the firſt vote about it, 442. heads of the bill of Succeſſion, 443. that bill paſſed, 445. proteſted againſt by the Ducheſs of Savoy, ibid. a clauſe in a bill making it high-treaſon to endeavour to defeat the Succeſſion, 583. the ſame enacted in Ireland, 610. declared in Scotland, 648. debates about it, 650, 689, &c. addreſs of thanks from the Commons about the Succeſſion, 719

Sugar Iſlands belonging to the Engliſh ravaged by the French, IV. 293

Sunderland, Robert Spencer E. of, embraces Popery, III. 20. perſuades K. James to uſe gentle methods, ibid. adviſes him not to accept an army offered him by the French King, 21. excepted out of the Indemnity, 132. gains credit with K. William, 237. is the cauſe of L. Sommers and Sir John Trenchard's promotion, ibid. is a great confident of the King, and perſuades him to change his Miniſtry, 252. brings about a reconciliation between the King and Princeſs Anne, 263. was for the Land-bank, 322. made Lord Chamberlain, and Privy-Counſellor, 350. reſigns his places and retires from buſineſs, 368. his wiſe Adminiſtration, ibid. his order againſt Play-houſes, 391. ſent Envoy Extraordinary to the Emperor Joſeph, 704, 705. made Secretary of State, but againſt Queen Anne's will, 792, 793. ſome of his letters to the E. of Mancheſter, about the expedition to Naples, IV. 21, 24. his letter to General Stanhope, 97. ſupports the Dukes of Hamilton, Montroſs and Roxburgh, 110. ſpeaks at Dr. Sacheverel's trial, 161. diſmiſſed from his place of Secretary, 163, 189. his removal inſerted in the French Gazette, 190. his letters to General Stanhope about the war in Spain, 197, 198, 200. his ſpeech in Parliament about the preliminaries of peace, 228. his Counteſs reſigns her place of Lady of the Bed-chamber, 234. his ſpeech about the Union, 318. moves for a ſecond addreſs about removing the Pretender out of Lorrain, 323, 348. his ſpeech about the Catalans, 347. and on the Schiſm-bill, 362. received with great favour by K. George, 402. made Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, 404. infuſes jealouſies in the King of the L. Townſhend, and R. Walpole, 503. appointed ſole Treaſurer of Ireland, 504

Sunderland, Charles Spencer E. of, made Secretary of State, IV. 525. appointed Preſident of the Council, and firſt Commiſſioner of the Treaſury, 562. was againſt repealing the Teſt, 578. had promoted the difference in the Royal Family, 609. ſtock given him, 637. the Houſe of Commons take that affair into conſideration, 640, &c. reſigns the place of firſt Commiſſioner of the Treaſury, 641. his death and character, 657

Supplies granted for the war, III. 92. a ſupply of two millions voted, 112. of four millions, 160. of above three millions for the fleet and army, 190, &c. of above five millions, 226, &c. 231, &c. of five millions and a half, 249. of almoſt five millions, 259. of above ſeven millions for the year 1709, IV. 108

Surman, Robert, Deputy Caſhier of the South-Sea, examined by the Lords, IV. 633. his papers ſeized, and himſelf ordered to be taken into cuſtody, 634. the allowance made him, 643, 644

Suſpenſion of arms between England and France, IV. 265. articles for it ſigned, 266. another ſuſpenſion proclaimed at Paris, 687.

Sutherland, John Sutherland E. of, elected one of the ſixteen Peers of Scotland, IV. 415. his ſpeech in Parliament, 431. ſhews his zeal againſt the Rebellion, 438. advances to attack the E. of Seaford, 448. the Marquiſs of Huntley, and the E. of Seaford capitulate with him, 468

Suza taken, III. 154

Sweden, Charles XI, and XII, King of, III. 352. alliance between Sweden and France, 385. a league formed againſt K. Charles XII. 410. peace between him and Denmark, 411. makes a deſcent in Zealand, ibid. defeats the Muſcovites at Narva, 438. routs the Poles and becomes maſter of their camp, 486. See Charles XII. attached by the Czar, IV. 183. a manifeſto publiſhed there againſt Denmark, 184. the Swedes land in Rugen, 214. defeat the Danes, 308, &c. enter Mecklenburg, ibid. are defeated, 309. bill to prohibit commerce with Sweden, 519. Treaty between England and that Kingdom, 522. the Britiſh ſhips confiſcated there, ibid. ſupply againſt Sweden, ibid. and 525. debate in the Houſe of Commons about the trade with Sweden, 561. peace between Sweden and England, and a treaty of alliance, 588. gives up Bremen and Verden to the Elector of Hanover, 614. guarantee the ſucceſſion to the Crown of Great-Britain, ibid. gives up ſome places to the King of Pruſſia, 615. has ſome reſtored by Denmark, ibid. ſubſidy to that Court, 647. peace between Sweden and Muſcovy, 650, and 674. accedes to the treaty of Hanover, 699, 705

Swift, Jonathan, account of him, IV. 221. goes over to the Tories, ibid. his Fable of the Widow and her Cat, 240. writes againſt the Barrier Treaty, 241. his band-box plot, 297. made Dean of St. Patrick, 325. writes The publick ſpirit of the Whigs, 340. careſſed by the Lord Treaſurer, 341, 342. reflected upon, 362. a packet directed to him, ſeized, for which he abſconds, 425. his verſes about Wood's half-pence, 676

Sword-Blade Company ſtop payments, IV. 627

Synods of Glaſcow, Air, &c. animate perſons of all ranks to the defence of K. George and the Conſtitution, IV. 448

Syracuſe blocked up by the Spaniards, IV. 570. Admiral Bing put in there, ibid.

T.

TAFFE, alias Thomas O Mullen, diſcovers the Lancaſhire plotters, III. 265, 266. his character, 266. diſguſted and turns againſt the Court, ibid.

Taiſnieres, battle of, Blaregnies, or Malplaquet, IV. 136, &c.

Talbot, William, made Dean of Worceſter, III. 173. Biſhop of Oxford; his ſpeech at Dr. Sacheverel's trial, IV. 157. tranſlated to Salisbury, 419

Tallard, Count, comes Ambaſſador from France to England, III. 380. waits upon K. William in Holland, 383. formed a party in England againſt the Partition Treaty, 471

Tallard, Marſhal de, his preſumption at the battle of Hochſtet, III. 658. taken priſoner, 659. brought to England, and ſent to Nottingham, 677. correſponds with France, IV. 47. obtains leave to go to France, 223

Talmaſh, Thomas, General, at the ſiege of Athlone, III. 175. and battle of Anghrim, 178. his reſolute behaviour, 179. at the ſiege of Limerick, 180. made Lieutenant-General of the foot, 195. commands the regiments of foot, that were ſent over from Holland, 200. of the Court-Marſhal to try Grandval, 210. named by the Houſe of Commons as a perſon fit to command the foot, 223. his bravery at the battle of Landen, 240. wounded at the attempt upon Breſt, and dies, 254

Tankerville, Ford Grey, Lord, made Lord Privy-Seal, III. 437

Tarbat, George Mackenzie, Lord, Viſcount, made Secretary of State, III. 595. created Earl of Cromarty, 604

Tariff, IV. 295, 302, 303, 307, 314, 320

INDEX to the Continuation of the History of England.

Tax on marriages, births, and burials, III. 259

Temple, Sir Richard, moves to pay the forces abroad by sending over English manufactures, III. 225. defeats the French guards, and takes their baggage, IV. 72. his regiment attacks a party of French, 82. removed from his command of a regiment of Dragoons, 311. created Baron of Cobham, and appointed Envoy to the Count of Vienna, 407

Tenniſon, Thomas, made Biſhop of Lincoln, III. 194. tranſlated to Canterbury, 260. preaches Q. Mary's Funeral Sermon, 264. made one of the Lords Juſtices, 280. attends K. William in his laſt moments, 506. diſpute between him and the Lower Houſe of Convocation, about the power of adjourning, 525, &c. his ſpeech in the Convocation, 646. refuſes to receive the form of addreſſes, ſent up by the Lower Houſe of Convocation, 733. prorogues the Convocation, 734. brings in a bill for the ſecurity of the Church of England, 782. receives two letters from the Queen, ordering him to prorogue the Convocation, 793, 795. a proteſtation prepared againſt him by the Convocation. ibid.

Teſſe, Marſhal de, the French King's Ambaſſador extraordinary to the Pope, IV. 100

Teſt, Sacramental, K. William endeavours to have it taken away, III. 45, 512. paſſed in 1673. 519. a letter againſt it ordered to be burnt, by the Commons, IV. 120

Teſt and Corporation acts, remarks on them made in Parliament, IV. 578, 579

Thanet, Thomas Tufton, Earl of, made a Privy-Counſellor, III. 590. his ſpeech in the debates about the Union, 786

Thaun, Count, conquers Naples, IV. 22, &c. prepares to march over Mount Cenis, and takes Anneci, 140. takes upon him the command of the Confederates, 175

Theſſe, Marſhal de, at the ſiege of Barcelona, III. 752. ſent to cover France on the ſide of Toulon, IV. 4

Thiſtle, order of the, revived, III. 604

Thomond, Henry Obvian, Earl of, created Viſcount Tadcaſter, IV. 407

Thompſon, Sir John, created Baron of Haverſham, III. 326, 327

Thompſon, Sir William, Recorder of London, tries the Rebels, IV. 489. ſpeech for the Septennial-bill, 495. added to the Secret Committee, 541. his ſpeech at the Earl of Oxford's trial, 543. and on the repeal of the ſchiſm act, 581. quarrel between him and Mr. Lechmere, 610

Thorn: account of the perſecution there, IV. 682

Tillotſon, John, employed in the review of the Liturgy, III. 107. deſigned for Prolocutor of the Convocation, but not choſen, 109. made Archbiſhop of Canterbury, 173. his character, ibid. and 260. dies, ibid. penſion granted to his widow, ibid.

Tilly, Count, plunders Picardy, IV. 80. becomes Commander in Chief of the Dutch troops, 87. paſſes the Scheld to relieve Bruſſels, 89. all the confederate troops are left under his command, 93. at the battle of Malplacquet, 137. at the taking of Doway, 170, &c.

Tindal, Dr. Matthew, his Rights of the Chriſtian Church burnt, IV. 161

Tirconnel, Richard Talbot, Earl of, Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, promotes Popery in that Kingdom, III. 77. turns all the Proteſtant Officers out of the army, and puts Papiſts in their room, ibid. gives out Commiſſions for levying thirty thouſand men, ibid. uſes the Proteſtants with great ſeverity, 80. made a Duke, ibid. ſails from Ireland into France with K. James, 138, 145. his papers taken, and treaſonable practices found therein, 146. returns to Ireland and goes back to France, 152. returns to Ireland with ſome proviſions, 174. dies in Limerick, 179

Tithes; act for the more eaſy recovery of ſmall tithes, III. 323

Toland, John, his Chriſtianity not miſterious cenſured, III. 527. his Dunkirk or Dover, IV. 327. his Art of reſtoring, 336. formerly employed by the Lord-Treaſurer, ibid. his Reaſons and Neceſſities of the Duke of Cambridge's coming over, 357

Toleration; the Presbyterians irreconcileable enemies to it, III. 11. bill of Toleration preſented to the Parliament, 44. paſſed, 48. one paſſed by K. James in Ireland, 88. the Independants for it, and the Presbyterians againſt it, 515. hated by many of the Clergy, 524

Tory, Marquiſs de, comes to Holland to negotiate a peace, IV. 120, 123. deſires paſſes for ſome Miniſters from France to Holland, but is refuſed, 144, 145. writes ſome letters to the D. of Marlborough, 145, 146. his papers ſent by Petkum, 146. ſends another project to Petkum for a peace, 163. tranſmits to England new propoſals of peace, 219, 221. his memorial, 252. his anſwer to Gaultier's memorial, 263. letters between Mr. St. John about the King of Spain's renunciation, 264, &c. his anſwer to Lord Bolingbroke's memorial, 303. his letter to d'Iberville, 398. his paper to Mr. Prior about the Pretender, 411

Tongeren deſcribed, III. 618. taken by the French, ibid. they abandon it, ibid.

Tories; beginning of that name and party, III. 15. were for paſſive obedience, &c. 17. did not favour Popery nor Arbitrary Power, ibid. depart from the doctrine of paſſive obedience, 20. in ſome reſpects become Whigs, ibid. join with the Whigs in inviting over the Prince of Orange, 21. adhere to the divine unalienable Hereditary Right of Kings, 25. moderate and rigid Tories, 26. beget in K. William jealouſies of the Whigs, 52. diſplaced, and were againſt carrying on the war, 252. preſs hard upon the E. of Sunderland, 368. the old Eaſt-India Company falls into their hands, 370. in the Adminiſtration, 398. endeavour the removal of Lord Somers and other of the Miniſtry, 403. ſend a propoſal to K. James to have the Pretender put into the Succeſſion, 421. ſeem zealous for the bill of Succeſſion, 442, &c. find fault with the Partition Treaty, 447. are againſt the Abjuration act, 501. pretend great zeal for the Princeſs of Denmark, 502. were greatly in Q. Anne's favour, 538. oppoſe the taking away the firſt-fruits, and tenths, 642. were for inviting over the Princeſs Sophia, 719. oppoſe the act of Regency, 721. are againſt Penſioners and Place-men ſitting in the Houſe of Commons, 722. gain great advantage by Dr. Sacheverel's trial, IV. 185. reflect upon the Emperor and the Dutch for interpoſing in the Duke of Marlborough's favour, 190. a new combination among them, 201. many of them diſlike the peace, 273. propoſe a million for the Civil-Liſt for K. George, 396. afraid of being turned out of their places, 402. were ingaged in dangerous practices, ibid. why diſliked by K. George, 404. ſacrificed to his reſentment, and that of the Allies, ibid. pretend that the Pretender's manifeſto was a contrivance of the Whigs, 411. publiſh a circular letter about the election of the ſixteen Scotch Peers, 415. about a third part of them in the Houſe of Commons, 1714-15, 419. their debates about the Civil-Liſt, 422. about penſions, 423. and regulating the land-forces, ibid. endeavour to put off the conſideration of the report of the Committee of Secrecy, 426

Torrington, Arthur Herbert, E. of, accuſed of treachery and cowardice at the battle of Beachy-head, III. 139, 141. is ſent to the Tower, 142. tried and acquitted, 144. the King is offended at his acquittal, and takes away his Commiſſion, 145

Torrington, Edward Herbert, Earl of, his reflections on the E. of Nottingham's account of the conſpiracy, III. 638

Torrington, Arthur Herbert, Lord, made one of the Commiſſioners of the Treaſury, IV. 525

Torrington, George Byng, Lord Viſcount, motion for an addreſs to have his inſtructions laid before the Houſe of Lords, IV. 654

Toulon, beſieged by the Allies, IV. 21, 25. the ſiege raiſed, 26. remarks upon that expedition, 27, &c.

Toulouſe, Count of, blocks up Barcelona by ſea, III. 752. leaves it, ibid.

Tournay; a deſcription of that place, IV. 133. beſieged, ibid. taken, 134, &c. the French King refuſes to ratify the articles for the ſurrender of the Citadel, 135. it ſurrenders at laſt, ibid. the French demand the reſtitution of it, 291, &c. made part of the barrier, 501

Tourville, Monſieur de, ordered by King Lewis to ſeek out and engage the Engliſh fleet, III. 201. defeated at la Hogue, ibid. commands the French fleet, 242

Townſhend, Charles, Lord Viſcount, attends the D. of Marlborough to Holland, IV. 121. as Ambaſſador Extraordinary, 124. his character, ibid. has a conference with the Dutch Ambaſſadors, 165, 168. delivers a memorial to the States, 169. makes the Barrier Treaty with the States, 240, 242. his ſpeeches about the Union, 318. and againſt the Schiſm-bill, 362. received with great favour by K. George, 402. made one of the principal Secretaries of State, 404. his meſſage to the Duke of Lorrain's Miniſter, 410. entertains Mr. Prior with ſeveral Noblemen at dinner, 418. a letter of his to the D. of Argyle intercepted by the Rebels, 449. removed from the office of Secretary of State, 503. reſigns his place of Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, 523. is againſt the Peerage-biil, 586. admitted to kiſs the King's hand, 317. made Preſident of the Council, and one of the Lords Juſtices in the King's abſence, ibid. appointed Secretary of State, 649. his letter to the Lord Mayor of London about the plot, 659

Townſhend, Charles, created Baron of Lynn-Regis, IV. 637

Trade, Council of, voted, III. 310. endeavours to reſettle the trade between England and France, 380

Traerbach; the French imagined the D. of Marlborough intended to beſiege that place, III. 654. beſieged and taken by the Allies, 662

Trant, Sir Patrick, Commiſſioner of the Iriſh revenues, IV. 135

Treaty; a private one between K. James and the K. of France, III. 13. another ſecret treaty between them, 80. between England and Holland for a joint-fleet, 91. another treaty between them, 102. between England and Denmark, ibid. of peace at Ryſwick, 351, &c. between France and the Emperor, 363. of Partition, 384. the ſecond treaty of Partition, 407. See Partition. Treaties of the Grand Alliance laid before the Commons, 501. treaty between England, Portugal and Holland, 623, &c. between England and Pruſſia, 678. draught of an act for a treaty between England and Scotland, 692, 695. of peace between England and Spain ſigned, IV. 339. taken into conſideration by the Houſe of Lords, 352, 365. extracts of it, 391, 408. of peace between Spain and Portugal, 400. barrier treaty, 408. treaty between Great-Britain and Denmark, 424. between England, Spain, and the D. of Orleans, 499. between England, Holland, and the ſame Duke, 505. with the Emperor, 508

Treaty of Commerce between K. Charles and England, IV. 12. how diſcovered to the Dutch, 13. treaties of peace and commerce brought to England, and ratified by Q. Anne, 311. motion in the Houſe of Commons to addreſs her to communicate them to that Houſe, 313. laid before the Parliament, 314. the ſubſtance of them, ibid. and 390. taken into conſideration by the Houſe of Lords, 345, 352. debates thereupon, 352. account of theſe treaties laid before the Commons, 353. new treaty of commerce between England and Spain, 508

Treaty between the Emperor and the King of Sicily, IV. 563. between England and Sweden, 588, 614. between Sweden and Pruſſia, 615. between England and Denmark, 617, 618

Treaty of peace between Great-Britain and Spain, IV. 649. between the Moors and England, 651. private treaty between the Emperor and Spain, which alarms K. George, 690. of Hanover, ibid. debates in Parliament about it, 692. of Seville, 711. of Vienna, ibid.

Treby, Sir George, made Chief-Juſtice of the Common-Pleas, III. 193

Trelawney, Sir Jonathan, Biſhop of Exeter, oppoſes the reſt of the Biſhops in Convocation, III. 529. tranſlated to Wincheſter, IV. 36

Trenchard, Sir John, made Secretary of State, III. 237. his character, ibid. dies, 280. author of an argument againſt Standing Armies, 365

INDEX to the Continuation of the Hiſtory of England.

Trenchard, John, one of the Truſtees for the forfeited eſtates in Ireland, III. 607

Treves taken by the French, III. 565

Trevor, Sir John, choſen Speaker of the Houſe of Commons, III. 126. his character, ibid. made firſt Commiſſioner of the Great-Seal, 132. made a Privy-Counſellor, 163. and Maſter of the Rolls, 236. concerned in corrupting the Members of the Houſe of Commons, 268. expelled the Houſe of Commons for corruption, 269, &c. 276. the Commons deſign to impeach him, 280

Trevor, Sir Thomas, made Sollicitor-General, III. 236. made a Baron, IV. 254. his ſpeech about the Union, 318. ſpeaks againſt ſetting a price on the Pretender's head, 350. not ſent for into K. George's Bedchamber, 401. removed, 412. is againſt the Septennial bill, 490, 491. preſents the Earl of Oxford's petition, 541. was for the bill againſt Blaſphemy, 647. made Lord Privy-Seal, 696

Triennial Parliaments; act for them repealed, IV. 490, &c.

Triers; the fortifications of it blown up by the Imperialiſts, III. 699. ſeized by the French, ibid.

Trimnel, Charles, made Biſhop of Norwich, IV. 37, 38. his ſpeech at Dr. Sacheverel's trial, 158

Trinidado taken and burnt by the Engliſh, III. 594

Trinity; complaint of books againſt it, III. 374. diſputes about it, IV. 412. directions given by the King concerning it, 413, &c. diſpute between the Diſſenters about it, 607. K. George's directions about it, 646

Trinity College, Dublin; five thouſand pounds given for building a library there, IV. 216

Triple Alliance, IV. 508

Tripoli and Tunis, the peace between thoſe places and England renewed, III. 613

Trumball, Sir William, adviſes K. William to ſend a fleet into the Mediterranean, to ruin the French trade with Turkey, III. 214. made one of the Commiſſioners of the Treaſury, 253. made Secretary of State, 280. his character, ibid. &c. choſen one of the repreſentatives for the Univerſity of Oxford, 302. one of the Lords of the Treaſury, 310

Tullibardine, William Murray Marquiſs of, engaged in the Pretender's ſervice, IV. 437. joins the reſt of the Rebels, 446. at the battle of Dumblain, 460. forced to leave the E. of Mar, in order to cover his own Country, 464. bill to attaint him, 483. lands in Scotland, 584. eſcapes, ibid.

Tumult in Edinburgh and other places on account of the Union, III. 774

Turenne, Prince of, killed at the battle of Steenkirk, III. 209

Turin threatened with a ſiege by the French, III. 705. beſieged by the French, 757, &c. deſcription of that place, ibid. the ſiege raiſed, 759

Turks defeated by the Imperialiſts, III. 187, 188, &c. and at Zenta, 363. peace between them and the Emperor, 385. a Revolution among them, and a new Sultan ſet up, 669. promiſe the Emperor not to aſſiſt the Hungarians, ibid. declare war againſt Muſcovy, IV. 184. peace between them, 214. Charles XII. endeavours to kindle a new war between them and the Czar, 309 defeated before Corfu, 502. defeated by Pr. Eugene, 548. invade the Venetian territories, ibid. peace between them and the Emperor, 565. the Emperor complains that the Courts of Great-Britain and France had endeavoured to ſtir up the Turks againſt him, 705

Turner, Francis, Bp. of Ely, enters into a plot to reſtore K. James, III. 166. proclamation for apprehending him, 171

Turner, Sir Charles, made one of the Commiſſioners of the Treaſury, IV. 617

Tuſcan Dominions; pretenſions of the Imperial and Spaniſh Courts to them, IV. 504

Tuſcany, Parma and Placentia to be ſettled on the Q. of Spain's eldeſt ſon, IV. 549, 563, 605

Tweedale, John Hay Marquiſs of, made Lord Chancellor of Scotland, III. 194, 245. the King's Commiſſioner there, 281. his character, ibid. his ſpeech to the Parliament, 282. diſmiſſed, 309. one of the Leaders of the Country-party in Scotland, 596. made High-Commiſſioner, 648. his ſpeech in Parliament about the Succeſſion, 649, &c. on paſſing the act of Supply, 651, &c. is made Lord-Chancellor, 652. excuſes himſelf from ſerving as High-Commiſſioner, 676. removed from being Lord-Chancellor, 689. preſents to Parliament the draught of an anſwer to the Queen's letter, 692. was for the [illegible] 771

Tw[illegible] a half per cent. allowed to the D. of Marlborough, by the Princes who had troops in Q. Anne's ſervice, cenſured by the Commons, IV. 239, 240

V.

Valencia, campaign there, III. 711, &c. moſt of the towns there declare for K. Charles, 712. in a Council of war held there, it is reſolved to act offenſively, IV. 4

Vanbrugh, Sir John, draws the plan of Blenheim-Houſe, III. 678

Vanderbeck, Major General, commands the Dutch forces ſent againſt the Rebels, IV. 468

Vanderduſſen, Monſieur, Penſioner of Gouda, has conferences with the French Commiſſioners about a peace, IV. 122, &c. 164. one of the Dutch Plenipotentiaries at the treaty of Utrecht, 247. his ſmart ſaying to Polignac, about the French Proteſtants in the gallies, 251

Vane, William, created Baron and Viſcount, IV. 617

Vaudemont, Prince of, Commander in Chief of the Confederates infantry, III. 288. his famous retreat, 291. he is thanked by K. William for it, 292. burns the French magazines at Givet, 326

Vaudois; their tranſactions in Savoy, III. 152, 185, 187. reſtored, 217. Q. Mary eſtabliſhes a fund for maintaining Preachers and Schoolmaſters among them, ibid.

Venant, St. taken, IV. 175

Vendoſme, D. of, relieves Mantua, III. 566. ſent to join the Elector of Bavaria in Tyrol, is forced to return back, 620. takes ſeveral places in Savoy, 668. has an engagement with Prince Eugene, 705. ſent to command in Flanders, 751. fixes himſelf in a ſtrong camp, ibid. the D. of Marlborough follows him, but cannot bring him to an engagement, IV. 19. appointed to ſerve under the D. of Burgundy, 68. at variance with him, 74, 79. defeated at the battle of Oudenard, but makes a good retreat, 74, 76. takes Leſſingham, 86. ſurprizes a body of Engliſh at Brihuega, 180. defeated at Villaviciosa, ibid. takes poſſeſſion of Sarrgoza, 182, attacks ſeveral places in Spain, but to no purpoſe, 213

Venice; Ambaſſadors from thence have an audience, III. 792. forbid the Court, IV. 65. their Dominions invaded by the Turks, 548

Venlo taken, III. 563

Vernon, James, made Secretary of State, III. 378. the E. of Portland's letter to him about the Partition-Treaty, 383. he ſends to the Lord Sommers, ibid. lays before the Houſe of Commons all the papers relating to the Partition-Treaty, 457. made one of the Tellers of the Exchequer, 545

Vernon, George, Lord Willoughby, brings in a bill for ſuppreſſing blaſphemy and profaneneſs, IV. 646

Vienna, Court of, proceeds with its uſual ſlowneſs, III. 624. IV. 46. influenced by jeſuitical Councils, and French money, 371

Vigo; Spaniſh Galleons and French fleet deſtroyed there, III. 570

Villars, Marſhal, ſent to reduce the Cevennois, III. 668. made a Duke, and the chief dependance of Lewis XIV. 697. retires at the D. of Marlborough's approach, 698. takes part of the garriſon of Croon Weſſenburg priſoners, 703. demoliſhes the walls of that town, ibid. paſſes the Rhine, and makes a great progreſs in Germany, IV. 13. deſigns to reſtore the Elector of Bavaria to his Dominions, 14. repaſſes the Rhine, ibid. called the fortunate General, and commands in Dauphine, 193. ſent to command in Flanders, 133. wounded at the battle of Malplaquet, 138. unadviſedly weakens the garriſon of Tournay, 133. endeavours to raiſe the ſiege of Douay, 171. attacks the foragers of the Allies, 174, 175. boaſted that his lines were impenetrable, 210. and yet they are ſurprized by the D. of Marlborough, ibid. Villars reflected upon for it, 211. a favorite of Madam de Maintenon, 212. declares a ſuſpenſion of arms, 282. forms the deſign of poſſeſſing himſelf of the camp of Denain, 283. his letter to the D. of Ormond about the action there, 287

Villa-Franca taken by the French, III. 184

Villaviciosa, battle of, IV. 181

Villeroi Marſhal de, General of the French, bombards Bruſſels, III. 295. taken priſoner by Prince Eugene at Cremonæ, 486. ordered to march into Wirtemberg, and deſtroy that country, 657. approaches near Landau, but does nothing, 662. hinders the Elector of Bavaria from ſurpriſing General Auverquerque, 663. beſieges Liege, 698. receives poſitive orders from the French King to fight the Allies, 744. flies to Louvain after the defeat at Ramilies, 749. ſent to command in Dauphine. IV. 68

Villers, Charlotte, afterwards Lady Orkney, an enemy to the Counteſs of Marlborough, III. 196

Villers, Edward, Viſcount, one of the Plenipotentiaries at the treaty of Ryſwick, III. 350. made one of the Lords Juſtices of Ireland, ibid. and E. of Jerſey, and ſent Ambaſſador to France, 379. See Jerſey.

Vindication of the Biſhop of Exeter, IV. 556

Vivans, Marquiſs of, paſſes the Rhine, and defeats the Germans, IV. 13. defeated by them, 14

Ulrica Eleonora, Queen of Sweden, makes peace with England, IV. 588. gets her huſband Frederic Prince of Heſſe-Caſtle elected K. of Sweden, 619

Underdown, Captain, his expedition to the Weſt-Indies, IV. 30

Union of England and Scotland, bill for it, III. 550. Commiſſioners to treat about it, 557, &c. their proceedings, 558. the Commiſſion made void by Parliament, 603. the beginning of that Union, 689, &c. treaty for that Union, 692, 695. a clauſe offered by the D. of Hamilton about it, 695. he moves that the nomination of officers ſhould not be left wholly to the Queen, 696. the Union recommended by the Queen in her ſpeech, 718. addreſs of the Commons thereupon, 719. proceedings about the Union, 734. Commiſſioners appointed for it, 737, &c. the articles of the Union, 741, &c. preſented to the Queen, 739. the Cavaliers in Scotland reſolve to oppoſe the ratification of it, 776. the Nobility there ſuffered a great diminution by it, ibid. a powerful party in Scotland againſt it, 770. promoted by the Nobility, ibid. and by the Squadrone, ibid. and 771. debates about it, 771, &c. proteſts againſt it, ibid. & 772, &c. addreſſes againſt it, 774. tumults in Edinburgh and other places, on account of the ſame, ibid. it is compleated, 777. Commiſſioners for it rewarded, ibid. debates in the Houſe of Lords concerning it, 781. the Queen's ſpeech concerning the Union, ibid. &c. the articles of it preſented to the Houſe of Commons, 782. debates there about the Union, ibid. and again in the Houſe of Lords, 783. bill for enacting it, 787. paſſed, 788. proteſts againſt it, ibid. ill uſe deſigned to be made of the 4th and 6th articles of the Union, ibid. &c. congratulatory addreſſes upon the Union, 791. and IV. 33. reſolution of the Commons, for making the Union more compleat, 43. which articles of the Union are alterable, 238. the Scots move for an act to diſſolve it, 317, &c. petition ſigned at Edinburgh for that purpoſe, 328. attacked in the public ſpirit of the Whigs, 341. the great good of it, and why ſo earneſtly deſired by K. William, 394. addreſſes ſet on foot in Scotland for diſſolving the Union, 412. endeavours for a Remonſtrance againſt the Union, 416, 422

INDEX to the Continuation of the Hiſtory of England.

United Provinces; account of their Government, III. 31, &c. barrier for them, 766

Univerſities for the prerogative, and paſſive obedience, III. 2, 16. act for veſting in them the preſentations to Papiſts Livings, 98. the leading men there jealous of K. William, 105. the Univerſities propagate the notion of the Church's being in danger, 715

Univerſity of Dublin, the Fellow and Scholars of it ejected by K. James, III. 88

Voltaire, Monſieur de, his account of the D. of Marlborough's negotiations with Baron Gortz, IV. 15. his account of the D. of Marlborough's and the K. of Sweden's interview, 16

Votes of Credit, wherein different from clauſes of appropriation, IV. 707

Urſini Princeſs, her intereſt eſpouſed by the Britiſh Plenipotentiaries at Utrecht, IV. 310. the States's regard for her, 337. Q. Anne obliges herſelf to procure Limberg for her, 392. to be put in poſſeſſion of that Duchy, ibid. account of her, ibid.

Uſedom Iſland given to the K. of Pruſſia, IV. 615

Utrecht; Conferences for a peace there, IV. 224. the treaty there opened, 247. See Treaty, Peace, and France. Summary of the proceedings there, 253, &c. 302, &c. the treaty ſigned, 310, &c. See Treaties and Peace.

W.

Wade, Captain Cooper, his cowardice, III. 593. tried and ſhot for it, ibid. and 594

Wade, Brigadier, aſſiſts at the conqueſt of Minorca, IV. 95, &c. acts in Spain, 178, &c. marches to Bath with ſome forces. 442. puts a guard upon Count Gyllemberg, and ſeizes his papers, 507. in the expedition to Vigo, 604. quells the riot at Glaſgow, 687. diſarms the Highlanders, 688

Wager, Charles, deſtroys ſome Spaniſh galleons, IV. 101. made Rear Admiral of the Red, 143. made one of the Commiſſioners of the Admiralty, 562. ſails with a ſquadron to Ruſſia, 697. returns to England, 698. ſails to the relief of Gibraltar, 709

Wagers; bill to prevent them, IV. 118

Wake, Dr. William, his ſtate of the Church and Clergy of England, III. 646. made Bp. of Lincoln, 687. made Lord Almoner, IV. 452. Archbiſhop of Canterbury, is againſt repealing the Schiſm-act, 579. had proteſted againſt paſſing that ſame act, 581. preſents an addreſs to the King upon his return, 605, 606. is againſt the Quakers-bill, 655

Walcourt, battle of, III. 103

Waldeck, Prince, defeated at the battle of Flerus, III. 155, &c. commands the Confederate army in Flanders, 182, &c.

Walden, Henry Howard Lord, made Commiſſary-General of the Muſters, III. 572. created Baron of Cheſterford and E. of Bindon, 780, 781

Wales, Court of Marches there aboliſhed, III. 98

Walker, Sir Hovenden, commands the ſquadron in the Canada expedition, IV. 215

Wallop, John, made one of the Commiſſioners of the Treaſury, IV. 525. created Baron Wallop and Viſcount Lymington, 617.

Walmſley, Mr. his houſe the head quarters for the plotters againſt K. William, III. 199

Walpole, Robert, moves for a reſumption of the grants made in K. James's Reign, III. 587. made Secretary at war, IV. 67. cenſured, on account of the forage, 239. writes and ſpeaks againſt the treaty of peace, 315. in behalf of R. Steele, 343, 344. his ſpeech to prove the Succeſſion in danger, 354. ſpeaks againſt the Schiſm-bill, 360. propoſes to have the Toleration act extended to Ireland, 363. moves for making good to K. George all Parliamentary funds, 395. made Receiver and Pay-Maſter General of the guards and garriſons, and other forces in Great-Britain, and Pay-maſter to Chelſea Hoſpital, and Privy-Counſellor, 404. choſen Chairman of the Committee of Secrecy, 421. draws up the Report, 426. carries up to the Houſe of Lords the articles of impeachment againſt the L. Bolingbroke, 434. the E. of Sunderland infuſes jealouſies of him into the King, 503. thought to be in a good diſpoſition for the Swediſh invaſion, 518. reſigns his places, 523. a quarrel had like to ariſe between him and Mr. Stanhope, 534. was againſt allowing more than 12000 men for a ſtanding army, 553. votes for the Mutiny-bill, 557. brings about a reconciliation between the King and the Prince of Wales, 617. taken again into favour, ibid. made Pay-maſter General of the forces how far concerned in the Bank-Co 625. his ſcheme for reſtoring the public credit, 631. made firſt Commiſſioner of the Treaſury, 641, 649. one of the Lords Juſtices, and acts as Secretary of State, 673. oppoſes the L. Bolingbroke's pardon, 674, 685. created Knight of the Bath and of the Garter, 687. negotiates a Convention between England and Spain, 710, &c.

Walpole, Robert, junior, ſon of the preceding, created a Peer, IV. 673

Walpole, Horace, ſpeaks in favour of R. Steele, IV. 344. moves for the payment of the arrears due to the Hanover troops, 396. made Secretary of the Treaſury, 649. ſent Ambaſſador to France, 679. had orders to interpoſe in favour of the Proteſtants, 681

Walſh, Mr. ſome lines of his golden age, III. 574

Walton, Sir George, ſails to the Baltick, IV. 697

War declared againſt France by the diet of Ratisbone, the United-Provinces, Spain, England, &c. III. 88, 90. declared againſt France and Spain, by England, the Emperor, and the States-General, 541, &c. the expences of it for the twelve laſt years before the peace of Utrecht amounted to above ſixty-eight millions and a half, IV. 353. war declared againſt Spain, 581

Warneton ſeized by the French and abandoned again, IV. 133

Warwick, Edward Rich E. of, tried for murder, III. 391

Waterford ſurrenders to K. William, III. 147

Watſon, Thomas, Bp. of St. David's, againſt the Court, III. 224. unwilling to ſign the Aſſociation, 322. deprived for ſimony, 522, 687

Waugh, John, made Bp. of Carliſle, IV. 673

Webb, Major General, his bravery at the battle of Oudenard, IV. 75. he and others put Picardy under contribution, 79. preſerves a convoy from Oſtend to Liſle, 84. beats the French at Wynendale, ibid. &c. thanked for it by the Houſe of Commons, and honoured with the order of generoſity by the King of Pruſſia, 86, and 116. made Governor of the Iſle of Wight, 192. ordered to ſell his regiment, 433

Welch Copper and Lead Company, open their books, IV. 622, 623

Welwood, Dr. James, taken into cuſtody for his Mercurius Reformatus, III. 192. made one of the Phyſicians in ordinary to K. William, ibid.

Weems, David Weems, E. of, choſen one of the ſixteen Peers, IV. 64. whence deſcended, 450

Weſtmoreland, Thomas Fane, E. of, made firſt Commiſſioner of trade, IV. 617

Weymouth, Henry Frederic Thynne, Lord Viſcount, made a Privy-Counſellor, III. 545. reſigns his place of Commiſſioner of trade, 792

Wharton, Mary, carried away by Colonel Campbell, III. 161

Wharton, Thomas, one of the Commiſſioners to inſpect the books of the Chamberlain of London, and of the Eaſt-India Company, III. 269. Comptroller of the King's Houſhold, 274. his report about the Eaſt-India affair, ibid. and 277. carries the Duke of Leeds's impeachment up to the Houſe of Lords, 278

Wharton, Thomas Lord, moves for an addition to the Lord's addreſs, III. 452. is againſt the Occaſional Conformity bill, 628. his petition about the honour of Richmond, and the proceedings of the Lords thereupon, 641. ſupplies and manages the Ailesbury men, 682. opens the debate for the act of Regency, 720. his ſpeech about the danger of the Church, 726. was born a diſſenter, ibid. created Viſcount Winchendon and E. of Wharton, 780. ſpeaks in behalf of the Union, 781. another ſpeech of his in the debate about it, 786. his ſpeech about the decay of trade, IV. 40. the D. of Marlborough expoſtulates with him, ibid. made Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, 104. holds a Parliament there, 148. returns to England, 149. his ſpeech at Dr. Sacheverel's trial, 157. reſigns the office of Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, 191. held a Parliament in that Kingdom, ibid. &c. turned out of his place of Chief-Juſtice in Eyre, 195. moves for the Lords entering their proteſts, 198. ſpeaks againſt the peace, 227, 228. and againſt the reſumption of K. William's grants, 245. his ſpeech on occaſion of the D. of Ormond's refuſing to fight, 261. upon the Queen's communicating the plan of peace to the Parliament, 269, &c. attempt in the Houſe of Commons to faſten a miſdemeanor on him, 313. moves for an addreſs that the Pretender ſhould be removed out of Lorrain, 322, 349. makes a complaint againſt the publick ſpirit of the Whigs, 340. repreſents the danger that threatened the Proteſtant Succeſſion, 345, 348. his ſpeech about the Catalans, 347, &c. and about the peace, 353. ſpeaks againſt the Schiſm-bill, 361. complains of ſome being liſted in the Pretender's ſervice, 364. his ſpeech on account of the Pretender's not being removed out of Lorrain, 365. about the Spaniſh trade, 366. moves for an addreſs to the Queen about the Aſſiento, ibid. received with great favour by K. George, 402. made Lord Privy-Seal, 404. his ſpeech about the addreſs to the King, 467. his death and character, 421

Wharton, Philip, Duke of, his ſpeech about the South-Sea Scheme, IV. 611. one of the hell-fire club, 646. goes to Vienna, Rome, and Madrid, 691. receives orders to return to England, ibid.

Wheeler, Admiral, caſt away, III. 252

Whigs; beginning of that name and party, III. 15. their character and principles, 17. K. William jealous of them, 40. loſes his good opinion of them, 116. they grant him his revenues only from year to year, ibid. and 51, 52. promote the bill for taking the militia from the King and the Lords Lieutenants, 54. make the King great promiſes, if he would paſs the Corporation act, 119. republican and moderate Whigs, 27. diſcontented at the preferring of ſome men, 195. join againſt the Court, 231. are again brought into the Adminiſtration, 252. diſliked Biſhop Stillingfleet's being made Archbiſhop, 260. jealous of the E. of Sunderland, 368. loſe their credit in the nation, being charged with robbing the public, 370. grow unpopular, and were for continuing the taxes and army, 437. Q. Anne prejudiced againſt them, 538. had charged the nation with taxes, of which a large ſhare had been devoured by themſelves, 572. have the majority in the Houſe of Commons, 716. join in oppoſing the inviting over the Princeſs Sophia, 719, &c. in a ſtate of war with the Tories, IV. 108. alarmed at the E. Sunderland's removal, 190. removed from the Lieutenancy of London, 192. uneaſy at the doctrine of paſſive obedience, 195. diſlike the peace, 273. hated the Lord Treaſurer for having done too much, 328. The publick ſpirit of the Whigs, a pamphlet, 340. take all imaginable care to ſecure the Proteſtant Succeſſion, 346, &c. ſign an aſſociation, 347. Whig Lords hold a conſultation at the E. of Haliſax's, 351. try to inflame the animoſity between the E. of Oxford and the L. Bolingbroke, 368. elated at K. George's acceſſion, 402. he was fond of them, 404. enemies of France, 405. have the majority in the Parliament, 415. ſaid to intend to give the King a larger revenue than his predeceſſors had enjoyed, 422. divided, 522, 536. exclaimed againſt the creation of Peers in Q. Anne's reign, 585

Whiſton, William, his character and odd notions, IV. 207. the cenſure paſſed on him not confirmed by Q. Anne, 254

Whitaker, Sir Edward, Admiral, aſſiſts in the conqueſt of Minorca, IV. 96. reduces Port-Fornelli, 97. brings forces from Naples to Spain, 141. made Vice-Admiral of the white, 143

INDEX to the Continuation of the History of England.

White-Friers ceaſed to be a privileged-place, III. 349

Whitehall's part of it burnt down, III. 171. burnt almoſt entirely, 378

Whitehall preachers appointed by K. George, IV. 680

Whitelock, Sir William, his ſaying upon the motion for addreſſing Q. Anne to have the Pretender removed out of Lorrain, IV. 323

Whitſhed, William, made Chief Juſtice of Ireland, IV. 404

Widdrington, William Lord, diſcharged, IV. 547

Wight, Captain, his letter about the D. of Ormond, IV. 425

Wightman, Major-General, his account of the battle of Dumblain, IV. 461, &c. defeats the Rebels in Scotland, 584

K. WILLIAM III. and Q. MARY are declared King and Queen, III. 25. uneaſy at the proviſion required for the Princeſs of Denmark, 52. proclaimed King and Queen of Scotland, 70, 72. acknowledged by an act rightful and lawful Sovereigns, 129

K. WILLIAM ſettles a Privy-Council and appoints a Miniſtry, III. 38. grows jealous of the Whigs, 40. his ſpeech to his firſt Parliament, 41. attempts to have the Sacramental Teſt taken away, 45. uneaſy at the revenue being granted him only from year to year, 52. his letter to the Dutch, 54. his ſpeech to the Scotch Lords, 62. his letter to the Convention in Scotland, 67. declares war againſt France, 90. goes to Portſmouth, and diſtributes rewards to the officers, and ſailors who were at the fight of Bantry-Bay, 92. buys Kenſington Palace, ibid. dines with the Lord-Mayor, 104. promotes a comprehenſion, and gives a Commiſſion to ſome Divines for that purpoſe, 106, 109. his ſpeech of his own compoſing, to the Parliament, 111. diſpleaſed with the Whigs, by reaſon of their coldneſs in his intereſt, and their granting him the Civil Liſt but for one year, 116. a conſpiracy againſt him, 117. the King, not knowing how to truſt the Tories, and being determined not to truſt the Whigs any more, reſolves to go to Holland, and leave the Government in the Queen's hands, but alters his deſign, and goes to Ireland, 119. the cuſtoms ſettled upon him for four years, and the hereditary exciſe for life, 128, 129. rejects a propoſal made to him for ſeizing K. James, 133. lands in Ireland, 133. forbids any violence on the country people, 134. orders his whole army to move towards the Boyne, 135. receives a ſlight wound, from whence a rumour of his being killed ſpreads as far as Paris, 135. defeats K. James at the battle of the Boyne, and behaves with great bravery during the whole action, 136, &c. ſome thought he would not have hazarded a battle, 145. publiſhes a Declaration promiſing pardon and protection to the Iriſh, ibid. a deſign formed to aſſaſſinate him, 146. iſſues out a Proclamation for crying down King James's braſs money, ibid. canes a ſoldier who was robbing a poor woman, and cauſes him and ſome others to be hanged, ibid. publiſhes a ſecond pardon, 147. ſets out for Holland and is in great danger on the coaſt there, 163. his ſpeech at the Congreſs at the Hague, 164, &c. plot againſt him by Lord Preſton, 166. returns to England, ibid. goes to Holland again to command the confederate army, 174. eſcapes narrowly being killed, 183. the Spaniards offer to deliver the Government of Flanders to him, 188. comes back to England, ibid. party formed againſt him, 189. was thought to love the Dutch more than the Engliſh, and was naturally ſilent and moroſe, ibid. and 238. fond of his prerogative, 189. not pleaſed with the Presbyterians in Scotland, 195. goes to Holland, 196. a plot for aſſaſſinating him formed by Colonel Parker, &c. marches towards Namur intending to relieve that place, 206. blamed for not hazarding a battle to relieve ſo important a place, 207. his uneaſineſs at ſeeing the Engliſh not duly relieved at the battle of Steenkirk, 208. Grandval's and Dumont's plot to aſſaſſinate him, ibid. puts out a Proclamation againſt vice and immorality, 218. returns to England, 219. dines with the Lord-Mayor, &c. at Guildhall, ibid. is adviſed to ſend away all the foreign forces he had in England, 227. and to demand of the Dutch and Spaniards cautionary towns, 230. books, pretending to prove that he and Q. Mary came by way of conqueſt, burnt, 231. refuſes to paſs the bill for the frequent calling and meeting of Parliament, 233. jealouſy of his miniſters, who are thought to betray him, 237. party formed againſt him, ibid. &c. was not eaſy of acceſs, 238. took no notice of the Clergy, and ſhewed no great regard for Religion or the Church, ibid. goes to Flanders, ibid. his bravery at the battle of Landen, 239. eſcapes narrowly being killed, 240. finds he had been too haſty in truſting ſome in Scotland, 245. does not take due notice of that Kingdom, 246. returns to England, 247. refuſes to paſs the Place-bill, 250. makes an alteration in his Miniſtry, 252. goes to Holland, 253. commands the army, 255. returns to England, 259. inconſolable for the loſs of his Queen, 261, &c. reconciled with the Princeſs Anne, 263. his declaration for the ſtrict diſcipline of the army, 269. was apt to ſign papers in a hurry, 284. goes to Holland, 281. his letter to the Parliament of Scotland, 282. vindicated from being the author of the murder at Glencoe, 286. beſieges Namur, 289. his letter of thanks to Prince Vaudemont upon his famous retreat, 292. his reputation raiſed by the taking of Namur, 299. comes back to England, 300. takes a progreſs to Stamford, &c. 301. iſſues out a Proclamation for calling in the clipped money, 307. addreſſes preſented to him about the Scottiſh Eaſt-India Company, 308, &c. diſowns the act made for it, 309. his anſwer to the Commons addreſs againſt the grant to the Earl of Portland, 312. not inclined to believe the reports about the aſſaſſination plot, 313. the ſeveral ways contrived to aſſaſſinate him, 316. Pendergraſs and de la Rue give him an account of that plot, ibid. his ſpeech to the Parliament on the diſcovery of the plot, 320. refuſes the royal aſſent to a bill for regulating the elections of Members of Parliament, 323. gives the royal aſſent to Fenwick's attainder, 346. appoints regents, and goes to Holland, 350. gains great reputation by the peace of Ryſwick, 364. returns to England, ibid. deſpiſed pageantry, ibid. his letters to the E. of Galway about diſbanding the army, ibid. and 376, 389. was againſt diſbanding the army, 364, &c. extreamly uneaſy at the reſolution taken to do it, 367, 368. a revenue for life granted him, 369. goes to Holland, and leaves ſealed orders behind him, 382. his letter to the Lord Sommers, 383. returns to England, 386. is ſo uneaſy at diſbanding his Dutch guards, that he reſolves to leave the Government, 387. his meſſage to the Commons about the Dutch guards, 388. goes to Holland, 392. chagreened at the proceedings of the Commons, ibid. his letters to the E. of Galway, ibid. and 402, 437. endeavours to prevent a breach between Sweden and Denmark, 394. returns to England, ibid. his anſwer to the Commons remonſtrance, 395. the grants of lands, he had made in Ireland reſumed by the Commons, 398, &c. his anſwer to the Commons addreſs about them, 400. very much againſt it, and very uneaſy, 401. his letter to the D. of Queenſbury and Privy-Council of Scotland, 407. goes to Holland, 409. is weary of the nation, which is highly diſcontented, 410. through his mediation a peace is concluded between Denmark and Sweden, 411. highly reflected on by the Imperial and Spaniſh Courts, about the Partition-Treaty, 414. returns to England, 422. his letter to the Parliament of Scotland, ibid. &c. full of indignation at the French not obſerving the Treaty of Partition, 431. falls into an ill ſtate of health, and his legs ſwell, 433. the Whigs complain of his conduct, 437. ſees the neceſſity of a new war, 438. alarmed at the Preliminaries of the bill of Succeſſion, 444. orders his Envoy at the Hague to enter into negotiations with the Miniſters of France and Spain, for ſecuring the tranquillity of Europe, 446. acquaints the Parliament with his negotiations for the mutual ſecurity of England and Holland, 447. his anſwer to the Commons addreſs about the Partition Treaty, ibid. and to the Houſe of Lords about the ſame, 453. his meſſage to the Houſe of Commons about the French King's anſwer to the States-General, 453. his anſwer to the Commons advice upon that meſſage, ibid. owns the K. of Spain, ibid. his letter to him, 454. ſends ſuccours to the States, 455. his anſwer to the Commons addreſs for removing the Lords Portland, Sommers, Oxford and Halifax, 460. not pleaſed with the Tories, 471, &c. in a bad ſtate of heath, 480. goes to Holland, his ſpeech to the States there, ibid. &c. goes to view the frontier garriſons, 481. uneaſy at the E. of Rocheſter's temper, 488. orders the E. of [illegible]ſter to quit France upon the Pretend[illegible] being proclaimed there, 492. pleaſed with the addreſſes ſent to him upon the proclaiming of that perſon, 495. falls ill at the Hague, and declares to the E. of Portland, that he found himſelf ſo weak, he did not expect to live long, 196. returns to England, ibid. his ſcheme to reduce the power of France, 504. his letter of an union with Scotland, 505. has a fall from his horſe, and breaks his collar bone, ibid. dies, 507. his character, ibid. &c. his reſerved behaviour to the Princeſs Anne, 538. his ſaying of the D. of Marlborough, ibid. the funds fell upon his death, 539. the conſternation in Holland upon the news of his death, 540. great rejoicings in France upon that account, 542. the diſaffected greatly rejoice at the ſame, and vilify the deceaſed King with libels, verſes, &c. 550. a report of ſome papers found in his ſtrong box, for getting the Elector of Hanover declared his immediate Succeſſor, ibid. &c. his papers viſited upon that account, the report found to be falſe and malicious, and the ſpreaders of it ordered to be proſecuted, 551. clamours againſt his adminiſtration, and the management of the revenue in his reign, 584. a motion for reſuming all the grants made in his reign, 587. one expelled for aſperſing his memory, IV. 149. about drinking to his memory, ibid. his ſtatue defaced, 192. deſign in the Houſe of Commons to reſume his grants, 203. the K. of Pruſſia preſſes the ſettling of his Succeſſion, 214. had 50,000 l. per annum for Contingencies, 239. bill to examine into the grants made by him, 245, &c. his birth-day ſolemnized by the Whigs, 297. a picture of his burnt, 425. debate about the conſpirators againſt him, 426

William-Auguſtus, now Duke of Cumberland born, IV. 651

William's or Coehorn Fort, at Namur, III. 290

Williams, Sir William, his odd behaviour at the trial of the Lancaſhire Plotters, III. 266, 267. his ſpeech againſt the grant made to the E. of Portland, 312. was againſt ſigning the Aſſociation, 322

Williamſon, Captain, brings to England the news of the concluſion of the barrier-treaty, IV. 464

Wilks, Lieutenant-General, at the ſiege of Liſle, IV. 80. detached to ſecure Warneton, 133

Willoughby, Sir Thomas, created Baron Middleton, IV. 234

Wills, General, commands the garriſon of Lerida, IV. 11. marches to Tarragona, 12. ſerves in Spain, 177. taken priſoner at Brihuega, 180

Wills, John, now Lord Chief-Juſtice of the Common-Pleas, writes an anſwer againſt Hereditary Right, IV. 334

Wilmore, —— his paper againſt the Lieutenancy of London, III. 233. taken up for it, 234

Window-Tax; bill for it, IV. 525

Wincheſter, Charles Paulet Marquiſs of, made one of the Lords Juſtices of Ireland, III. 350

Wincheſter, William Finch E. of, made firſt Commiſſioner of Trade, IV. 219

Windſor, Captain Edward, diſmiſſed for neglect of duty, IV. 102

Windſor, Thomas Lord, made Lieutenant-General, IV. 192. created Baron Montjoy, 234

Wines, French, a new impoſt of 8 l. a tun upon them, III. 232. act for the importation of them into Scotland, 603

Winnington, Sir Francis, Chairman of a Committee, III. 225

Winter;

INDEX to the Continuation of the Hiſtory of England.

Winter; a ſevere one, IV. 93, 119

Wintoun, George Seaton E. of, takes arms for the Pretender, IV. 445. his character, 448. adviſes the Highlanders not to march into England, 454. goes off, but ſoon returns, however, he is never after called to any Council of War, 455. taken priſoner at Preſton, 459. committed to the Tower, 465. impeached, 482. condemned, 484. eſcapes out of the Tower, 501

Wirtemberg, Prince of, led the vanguard at the battle of Steenkirk, III. 208. his pay ſettled according to the Engliſh Eſtabliſhment, 226

Wirtemberg, Duchy of, laid under contributions by the French, IV. 14

Wirtemberg, D. of, taken priſoner by the French, III. 223. ſends K. William notice of K. James's being come to Calais, 319. commands the Daniſh troops, and was well-affected to the Allies, 745

Wiſmar taken by the Confederates, IV. 538

Wolfenbuttle, D. of, enters into the French intereſt, III. 367. levies troops for France, but is diſarmed, 504. forced to quit the K. of France's party, 558

Wolfenbuttle, Princeſs of, embraces Popery, and is married to K. Charles, afterwards Emperor, IV. 32

Wollin Iſland given to Pruſſia, IV. 615

Wood, Lieutenant-General, at the ſiege of Liſle, IV. 80. charges a party of French with two battalions only, 82

Wood, William, account of his half-pence, IV. 675

Woodſtock granted to the D. of Marlborough, III. 677

Woodward, Dr. made Dean of Sarum, III. 173. choſen Prolocutor, 530. dies, 531

Wool, act againſt the exportation of it, III. 371. reſolutions againſt the exporting it into Scotland, 675, 676

Woollen Manufacture; a bill for wearing it, III. 98. addreſſes againſt the woollen manufacture in Ireland, 376. woollen manufactures hurt by the treaty of commerce, IV. 315

Wratiſlaw, Count, preſents a memorial to Q. Anne, III. 653. waits upon the D. of Marlborough, and ſettles all things for his march, 654. adjuſts all differences between the Emperor and the K. of Sweden, IV. 19. comes to Francfort, and to the Hague, 21

Wright, Sir Nathan, made Lord-Keeper, III. 406. and one of the Lords Juſtices, 409. had put Juſtices of Peace in and out, 644. his character, ibid. compliments the D. of Marlborough, 676. diſmiſſed from his office, and is deſpiſed even by the Tories, his character, 716

Worms burnt by the French, III. 103

Wyndham, Sir William, ſpeaks in favour of the treaty of commerce, IV. 315. made Chancellor of the Exchequer, 328. and a Privy-Counſellor, 335. his ſpeech about the peace, 344. moves for the Schiſm-bill, 359. ſpeaks for it, 360, 363. is againſt an addition to an addreſs againſt the Pretender, 364. deſigned for one of the Commiſſioners of the Treaſury, 368. ſome move for making him Chairman of the Grand Committee of Subſidy, 396. his ſpeech about the arrears to the Hanover troops, 397. objects againſt the King's proclamation for calling a new Parliament, 419. reprimanded for it by the Speaker, 420. taken into the cuſtody of a meſſenger, 439. and committed to the Tower, 440, 497. diſcharged, and moves that Dr. Snape be appointed to preach before the Commons on K. Charles's Reſtoration, 536

Wynendale, battle of, IV. 84

Wynne, William, Bp. of St. Aſaph, ſupports the motion for an addreſs from Oxford, 516

X.

Xativa, the Engliſh retire thither, IV. 10

Y.

York, John Sharp Archbp. of, ſworn a Privy-Counſellor, IV. 105. ſpeaks in Dr. Sacheverel's behalf, 158. againſt Lay-Baptiſm, 255

Young, Robert, forms a plot againſt ſeveral perſons, III. 218

Young, William, his ſpeech for a Supply, IV. 525. made one of the Commiſſioners of the Treaſury, 679. his marriage with Mary Heathcoate diſſolved, 686

Yule Vacance, IV. 244

Z.

Zealand plundered by a body of French, IV. 276, &c.

Zell or Cell, George William D. of, made Knight of the Garter, III. 163. forces the D. of Wolfenbuttle to quit the intereſt of France, 558

Zeuta; the Turks defeated there, III. 363.

Zeiher; account of him, III. 669

Zinzendorf, Count, IV. 18, 22, 121. the Emperor's Plenipotentiary at the Hague, 127. has conferences with the Miniſters, ibid. and 128, 130, 165. 168. is one of the Emperor's Plenipotentiaries at the treaty of Utrecht, 248. demands the reſtitution of the whole Spaniſh Monarchy, 250. ſends expreſſes to the Emperor, upon the D. of Ormond's refuſing to fight, 260. his memorial to the States upon the peace, 276. propoſes a plan for the Empire, furniſhing four millions of crowns, 295. ſends Q. Anne's plan of peace to Vienna, 304. draws up ſome new propoſals for a negotiation between the Imperial and French Miniſters, 305, &c. communicates a ſecond plan of peace, 307. endeavours to have the ſigning of the treaty of Utrecht put off, 310. diſguſted at the offers of France, 311. inſiſts upon preſerving the privileges of the Catalans, 380. his letter to Mr. de Palms publiſhed, 704

Zober, Count, quarrels with Count Strahlenheim, IV. 17. delivered up to the K. of Sweden, 18. releaſed, 19

Zumjungen, General, employed in Sicily, IV. 590, &c. complaint againſt him, 593. his ſedate temper, ibid. goes and beſieges Meſſina, 595. has a Conference with Admiral Byng, 599. advances to Palermo, 601

Zuyleſtein, William Henry de Naſſau L. of, ſent by the Prince of Orange to K. James, III. 22, 23. made Maſter of the Robes, 41. goes along with King William to Holland, 164

FINIS.

MVSEVM
BRITAN
NICVM